THE MEMORIES OF AN INDIAN CHILDHOOD. These unique and genuine records of the mind of an Indian child are told precisely in her own words.
A second paper,
THE SCHOOL DAYS OF AN INDIAN GIRL, will describe her experiences as a pupil in the Government schools; while a third,
AN INDIAN TEACHER AMONG INDIANS, throws a good deal of light upon the vexed problem of Indian education.

FOREIGN LETTERS.

One of the distinctive features of The Atlantic for 1900 will be the appearance at regular intervals of Letters from England, France, and Germany. The first letter in the series will be A REVIEW OF ENGLAND IN 1899, by A. BRIMLEY JOHNSON in the January Atlantic. RECENT SOCIAL AND INDUSTRIAL CHANGES IN GERMANY will be commented upon in March by W. C. DREHER; and ALVAN F. SANBORN will write in the early Summer a letter entitled FRANCE BEFORE THE EXPOSITION.

FICTION.

One of the most important features of The Atlantic for 1900 will be the publication of a large number of short stories of the first quality. Conspicuous among these will be MAUD-EVELYN, by HENRY JAMES. The perfection of Mr. James's art and the delicacy of his psychological analysis have rarely been exhibited to better advantage than in this story, whose motive is a singularly fascinating phase of Spiritualism.

SPECIAL OFFER In order to introduce The Atlantic to a large circle of new readers, the publishers announce that on receipt of 50 cents the magazine will be sent on trial, for three months, to any person whose name does not now appear upon The Atlantic subscription list. Send for illustrated Prospectus and Coin Cards.

On all paid-up subscriptions received before December 20th, we will mail the November and December issues without charge.

New Publications

Through Unexplored Asia.

By William Jameson Reid, who is a member of the Royal Geographical Society of London, and who has spent several years in exploring China and Thibet. It is a stirring story of travel and exploration, and gives in the most careful manner an excellent idea of the habits of the various tribes of people met with, besides many interesting and instructive hitherto unknown facts about this great unexplored region. Illustrated with sixteen fine full-page half-tones from wash drawings by L. J. Bridgman. Also numerous text cuts, besides maps and plans of the country through which Mr. Reid passed. Royal 8vo, handsome cover design, gilt tops, $4.50.

Adventures in East Africa.

By M. French Sheldon. A stirring account of the adventures of a plucky American woman in the wilds of East Africa. Besides twenty-six full-page illustrations the book contains nearly 325 text cuts, and is bound in a handsome cover. Royal 8vo, gilt tops, $2.50.

John Ruskin, Social Reformer.

By J. A. Hobson. An excellent and most thorough expsition of John Ruskin's social teaching. 12mo, cloth, gilt tops, $1.50.

The main part of this book is devoted to a statement and a vindication of Mr. Ruskin's claim to have placed Political Economy upon a sounder scientific and ethical foundation than it had hitherto possessed, and to have built upon that foundation an ideal of a prosperous human society. The work is a valuable contribution to Ruskin literature and social science. It cannot fail to be of immense value not only to the sociological student, but also to those whose reading hours are limited, but who are seeking instruction on social questions.—A. W. Wishart, in Tom read Advertiser.

brick, and mortar of the past. Mr. Thomas Allen Glenn in "Some Colonial Mansions" presents the story of such families who have left their impress on the annals of our country. He gives a thorough study to those old houses, as they are discoverable in the Northern, Middle, and Southern States, and then follows the accounts of those who once dwelt in them. This volume is then comprehensive of its kind, for it has all to do with the society, the politics, the literature, the art, the costumes of our forefathers. It is not merely an architectural dissertation on windows or roofs or chimneys, but has a very much higher and more distinctive quality. The genealogical tables, which follow each chapter, add to the value of the work. The make-up of the volumes is excellent and the illustrations are of the very best.

A HISTORY OF ENGLISH ROMANTICISM, XVIII. CENTURY. By Prof. H. A. Beers. 12mo. Gilt top, laid paper. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $2.

Prof. Beers's work has already gone into a second edition, and its educational value is shown by its having been reprinted in England. The author's analyses of the great authors of the past and present show a broad and humanitarian feeling. The topics treated are "The Augustans," "The Spenserians," "The Landscape Poets," "The Miltonic Group," "The School of Warton," "The Gothic Revival," "Percy and the Ballads," "Ossian," "Thomas Chatterton," and "The German Tributary." There is no approach to pedantry in "A History of English Romance," though the erudition shown is conspicuous. Fully appreciative is Prof. Beers of the humorous, but then, too, he is at times all aglow, carried away by his fervor. Nevertheless, his judicial character is ever noticeable, and he is fearless in presenting what he deems all the blemishes. This work alone as one of reference is to be recommended, for it places American criticism on the highest plane.

A GENERAL SURVEY OF AMERICAN LITERATURE. By Mary Fisher. 12mo. Gilt top. Deckle edges. Chicago: A. C. McClurg & Co. $1.50.

Miss Fisher has read wisely, with proper critical acumen, and scarcely anything in American literature, from Channing to James, escapes her attention. Drawing information from many sources, the work presents a clear impression of the author's individuality, and so furnishes such biographical details as are often wanting. For educational purposes "A General Survey of American Literature" will meet all requirements.

LAVIGNAC'S MUSIC AND MUSICIANS. By Prof. Albert Lavignac of the Paris Conservatory. Edited for America by H. E. Krehbiel, and translated by William Marchant. With 94 illustrations and 510 examples in musical notation. Second edition. Pp. 504. 8vo. New York: Henry Holt & Co. $3.

Albert Lavignac of the Paris Conservatoire is not alone a musician of the highest repute, but is thoroughly grounded in the history of his art. This work is an exhaustive account of the manner of using the instruments of the orchestra. Harmony is treated, full attention is paid to musical coloring, and acoustics are not overlooked. "Music and Musicians" is a complete directory of musical literature, and is to be considered as one of the most important books on music yet published. Omitting nothing which would be of help to the musical student, M. Lavignac has the happy faculty of presenting his many topics in the most fascinating manner. The book is thoroughly indexed. The translation is excellent, and Mr. H. E. Krehbiel's editing gives additional value to the work.

HISTORIC MANSIONS AND HIGHWAYS AROUND BOSTON. By Samuel Adams Drake. 8vo. Boston: Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. $2.50.

So many have been the changes necessary and unnecessary in the landmarks and roads near Boston since Dr. Drake published his "Old Landmarks and Historic Fields of Middlesex" that this volume, in which all of its substance remaining valid is accompanied by much that is new, must replace it with those pilgrims who would not wander long, vainly seeking perished monuments of the past. Gone are the ruins of the Ursuline Convent; gone the house in which Gov. and Mme. Hancock received their guests; gone is Whitefield's elm, and gone many of those square Colonial mansions which long delighted the antiquary. Still much remains, and Dr. Drake tells his readers where to find it, and is assisted by twenty-one full-page plates and many smaller pictures in the text. His pleasantly discursive fashion of accumulating anecdotes of many periods and many persons about the ostensible subject of his discourse makes him one of the most suggestive and awakening of historical gossips, and the store of information here collected is wonderful in its variety.

MONTCALM AND WOLFE. By Francis Parkman. 2 vols. 8vo. Boston: Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. $6.

Dull blue, the faded blue of the royal regiments of France, with the English leopards romping on a field sown with the Bourbon lily, makes the livery of this holiday edition of a story that needs no embellishment, and has a catastrophe as sad and splendid as ever dawned upon the imagination of a Greek dramatist. From the title page of each of the two volumes looks the face of one of the heroes, Montcalm, inscrutably smiling; Wolfe, earnest and determined. And scattered along the reader's way are those who played in the drama of New France and those who, safe in Europe, pulled the strings to guide the puppets, or shifted the scene as pleased monarch, Minister, or favorite. Newcastle and de Choseuil, astute Franklin and Penn, De Levis, De Vaudreuil, and Dinwiddie, and as many more are pictured as they stand to-day on canvas. Sir William Johnson, Putnam, Carver, Boscawen, Loudon, Amherst, and another group appear in portraits taken from mezzotint, and to these are added Canadian views, battle scenes, a portrait of Parkman, and maps and battle plans—everything needed to illuminate the history of the seventeen years that left England dominant in the north.

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF LORD MACAULAY. Twenty volumes, large paper edition; limited to 500 copies. New York and Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $50.

It has long been fashionable to boast of not reading Macaulay, yet so many sets of him are bought annually that one suspects the boasters of occasionally turning from the justice and fairness and perfect impartiality, breadth, scope, and all the rest of it of some later writers, and enjoying a peaceful hour with the downright Baron, who first made up his own mind and then made up his reader's by pure force of style and conviction. Another proof that he is much read is the constant reappearance in British and American papers of infuriated Celtic gentlemen, who, having invested a shilling or half a dollar in a complete and entirely unrevised edition, thirst for the blood of one whom they write down Macauley. Still another is the appearance of this edition, which will reproduce the text of Lady Trevelyan's "Macaulay," with certain additions, written as "General Introduction," for the work, and also editorial notes for its several parts; the history, the critical and historical essays, the speeches and legal studies, the biographies and poems, the excursions in literature, and the letters. A bibliographical note, by Mr. W. Dawson Johnston, directs the reader to works later than Macaulay's and bearing on the same subject, and criticises his sources of information. Each volume will have five full-page plates, printed on Japanese paper, and the entire edition will be printed on antique laid paper, with deckle-edge, and the type used will be entirely new. The binding will be polished buckram, with paper label, or three-quarter French levant, the latter style doubling the price.

THE DUTCH AND QUAKER COLONIES IN AMERICA. By John Fiske. Boston: Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. 2 volumes. Crown 8vo. $4.

As London waited for the volumes of "Clarissa," so do American readers of history await from the bi-yearly appearance of Mr. Fiske's histories, their eagerness not in the least lessened by their foreknowledge of the catastrophe. They know that the two volumes will contain many details new to them; that those familiar in their mouths will be grouped in new ways, and that all will be so marshaled as to form an orderly whole, flattering them, as they master its arrangement, into the complacent belief that uncommonly good historians were spoiled when they took to pork packing, or hotel keeping, or electricity, the avocations of the modern men in a tub. This year New Netherland takes its place between Old Virginia and the "Beginnings of New England," completing the arch of English Colonial coast guards, and for the moment Cavalier and Puritan are forgotten, and nothing but Dutch and the "plain speech" seems truly attractive. The researches of the patriotic orders have paved the way for these two books, New York having been studied as minutely as New England, and those who have raised the question as to the existence of the Scotch-Irish have attracted attention to claims which Mr. Fiske sifts thoroughly, and the inserted maps are curious and valuable.

TWENTY FAMOUS NAVAL BATTLES. By Edward Kirk Rawson. Boston: Messrs. T. Y. Crowell & Co. 2 vols., 8vo. $4.

The two great American naval actions of 1898 have whetted the popular desire to read of battles on the sea, and Prof. Rawson's work is completed at a fortunate moment. It begins with "Salamis" and ends with "Santiago," and the choice of the eighteen intermediate actions has been dictated partly by picturesqueness, partly by the final importance of the battle, very seldom by the mere magnitude of the force engaged. Indeed, many of the actions are but combined assaults upon a single foe, and this might cause regret for the omission of the "Armstrong" fight, but for the presence of these later ones, in which there was glory enough for all. "Lissa" and the capture of the Hussar are less familiar to most readers than the duels between the Monitor and the Merrimac, the Kearsarge and the Alabama, and the Mobile Bay action, and one surmises that, had there been no Spanish-American war, the Japanese-Chinese struggle would have furnished the two closing chapters, as the only existing records of the use of modern weapons. As it is, the list runs: Actium, Lepanto, Gravelines, the fight of the Revenge, Dungeness, La Hogue, the capture of the Serapis, the Nile, the duels of the Foudroyant and Guillaume Tell, and of the Constitution and the Guerrière, and Lake Erie, and ends with the seven actions already mentioned.

CHILD LIFE IN COLONIAL DAYS. By Alice Morse Earle. Illustrated. 8vo. New York: The Macmillan Company. $2.50.

This is a companion volume to the author's "Home Life in Colonial Days." In the latter she described the manners and customs of our forefathers, while both text and illustration contribute to show the reader not only the dress of the people of that period, but their household furniture, kitchen, dining room, and sporting implements as well. In her new volume Miss Earle describes a particular phase of this Colonial life, that which concerns the life of children, the way in which they were brought up, how they were educated, and how they amused themselves, while, by the means of some hundred and fifty illustrations, the child's dress of the period is reproduced, together with specimens of toys and furniture which contributed to the life of the little one of the period just previous to the American Revolution. The whole work presents a complete and graphic picture of Colonial childhood, that cannot but form a valuable supplementary study for students of American history. At the same time it has much general interest, for child life of any period is interesting, but the interest is doubled when it concerns the formative influences of our own American ancestry.

BIOGRAPHY.

BROWNING, POET AND MAN. A SURVEY. By Elisabeth Luther Cary. Illustrated. Large 8vo. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $3.75.

The author of this volume has also written "Tennyson: His Homes, His Friends, and His Work," an effort which has received many appreciative reviews. In "Browning" the author treats of her subject even more intimately, and makes no attempt to add to the already large amount of criticism of the poet's art. She cannot, however, prevent the reader from being induced to regard the poet less in the light of a maker of problems and more in the light of a singer of human verse. Exactly what Miss Cary has attempted to do is, perhaps, best told in her preface: "In calling this book a 'survey' I have meant to indicate the absence of any attempt at throwing any light upon Browning's already strongly illuminated work. I have used the word in its literal sense to express my intention of merely 'looking over' the ground covered by his life and poetry, and the place the two seem to have occupied in the generation to which he belonged." Besides those sections of the book which may be said to deal exclusively with biographical and commentary matter, there are chapters devoted to "Browning Societies," "French Criticism," and "Illustrations to Browning's Poems." The text of Miss Cary's work is set off with twenty-five illustrations in photogravure, together with some text illustrations.

LIGHT AND SHADOWS OF A LONG EPISCOPATE, being Reminiscences and Recollections of the Right Rev. Henry Benjamin Whipple, Bishop of Minnesota. With portraits and illustrations. New York: The Macmillan Company. $5.

Bishop Whipple is a man of great energy, of "many parts," and blessed with the friendship of many prominent persons. The story of his career must therefore not only be of importance to the Church to which he belongs, but it must have a broad meaning for humanity at large. While the story of his labor among the Indians and his mission at Faribault cannot fail to be of great interest to students of the Indian problem, his broad observation of and his acquaintance with some of the foremost men of his times, and, moreover, his way of telling things, have a literary value of special importance. And, aside from the biographical, clerical, and historical value of the work, the idea is constantly borne in upon the reader that the Bishop knows a good story and knows how to repeat it. His pages are enlivened with anecdotes concerning such men as Lincoln, Sherman, Gladstone, Archbishop Tait of England, Mr. Walter of The London Times, and Dr. Evans of Paris. As might be expected, a lot of interesting letters is also included in the volume. One valuable feature, which is sometimes unfortunately omitted from biographies, is the index at the close of the volume, which contains a complete refer-

HOLIDAY BOOKS

A Delightful Series of Books

THE BEACON BIOGRAPHIES

BRIEF MEMOIRS OF EMINENT AMERICANS

Edited by M. A. DeWOLFE HOWE

The following volumes are now ready:

Phillips Brooks, by the Editor
John Brown, by Joseph Edgar Chamberlin
Aaron Burr, by Henry Childs Merwin
Frederick Douglass, by Charles W. Chesnutt
David G. Farragut, by James Barnes
Nathaniel Hawthorne, by Mrs. James T. Fields
Robert E. Lee, by W. P. Trent
James Russell Lowell, by Edward Everett Hale, Jr.
Thomas Paine, by Ellery Sedgwick

Sam Houston, by Sarah Barnwell Elliott
James Fenimore Cooper, by W. B. S. Clymer
Benjamin Franklin, by Lindsay Swift
Ulysses S. Grant, by Owen Wister
Alexander Hamilton, by James Schouler
Thomas Jefferson, by Thomas E. Watson

The Beacon Biographies were issued to meet what, in the opinion of the editor and the publishers, was a distinct need in American literature,—a series of brief, well-written, readable, and authoritative biographies of eminent Americans, to include, in the end, all whose lives were notably distinctive or typical.

In respect of manufacture, the publishers have tried to make a set of "little books" which should excel anything of the kind ever attempted in this country. Each volume measures 3¾ x 5½ inches, and is thus of a size to go handily into the pocket. The cover (in blind and gold on limp blue cloth) is by Mr. Bertram Grosvenor Goodhue, who has done also the standing title-page for the series, which has been engraved on copper. The frontispiece portrait which accompanies each is in photogravure. The paper has been selected with great care, and the type used is a new face specially cut.

The notices of the Beacon Biographies in the reviews have been complimentary to a high degree. Thus the Boston Herald says, "There is neither romanticism nor realism in the treatment: the effort is always toward the sanest, fairest, soundest reality." "As carefully prepared," says the New York Times, "as if they were so many imperial quartos." "The form of these little volumes," according to the Nation, "and the general tastefulness of the get-up are delectable." "They do more than languidly interest," says the Outlook, "they interest vividly; and their instruction is surprisingly comprehensive." The Churchman extends "a hearty welcome to this useful little series, which should bring many who shrink from attempting long volumes to a better knowledge of the men who have impressed their personality on the history of their country or the character of their countrymen."

Price, 75 cents a volume. $1.00 (net) in blue lambskin.

The Future of the American Negro

By Booker T. Washington. Price, $1.50

Mr. Washington has summed up in this volume his opinions on the problem of the best usefulness of the Negro in this country, particularly, of course, in the Southern States. Not the least admirable quality of this admirable book is the essential hopefulness of Mr. Washington's outlook. It is distinctly a volume which no one interested in the right solution of the greatest and most vital of American problems can afford to leave unread.

An Alphabet of Celebrities

Price, $1.50

Even Mr. Herford has done nothing quainter or more delightfully comic than this captivating series of drawings and verses. The book is beautifully printed in red and black, with borders and end-papers by Mr. Goodhue and Mr. Bird.

In Case of Need

By Ralph Bergengren. Price, $1.25

Mr. Bergengren's pictures are a new manifestation of the universal American humor.

Differences

By Hervey White. Price, $1.50

There has not been for years so notable a story of the relations between the rich and the poor, or ever, perhaps, so genuine and forceful a study of life in the Middle West. The New York Commercial Advertiser in a two-column review says of it:

"The book is a powerful one and intensely interesting.... John Wade is a creation in fiction. He is a splendid character in his simplicity and his truth.... The plot is boldly simple and full of genuine tragedy.... The marriage has in it all the solemnity that attaches itself to the inevitable fatal catastrophe of a great drama, and leaves the reader tormented with all the perplexities to which it gives no answer."

Taliesin

By Richard Hovey. Price, $1.00

The fourth volume in Mr. Hovey's remarkable series of poetic dramas on the Arthurian legend, entitled, as a whole, "Launcelot and Guenevere."

By Arthur J. Stringer. Price, $1.25

A book of stories about children, chiefly the little ragged urchins of the New York slums, which is quite unique in its sympathy and literary touch. Really good stories about children are rare, but Mr. Stringer's little book is likely to take its place in this limited but most delightful company.

Two Delightful Books

Child Verse

By John B. Tabb. Price, $1.00

A book of real poems for real children. All who know Father Tabb's previous volumes, indeed, may readily imagine the quality of this collection for the little ones. With a cover and pictures on the end-papers by Mr. Goodhue.

Little Beasts of Field and Wood

By William Everett Cram. Price, $1.25

A book about some of the commoner of the little beasts inhabiting the Northern States, illustrated by twenty-four notably accurate and interesting full-page drawings by the author. A volume which should immediately become standard in its class.

The Surface of Things

By Charles Waldstein. Price, $1.25

In the three stories which compose this volume Professor Waldstein has dealt most interestingly with a number of the problems and embarrassments of every-day social intercourse, and his book should make a very special appeal to all cultivated readers.

The True History of the Missouri Compromise and Its Repeal.

By Mrs. ARCHIBALD DIXON. 8vo, over 800 pages, uniform with recent editions of the works of Jefferson, Hamilton, etc. Net, $4.00.

"This volume tells the story of a great epoch and epoch-maker in American history. It appears peculiarly timely just at this crisis of our national development. Mrs. Dixon's book will appeal to the student of history, and as a contribution to the literature of a generation before the war will find place in our public and private libraries. As a depository of facts, passions, and sentiments of the past, and a vivid reflection of the spirit of the South in slavery days, it will be an invaluable record."—New York Times Saturday Review.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF SIR JOHN EVERETT MILLAIS. By his son John G. Millais. With 360 illustrations. Royal 8vo. Also in special edition limited to 200 copies. 2 volumes. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $10.

The authoritative biography of the late famous popular painter who died while President of the Royal Academy is presented in two magnificent volumes. The text and arrangement of the contents of the books are the work of the painter's son. Mr. Millais relates the story of his father's boyhood, of his early struggles, of the founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood. The account of this last memorable episode is now presented for the first time in strict accordance with the facts. The story is also told of the painting of many of Sir John's more famous pictures and the friendships that the artist formed in the artistic and literary worlds. The volumes include a large number of the artist's letters to his wife, describing the circumstances under which several pictures were painted. There are also letters from Queen Victoria, Lord Beaconsfield, Mr. Gladstone, Sir William V. Harcourt, Lord Rosebery, and Lord Leighton. Then, too, there are illustrated letters from Landseer, Leech, and Du Maurier. Not the least attractive feature of the work is the illustrations which have been reproduced with much care and discrimination in selection from Sir John's masterpieces and least familiar canvases. No more complete representation of the art of any painter has ever been produced on the same scale. The owners of Sir John Millais's most famous pictures have given their consent to their reproduction in his biography, and over 200 pictures and sketches which have never been reproduced before are shown in these pages.

THE TRUE WILLIAM PENN. By Sydney George Fisher. Illustrated. Crown 8vo. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. Cloth, $2; levant, $5.

Mr. Fisher's book on William Penn comes at a pertinent time, for it was on a certain November morning that the founder of Pennsylvania stood for the first time upon the site that was later to hold the modern "City of Brotherly Love," which Penn had laid out according to the plans of the ancient City of Babylon. The volume is the third of a series, which includes "The True George Washington," by Paul Leicester Ford, and "The True Benjamin Franklin," by Sydney George Fisher. As Mr. Fisher is a lawyer of Philadelphia, who has passed most of his life in that city, and has written extensively and ably concerning the institutions of his native State, his ability to give an authoritative and graphic picture of William Penn has not been questioned. In passing it may be said that the books of Messrs. Ford and Fisher are far removed from conventional biographies. The public had wearied of the old style of treatment, whether it contained a superabundance of hero worship or the opposite quality of inordinate iconoclasm. The distortion of a really great personality by either method is a thing of the past. What is now demanded is the simple truth, obtained from original sources. Concerning the life, character, and achievements of William Penn the book written by Mr. Fisher is said to supply this demand.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF LEWIS CARROLL. (The Rev. C. L. Dodgson.) By S. D. Collingwood. Illustrated. 8vo. New York: The Century Company. $2.50.

For years "Alice in Wonderland" and "Through the Looking Glass" interested readers, both young and old, and many interesting speculations were indulged in as to the identity of the author, who devised to hide himself behind the pseudonym of "Lewis Carroll." Almost until the time of his death he preserved an incognito that was not often penetrated. Few of the admirers of the above-mentioned books knew that the droll yet delicate author was C. L. Dodgson, an Oxford don, a man in holy orders, and the writer of several volumes on mathematics, the most scholarly of their day. There are many reasons, therefore, why the life of Lewis Carroll should appeal to a large world of readers, particularly as that life was so teeming with incident, records of which were preserved by Mr. Dodgson in diaries and letters. The biographer of Lewis Carroll is his nephew, Mr. S. Dodgson Collingwood, who has had abundant material to draw from, both regarding the text of the work and the illustrations, for Lewis Carroll was not only a clever photographer, but did excellent caricature work with his pencil as well. The volume by Mr. Collingwood consists for the most part of Lewis Carroll's letters to children, which are filled with the drollest nonsense.

THE MANY-SIDED FRANKLIN. By Paul Leicester Ford. Fully illustrated. 8vo. New York: The Century Company. $3.

As the title of Mr. Ford's volume implies it is no formal biography which the author presents, but a medley of vital papers on the great American—each complete in itself—concerning Franklin's family relations, his physique, his education, his religion, his relations with the fair sex, his experiments and discoveries as a scientist, and, above all, are given vivid and truthful pictures of his career as a writer and journalist, as a printer and publisher, and as a politician and diplomatist. Those who have read "The Many-Sided Franklin" say that the work shows the same careful and discriminating research that characterized the author's "The True George Washington." He has gathered his material through broad and special reading conducted principally in the extensive private library which he has the fortune to possess, and the result is a vivid and intimate account of the eminent philosopher and statesman who touched the life of the eighteenth century at so many different points and who found himself at home in so many phases of society, in America, England, and France. "The Many-Sided Franklin" is elaborately illustrated, the pictures being drawn from many particular and private sources. The text is most liberally interpolated with reproductions of rare manuscripts, portraits, houses, public buildings, and, in fact, everything that can go to emphasize the suggestive and inspiring text.

THE LETTERS OF ROBERT BROWNING AND ELIZABETH BARRETT. Two volumes, with portraits. 8vo. New York: Harper & Brothers.

The charming letters in these two attractively bound and well-printed volumes—typographically ranking among the Harpers' best work—make a very strong appeal to us all. For just as true as the fact that all the world loves a lover is the desire we all have to get at the man or woman behind the poet. It would usually be true that the letters exchanged between two lovers would be too personal, of too private a nature, to bear the strong light publication throws upon them. But in this instance such reading only brings us closer to the man and woman—the two unusual natures whom we have long loved as writers. Miss Barrett's invalidism, which dated from her fifteenth year, had made her a recluse, meeting only two or three people outside her own family. Both the poets had been mutually attracted by the poems of the other; such admiration leading to Browning's writing Miss Barrett an appreciative letter, which made her very happy. It must be remembered that in 1845 Miss Barrett was much the better known of the two, Browning appealing to a very limited audience. On the appearance of Elizabeth Barrett's 1844 volume of poems she was made very happy and proud that the author of her own favorite "Paracelsus" should not only admire them, but write and tell her so. After a number of letters had been exchanged Miss Barrett's cousin, Mr. Kenyon—whose subsequent bequest made the Brownings' circumstances so easy—brought about a meeting, and the acquaintance so formed rapidly developed into love. The letters written by these two poets are exquisite, and the world owes Barrett Browning a debt of gratitude for his courage in deciding to give them to us. The letters touch more or less upon literary matters, and especially upon their own work in literature, while the personal side of their courtship is so beautifully and delicately expressed that on our own account we are almost sorry the marriage occurred so soon. Miss Barrett's home life, the unfortunate attitude taken by her father, which necessitated a secret marriage, and the journey to Italy, are so set forth that we see it was the only solution possible. And had there been no opposition the world would have been the poorer for the loss of the most beautiful love letters in existence.

THE LETTERS OF ROBERT LOUIS STEVENSON TO HIS FAMILY AND FRIENDS. Selected and Edited, with Notes and Introductions. By Sidney Colvin. 2 Vols. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $5.

These two volumes of letters more than fulfill our highest anticipations, being, as they are, an intimate revelation of one of the greatest writers and most heroic natures of our generation. Never, it might seem, did a man's own character and intellectual aims so completely disclose themselves in letters as in the present instance. Mr. Sidney Colvin of the British Museum, a lifelong friend of Stevenson's, and his chief literary adviser and critic for at least twenty years, has performed his duty as editor in a superb fashion. The letters have just sufficient connecting narrative to weave them into a complete whole, and the introduction is a very fine piece of work. In the compass of about thirty pages, Mr. Colvin paints for us the picture of the friend who was so dear to him, not in partial fashion but as Stevenson actually revealed himself to his intimate friends; which virile portrait, taken in connection with the letters themselves—completely charming as they are—make the Stevenson letters one of the, if not the, most important

Browning: Poet and Man

A SURVEY. By Elisabeth Luther Cary.

With 25 photogravure illustrations, and some text cuts. Large 8vo, gilt top, $3.75.

As in the companion volume on Tennyson, so in this book, Miss Cary has shown excellent judgment and literary skill in the selection and arrangement of her material. Miss Cary urges that Browning's poetry is to be read like that of other poets, not as a task, but for pleasure. It is fair to say that her volume will win many a reader over to her view of the writings of one of the great poets of the nineteenth century.

By the same Author.

Tennyson: His Homes, His Friends

And His Work. With 18 photogravure illustrations. Large 8vo, $3.75.

"Here truly is a beautiful book—beautiful as to typography and binding, beautiful as to theme, beautiful in the reverence and affection with which that theme has been seized upon and elucidated. Miss Cary has garnered from a rich and varied field the essential and striking incidents in this great career."—N. Y. Times Saturday Review.

Some Colonial Homesteads

And Their Stories. By MARION HARLAND. With 87 illustrations. 8vo, $3.00.

"A notable book dealing with early American history. * * * The name of the author is a guarantee not only of the greatest possible accuracy as to facts, but of attractive treatment of themes absorbingly interesting."—Rochester Democrat.

Alnwick,	Cawdor Castle,
Penshurst,	Holland House,
Lyme,	Charlecote,
Battle Abbey,	Chatsworth,
Blenheim,	Belvoir Castle,
Hardwick,	Warwick Castle.

"The text in the present volume is extremely interesting, having been written either by the owners of the mansions described or by Mr. Malan himself, in every case the account including data derived from authentic sources. But the illustrations make an unusually urgent appeal for precedence. They are without exception the best ever published to give a general idea of those famous houses which are discussed in the book."—N. Y. Tribune.

Romance of the Feudal Chateaux

By ELIZABETH W. CHAMPNEY. With 40 photogravure and other illustrations. $3.50.

Mrs. Champney's volume does not give dry history, but romance. It is, of course, not possible to present all of the chateaux in one volume. The author has chosen only a few as typical: Angers, with its traditions of Roland and the peers of Charlemagne; Mont St. Michel, with souvenirs of Rollo and the Vikings; Caen and Falaise, which tell the story of William the Conqueror; Chinon, the cradle of the Plantagenets; Avignon, Carcassonne, Gaillard, and others.

American Historic Towns. Edited by Lyman P. Powell.

book of a year unusually strong in biography and letters. Powerful as is all Stevenson's work, and much as he reveals himself in it all, there is something in these letters which makes us confident that the man was far finer and more interesting than any of his works. Had Stevenson done nothing else in literature, the story of his brave fight against heavy odds, his perfect courage, and the noble sweetness of his character, as evidenced in these letters, would gain him admittance to the front rank to stand with Lamb and Fitz Gerald, whose personalities were also more charming even than their work. To those who already know and love their Stevenson, these letters will need no indorsement; while to all others the volumes will come as a complete revelation of one of the most charming, high-souled, sweetly whimsical, and courageous men of our day. The illustrations are most interesting, and the printing, by De Vinne, worthy of the book itself.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM MORRIS. By J. W. Mackail. 8vo. 2 vols. New York: Longmans, Green & Co. $7.50.

In two beautifully bound and most attractively printed volumes appears an interesting life of William Morris by Mr. J. W. Mackail, which will go far to make us familiar not only with the life of Morris, the man, but also with the history of the birth and development of an important movement in the arts and handicrafts, the far-reaching influence of which is hardly yet appreciated at its full value. The son of a wealthy family, a university man, and the centre of an interesting set at Oxford, many of whom —notably Burne-Jones—remained his close friends, and, in some instances, business associates also, the story of Morris's life is an unusually interesting one. Had William Morris been known to us only as the author of "The Earthly Paradise," and the man to whom we owe the Saga Library and his charming old romances, he would have made the world his debtor; but that is only one phase of his character, and it would be difficult to find another man who did so many things so well. Delightful as is his work in literature, our deepest debt is to the man who glorified handiwork in its application to all the arts and crafts. Few people realize just what Morris had to encounter—the difficulties that only a strong personality could hope to surmount, for it must be remembered that he had to educate his public as well as his workmen. What this struggle was—Morris's connection with Socialism, the establishment of the Kelmscott Press, as well as the Arts and Crafts Society, whose fifth exhibition is now going on in London—Mr. Mackail sets forth in volumes which typographically would have gone far to satisfy Morris himself. The book is well written, and no one can afford to remain ignorant of the life history of a man who exercised so potent an influence on his day and generation.

REMINISCENCES OF A VERY OLD MAN. 1808-1897. By John Sartain. Illustrated. 12mo. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $2.50.

For more than half a century John Sartain, painter, engraver, and editor, occupied a unique place in the artistic and literary circles of Philadelphia, if not of America at large. Owing to his ideas of the plastic arts, to his large acquaintance among the most prominent persons of his day whose genius had identified them with literature, with art, or with the stage, and withal owing to his charm of personality, the record of his life as told by himself will prove to many one of the most interesting, intimate, and vital documents of the day. He was born in London, where as a boy he witnessed the Peace Jubilee and learned to know many picturesque phases of the "Town" that have long since passed away. He studied under Varley and Richter, and learned the art of engraving at Ottley's school. He learned to paint; then, while the century was still young, he came to America. He had close relations with the Knickerbocker literary circle, and was the patron of Edgar Allan Poe for several years. As editor of Sartain's Union Magazine and other periodicals he introduced to the reading public a new school of literature which had in it the best elements that have come down to modern criticism and modern fiction. The illustrations of his "Reminiscences" include reproductions of rare old prints of London scenes in the first quarter of the century, together with American portraits and pictures which have a historical value, besides the worth that may be attached to them as being the work of the greatest artist-engraver of his time.

THE LIFE AND WORKS OF THE BRONTE SISTERS. In seven volumes. With a preface to each novel by Mrs. Humphry Ward. Annotations of Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Bronte," by Clement K. Shorter. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth, ornamental, uncut edges, and gilt tops. $1.75 per volume. "Jane Eyre" now ready. New York: Harper & Brothers.

For the initial volume of this series of the novels of the Brontë sisters the Messrs. Harper & Brothers present "Jane Eyre." To each of the novels Mrs. Humphry Ward has prepared a preface, with an appropriate introduction, and that leading authority, Mr. Clement K. Shorter has annotated Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Brontë." The edition is to consist of seven large volumes, made up in the same style and form as the recent biographical edition of Thackeray, now being published by the Messrs. Harper & Brothers. There has never been any cessation in the popularity of the Brontë novels. They have passed through countless editions, and they are still in eager demand. This series has been most carefully prepared, and leaves nothing to be desired. After "Jane Eyre" will follow "Villette," "The Professor," "Shirley," "Wuthering Heights," "The Tenant of Wildfell Hall," and Mrs. Gaskell's "Life of Charlotte Brontë."

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM MAKEPEACE THACKERAY. By Lewis Melville. With portraits and illustrations. Two volumes. Cloth. Gilt top. Chicago and New York: Herbert S. Stone & Co. $10.

There cannot be too many side lights thrown on the great novelist of the Victorian era. If Mrs. Ritchie, in the biographical notes as found in the recent edition of her father's works, is minute as to their writing, it might be that filial affection at times has made her gloss over what were the less amiable traits of William Makepeace Thackeray. Mr. Lewis Melville is an honest biographer. Thackeray was like any other man, for no one ever was absolutely perfect, but the flaws and weaknesses of his character only made him the more human. He know what were the dire experiences of life, otherwise he never could have described them. Occupying the position he did, he was subject to endless annoyances. Think only of the sad trouble which always shrouded his own fireside. If he laughed at times, there was a gnawing sorrow in his heart. Give him but the opportunity, and his spirits rose and he tried to forget. Was it, after all, an easy existence? His ultimate success had for foundation any number of literary mishaps. Mr. Melville shows how Thackeray's true heart was full of love for his fellows, and above all his delight in children. He was lordly in his generosity and cunning in the concealing of it.

THE MEMOIRS OF VICTOR HUGO. With a preface by his Literary Executor, Paul Meurice. Translated by John W. Harding. New York: G. W. Dillingham Company. 8vo. Photogravure portrait. Cloth. Gilt top. $2.50.

"The Memoirs of Victor Hugo" is the most recent contribution to the general literary movement of the nineteenth century. It was Victor Hugo who first threw down the gauntlet and defied ancient classicism. These memoirs date back to 1825. Five years after this Hugo produced "Hernani." This drama, received with ridicule at the time, has from its inherent power gained its proper position on the French stage, and is deemed among the classics of the Comédie Française. Always among the foremost in France, having become the most popular of French authors, his romances and his poems having been read not only in the country of their origin, but all over the world, Victor Hugo was a politician. He had a numerous following. In these memoirs he gives sketches of MM. Thiers, Odilon Barrot, Blanqui, and others. Interviews with Louis Philippe are amusingly told. Louis Napoleon's début, his Presidency, the Coup d'Etat, are all vividly described. Hugo gives the stirring scenes of the revolution of 1848 and the siege of Paris in 1871. There is in the volume matter which is novel, as the details of the execution of Louis XVI. and the coming of Napoleon to Paris in 1815, as recounted to Victor Hugo by an eye witness. This work, written by the master's literary executor, has been carefully and elegantly translated by Mr. John W. Harding.

RECOLLECTIONS OF AN OLD MUSICIAN. By Thomas Ryan of the Mendelssohn Quintet Club, Boston. Large 12mo. 46 portraits. Gilt top. $2.20. New York: E. P. Dutton & Co.

Without any jealousies, musical or otherwise, why should not we accept Mr. Thomas Ryan's "Recollections" as a fair exemplar of what was music in a city, say, a half century or more ago? Certainly both Philadelphia and Boston were in advance as far as music was concerned, for musical culture was more general there than in New York. Boston always was appreciative and fortunate in having secured a remarkably good orchestra, the Germania. The seeds were planted then, they grew, and we know of the results to-day, a special Boston instrumentation, which we listen to and applaud. Mr. Thomas Ryan gives his personal experiences, and he presents a history of music and musicians during a period of over half a century.

FAMOUS ACTRESSES OF THE DAY. By Lewis C. Strang. Boston: Messrs. L. C. Page & Co. 12mo. $1.50.

As a rule the biography of a living actress is a vain thing. The shadow of the advance agent lies heavily upon it, blurring its outlines and giving it cloudlike vagueness, and his phrases, worn into the author's mind by his overmuch speaking, weave themselves into the fabric of the work and annoy the reader who prefers his puffs and his literature in separate portions. Mr. Strang has escaped this blight, and writes with refreshing definiteness and independence, expressing his opinions vigorously and clearly, and giving his criticism a larger basis than mere impersonation, builds it upon character, environment, and development. In consequence, the work is useful to all lovers of the drama, even to those not especially interested in the actresses whom he has chosen as representative. The volume is illustrated with two portraits of Miss Adams, Miss Marlowe, and Miss Arthur, and one of Mrs. Le Moyne, Mrs. Fiske, Miss Elliott, Miss Harned, Miss Burroughs, Miss Robson, Miss Rehan, Miss Nethersole, Miss Allen, Mrs. Carter, Miss Shannon, Miss Lawrence, Miss Bates, Miss De Wolfe, Miss Walsh, Miss Annie Russell, Miss Blanche Bates, Miss Irving, and a few others, nearly all in character. Most of the pictures are halftones, but a few are photogravures, and as those giving excellent likenesses have been chosen, the work will have increasing value with increasing age.

THE ART LIFE OF WILLIAM MORRIS HUNT. By Helen M. Knowlton. Boston: Messrs. Little, Brown & Co. 8vo. $3.

The artist should be a critic, both of nature and of human nature, but so rarely does he combine the two qualities, so rarely does he display even one of them, that one who like Hunt has both almost inevitably dwells somewhat apart, and is truly known only to the choice few possessing something of his own quality. So much the greater the necessity for such a biography as Miss Knowlton's, which shows the peculiar quality of Hunt's genius and the wise self-restraint which forbade him to undertake tasks not in consonance with its best qualities, howsoever meritorious in themselves. The author knew him as a pupil comes to know a master, by feeling the elevating power of his influence, and also as a teacher knows a colleague, by seeing him reflected in other minds, and she has succeeded in making him very real, and in making her readers sympathize with her resentment of the fate that deprived him of more general recognition, even while thankful for the existence of one too fine for unanimous commendation. The volume is illustrated with photogravures and halftones of portraits and of special works, including some of the designs that for a few brief years shone in the Albany Assembly chamber and are now forever perished.

BEACON BIOGRAPHIES. Nathaniel Hawthorne, by Mrs. James T. Fields; Aaron Burr, by Henry Childs Merwin; Frederick Douglass, by Charles W. Chesnutt; John Brown, by Joseph Edgar Chamberlin; Edwin Booth, by Charles Townsend Copeland. Boston: Messrs. Small, Maynard & Co.

The impossibility of "keeping it up," discerned by some of those who examined the first group of these "Beacon Biographies," has not yet appeared as their successors come from the press. They are still as excellent in mechanical execution, still edited as minutely in detail, but with an eye as just for proportion as were the earlier volumes. They have been so extensively purchased that it seems superfluous to describe their slate-blue covers designed by Mr. Goodhue, their engraved title pages, and their portraits in photogravure, luxuries generally reserved for their giant brethren of the lower shelves, and not bestowed on pigmies of which a whole library may be stored in a pigeonhole. These outward graces and the inner virtues of a condensed life story, accompanied by bibliography chosen with judicious care and a chronological table as full as any reasonable being can ask, make them more desirable than the larger biographies, and many of them have no rivals but are the only Richmonds in the field.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL AND HIS FRIENDS. By Edward Everett Hale. D. D. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. One volume. 8vo.

Long ago, according to the testimony of her sons, Cambridge was Arcadia, and James Russell Lowell lived there with other Arcadians, all clever, none rich, and all happy. Boston, also, according to filial evidence, was Arcadia, and therein dwelt Nathan Hale, who died too young to be all himself, and the two were friends. About them were grouped the flower of Harvard, of the Unitarian denomination, and of the beautiful womanly women of the time, and there was hardly one in the group to whom the years did not bring fame. If the most came to the youth whose rosy cheeks and insignificant stature made him seem more boyish than the others, it came later, and after he had written things which if now published for the first time would make him the idol of all who read the tongue, which would be perceptibly poorer without "Sir Launfal," the "Commemoration Ode," and the "Biglow Papers." The story of his days, his hosts, his guests, his correspondents, reads like a roll call of the worthies of his time, and Dr. Hale knows good things of all of them and tells them with enthusiastic love. The younger generation, that which gave its better half for the Union, also comes into the story, and its portraits look out from the pages, similar in type, but with a new look in the faces formed in more stirring times. Either as a treasury of anecdote or as a view of New England literary development this is one of the best books of the last ten years.

AMERICAN STATESMEN SERIES. Edited by John T. Morse, Jr. New York and Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. Thirty-two volumes. 12mo. $1.50.

As detached volumes purchasable singly or in pairs, according to the elaboration with which the subject is treated, this set is well known, but the subscription edition, in which the twenty-eight biographies are so arranged as to form a political history of the Republic, and are bound into a coherent whole by a general index, now takes shape for the first time. The books are to be printed from new plates, on especially manufactured paper, and are to be bound in olive green instead of the dark blue of the old series, or in scarlet half morocco or green half levant, and are to have the gilt tops and rough edges of ordinary library editions. The lives of Washington, Clay, and Lincoln will extend to two volumes, and the topical index will fill the entire thirty-second volume. Each volume will contain four portraits and one or two other pictures, and each will have its engraved title page. So much for external attributes. The distinguishing merit of the series is that the proportions of each biography have been determined by its relation to National history, with no intention of making the hero especially attractive for his own sake, and the men chosen have been those whose life work made a continuous whole.

REMINISCENCES, 1819-1899. By Julia Ward Howe. 12mo. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.50.

If not exactly a "Queen's twin," Mrs. Howe is so near being Queen Victoria's precise contemporary that the autobiographies of the two reflect their countries at similar periods, and may, in future years, be paired, as far as the individual element is concerned. Even in domestic politics, the two careers have some resemblance, Mrs. Howe having possessed far more influence than the average woman, and having interested herself in three of the great public questions of her time, so that from the pictures of life in lesser New York of two generations ago, from the ever-interesting gossip of little things, she turns to talk of statesmen and orators, and preservers of the Republic. The book is illustrated with family portraits and groups and with reproductions of uncommon photographs of the men and women with whom Mrs. Howe has been associated. Nearly all are agitators of one sort or another, and yet the prevailing expression which the sun has found in their faces is that of beautiful kindness, a rather surprising result to come from the camera. The portraits of the author herself are very interesting, especially the one in which she appears with her brothers.

POETRY AND ESSAYS.

LAUS VENERIS. Poems and Ballads. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Printed on Van Gelder hand-made paper and the type distributed. 450 copies only. Portland, Me.: Thomas B. Mosher.

Sometimes there are returns to the older way of doing things. The eye becomes tired with absolute uniformity. The chemist attached to the silk factory is so proficient that every inch of his stuff is of the same precise shade. There are no happy accidents of color. There is monotony of tint. The brand-new is garish at times. You do not want inaccuracies nor blundering in form, material, or finish, but yet excessive gloss, even polish, and the finishing processes dull expectations. The prospectus of the machine announces that it will turn out a thousand nails or corkscrews to the hour, and every one precisely alike. Admirable is it for the turning out of the parts of a revolver. Excellent, too, are the printing press and the composing machine which work against time and so turn out newspapers or books by the million. Now Mr. Thomas B. Mosher of Portland, Me., does not want to load a freight car every day in the week with the books he publishes. He is satisfied with a very much smaller turnout. He cares most for the typographical qualities. As handsome a volume as ever was made is Mr. Mosher's "Laus Veneris. Poems and Ballads. By Algernon Charles Swinburne." How carefully selected has been the paper, and how grandly printed are the pages! Then there are rare illustrations in the volume, among them Rossetti's portrait of the poet and Sandys's print of Cleopatra. No criticism on Swinburne is necessary here, though it is good to learn that so far back as 1866 our own Richard Grant White was the first American who understood and lauded the poet. In the volume may be found a valuable bibliography, and to make it a work of reference, there is an appendix.

POEMS OF CABIN AND FIELD. By Paul Laurence Dunbar. Illustrated. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.

For this new volume of Mr. Dunbar's verse illustrations have been made by the Hampton Camera Club. The decorations are the work of Alice C. Morse. Mr. Dunbar, who, at the time of his début in literature was called the "negro boy poet," has gained the ear of a constantly growing reading public. Since the appearance of his initial work he has published a volume of short stories and one complete novel, all of which have attracted considerable attention. It is no longer said that Mr. Dunbar's success rests solely upon the fact of the accident of race. All of the poems in the negro dialect in the volume are illustrated in a striking and sympathetic manner. Like the verses to which they lend emphasis, they give evidence of a delicate appreciation of nature and character together with a sense of humor that is seldom found in similar work from any source.

MY STUDY FIRE. By Hamilton W. Mabie. Illustrated. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $2.50.

Persons who recall with pleasure Mr. Mabie's "The Forest of Arden," with illustrations by Will H. Low, published last year, cannot fail to become enthusiastic over another book of contemplative literature that has just come from the pen of the same author. This is "My Study Fire." This book has also been pictured in a different yet equally charming way, the artists being Maude and Genevieve Cowles. For some time drawings signed by these artists have appeared in the large magazines, and they have excited considerable comment because of their fine feeling for nature and character and a delicate imagination made evident. The illustrations that these artists made for "The House of Seven Gables," published a year ago, may possibly be remembered. And it will thus be realized that they possess distinctive qualities for Mr. Mabie's particular kind of work. "My Study Fire" is certainly ranked among the unique and prominent illustrated specimens of belles lettres of the season.

FISHERMAN'S LUCK AND SOME OTHER UNCERTAIN THINGS. By Henry Van Dyke. 8vo. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $2.

Dr. Van Dyke's charmingly discursive style makes us eagerly welcome a new volume of essays from his pen. Every paper in the book, which takes its name from the first essay in the volume, is delightfully fresh and woodsy. Dr. Van Dyke is a born angler, and really lives the episodes he voices for us so delightfully. Even those of us who know nothing practically of the joy of the angler will gladly follow Dr. Van Dyke through "the thrilling moment" when he is engrossed in landing the ouananiche, "that prize of the season," and perhaps fully share his own perplexity as to just when the thrilling moment really was; whether when the angler himself barely escaped a watery grave; when the fish rose; when the net broke, or when the fish was finally captured. Or, perhaps, we gladly follow our angler when he discourses of "a lazy, idle brook," or of "lovers and landscape," or of "fishing in books," almost agreeing—albeit no fisherman—with Sir Henry Wotton in preferring to "rather live five May months than forty Decembers." "Fishing in Books" is one of the most attractive essays in a very charming book—as is the chapter on the various sorts of fires in the open; those for cooking; for protection from mosquitoes, and friendship fires, with full descriptions how each is to be built. The whole book, in fact, is charmingly written and beautifully illustrated. The most attractive among the pictures are those of "My Lady Gray Gown—An Encourager of Indolence," to whom the book is dedicated, and "The Little Friendship Fire," showing the wooded, rocky bank of a lake or stream, with a small, bright fire for ornament and company mainly, and beside it a seated figure reading, the latter being easily recognized as an attractive portrait of Dr. Van Dyke himself.

MEDITATIONS OF MARCUS AURELIUS. Translated by Benjamin E. Smith. (Thumb-Nail Series.) New York: The Century Company. $1.00.

There have been few translations of either the Greek works or the Latin epistles of that remarkable Roman Emperor of the second century, Antoninus, more generally known as Marcus Aurelius. Nevertheless, at all time his "Meditations" has been regarded as a classic and the work has been frequently cited by both churchmen and doctors of philosophy. Everything goes to show that he was a broad-minded man, far in advance of his times. His philosophy shows that he was a Stoic, yet on the occasion of his visit to Athens we find him founding an institution at which all the schools of philosophy were made welcome. The same liberality of thought is emphasized by his dealings with the rebels who sought to overthrow a Roman province. Benjamin E. Smith has prepared a new translation from the Greek of the "Meditations" which is presented in the Century Company's Thumb-Nail Series. For it the most interesting and characteristic passages of the Emperor's work have been selected. The translator's aim has been to make an English version of these gems of Latin thought originally presented through the medium of classic Greek, that shall be exact, yet clear and easily readable. A brief introduction emphasizes the value of the "Meditations." For frontispiece a Roman coin of the period of Antoninus is reproduced in tint.

HARPER & BROTHERS, Publishers, New York & London

PHILOBIBLON. By Richard de Bury. 1 vol. small quarto. New York: Meyer Brothers & Co. $2.50. Special edition on Japan paper, $7.50.

Was not the love of books always an engaging topic? Richard de Bury wrote his Philobiblon as far back as 1344, and it was first printed in Latin at Cologne in 1473, and it is the earliest of treaties of a man enamored of his books. De Bury's devotion never ceased. It grew on what it fed, for books were meat and drink to the old scholar. And so the Philobiblon is a record of his life, and for centuries this volume has been the solace of all modern book collectors, and Richard De Bury takes on the guise of the patron saint of bibliomaniacs. The quaint old style of the book, the pleasant ways of the man, his gossip, still give us pleasure. It may be bookish, it is true, but then there are many side lights thrown on a plodder of a long past age. The Philobiblon has been printed in English before, and the Grolier Club prides itself on an edition of theirs issued some ten years ago. Messrs. Meyer Brothers & Co. announce this volume as an initial one of a series of book-lover's classics, and it is to be produced in fine style. The editor is Mr. Charles Orr, who will furnish an introduction and carefully prepared bibliographical notes. In addition to the regular there will be one de luxe edition printed on Japan paper.

AUCASSIN AND NICOLETTE. Rendered into Modern French by Alexandre Bida, into English by A. Rodney MacKonochie. With a preface by Gaston Paris, and Prefatory Note by Edmund C. Stedman. Illustrated by Alexandre Bida, Mary Hallock Foote, W. Hamilton Gibson, and Frederick Dielman. Handy size, delicate binding, flexible cloth, gilt top, $1. New York: Fords, Howard & Hulbert.

This is the idyllic song story of the troubadours, and, as Mr. E. C. Stedman calls it, the "pearl of mediæval literature." The old chante-fable is found here in its most charming guise. The poetical conception in the age "Aucassin and Nicolette" was written eschewed overfloridity and was plain, simple, and natural, though abounding with curious turns of thought. Gayely predominated. This publication leaves nothing to be desired, being, as far as make-up goes, in exact keeping with the subject.

IN FRIENDSHIP'S NAME. Compiled by Volney Streamer. 12mo, uncut, pliable parchment covers. Boxed. New York: Brentano's. $1.25.

WHAT MAKES A FRIEND. By Volney Streamer. New York: Brentano's.

These two volumes are compilations, edited by Volney Streamer. In each of the works has been arranged the choicest collection of verse and prose culled from the writings of English and American authors. There are extracts from Tennyson and the poetic prose of Phillips Brooks. These two volumes, perfect in print and paper, present in the best form the opinions, sentiments, of the poets, humorists, and philosophers of what is true friendship and the choice of a friend.

BACKLOG STUDIES. By Charles Dudley Warner. 12mo. Boston: Messrs. Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $2.00.

Mr. Garrett has made the twelve pictures for this book in firelight, in the glow that fades until light and shadow are one, and yet is not all darkness, and they are more faithful to the fire than the text itself, for Mr. Warner's daylight vision remains with him at all times, and he sees things as they are, even in the glimmer of the red coals. Turning from the pictures to the chapter-heads, all New England's quaintness looks out and laughs, and prepares one for the sly quips, the abounding common sense, the perfect honesty of the text. These pages were written before Mr. Warner's positive genius for fence had been revealed in the opening numbers of his "Editor's Study" in Harper's Magazine, but in them, even practicing against a viewless antagonist, he shows himself a master of thrust and guard, and above all, of himself. No writer of his time is more perfectly poised than this journalist, who proudly refrains from bending or swerving that he may be more clearly, more justly, seen; who is silent when speech would bring sympathy, yet is never afraid to be unimpersonally severe on wrong or defensive of right. The fun of "Elizabeth and Her German Garden" seems but the echo of his to those who remember "My Summer in a Garden," and Mr. Kenneth Grahame's firelight thoughts are whispered in these "studies."

FOR LOVE'S SWEET SAKE. By G. Hembert Westley. Boston: Lee & Shepard. $1.50.

Morning, noon, evening, and night are the divisions which Mr. Westley makes of the verses grouped in this book, and as there are nearly 250 selections, and as he was able to use many copyright pieces, his good taste in grouping them had room and verge enough for its exercise. Full-page pictures, headings, and tail pieces of special design, each fitted to its place, a pretty cover in ivory, blue, and gold, and clear type used on excellent opaque paper are the superficial beauties of the book. Its deeper good qualities are its arrangement according to a dominant idea, and its careful avoidance of authors of the "advanced" school, to which nothing is sacred. No gift could better hint a young lover's thoughts to their object and none could more surely secure him a favorable hearing than this collection. The author, whose verses are well known to readers of THE TIMES, has wisely adorned his pages with a few of them, and has dedicated his work to "My dear friend, Aimée."

DRAWINGS AND OTHER ILLUSTRATIONS.

THE EDUCATION OF MR. PIPP. By C. D. Gibson. Large folio. New York: R. H. Russell. $5, $10, and $25, according to edition.

"The Education of Mr. Pipp" is presented uniform with other Gibson folios of drawings published by R. H. Russell. The new collection has been specially prepared for the holiday season of 1899-1900, and includes the complete series of the Pipp drawings, showing the well-known artist's sense of beauty, mingled with his appreciation of the ludicrous; for, thrown into strong contrast with his figures of shapely and well-poised society women, are the studies of the funny, indomitable Pipp. As has been said, the book is presented uniform with its predecessors—"Drawings by C. D. Gibson," "Pictures of People," and "Sketches and Cartoons"—to which it is a worthy successor. But it is more than the pictorial story of Pipp, as is already known to the public, for there are included forty hitherto unpublished drawings. The work is presented in three editions, all of which, however, are in large folio form, 12 by 18 inches. The first is bound in Japan vellum with white vellum back. The cover is decorated with a drawing of Miss Pipp holding the portrait of her father. Then there is an edition de luxe, limited to 250 impressions, each copy being numbered and signed by Mr. Gibson, and including a signed artist's proof on Japan paper. The third edition is made up of 100 signed and numbered copies of the first impressions, together with a handsome signed portfolio, containing twenty-five artist's proofs of the best of the sketches on Japan paper.

SKETCHES IN EGYPT. By Charles Dana Gibson. In two editions. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. $3, and in edition de luxe form $10.

Mr. Gibson's written impressions of Egypt, accompanied with the pictures of life in the Valley of the Nile, have a particular interest at this time, now that the land of the Pharaohs is being rapidly restored to civilization. As the artist-author humorously remarks, "Egypt has sat for her likeness longer than any other country." He then proceeds to give a series of pictured phases of that likeness. His drawings, like all that fall from his pen, are full of reality and suggestiveness, and, reinforced by his written impressions, present an interesting record of an artist's journey through the Nile Valley. Mr. Gibson gives us the actual and present Egypt from an entirely new point of view. The publishers have spared no pains to present an adequate setting for Mr. Gibson's pictures and text. Besides the regular issue, there is an edition de luxe, which comprises 250 signed and numbered copies, each accompanied by a portfolio containing art proofs of ten of the more important pictures, on Japan silk tissue and mounted on plate paper, suitable for framing.

This work may be considered as a companion volume to the author's "Turrets, Towers, and Temples." Like the latter, it is the working out of a new idea admirably conceived. In "Great Pictures Described by Great Writers" Miss Singleton shows in reproduction fifty or sixty masterpieces of painting, together with descriptions of these paintings by masters of literature or of the art of criticism. Among the pictures presented and the descriptions given may be mentioned Raphael's "Sistine Madonna," described by Hans Andersen; Botticelli's "Birth of Venus," described by Walter Pater; Guido's "Portrait of Beatrice Cenci," described by Shelley; Rubens's "Descent from the Cross," described by Sir Joshua Reynolds; Tintoret's "Paradise," described by John Ruskin, and Paul Potter's "Bull," described by Thackeray.

LIFE AND CHARACTER. A Collection of Fifty Drawings by W. T. Smedley. Accompanying Text by A. V. S. Anthony. With Portrait, Frontispiece, and Biographical Sketch of Mr. Smedley by Arthur Hoeber. About 116 pp. Quarto, cloth, ornamental. $6. New York: Harper & Brothers.

Will not Mr. W. T. Smedley go down to posterity as the true illustrator of the costumes of the close of the present century? The ground he has covered is of the widest. He has not restricted himself to the elegance of the reigning beauty of the drawing room, but also to the man or woman of the street. It had been long held that the costume of the moment had no place in art. Ruffles, wigs, flowing cravats, small clothes, buckles or shoes, added supposably to the dignity of the man. Mr. Smedley has shown that this was a fallacy. He has by means of his art made us even acknowledge the influence of the high silk hat. We have accepted all the picturesque possibilities of woman's attire. Mr. Smedley has the gift of composition, for in his pictures no one poses. His men and women do not strut. People on Fifth Avenue meet one another. The man, correct in dress, bows to the passing lady, and the two interchange a word of courteous greeting. This very handsome volume, with its clear printing of the Smedley pictures, has for textmaker Mr. A. V. S. Anthony, and Mr. Arthur Hoeber presents a biographical sketch of the artist.

THE NATIONAL GALLERY. Edited by Sir Edward J. Poynter, P. R. A. In three volumes. Large octavo. New York: Cassell & Co., Limited. $35.

This beautiful work, illustrating every picture in the National Gallery, is limited to 1,000 copies, only 250 of which are to come to the United States. Vols. I. and II. are now on their way to this country. They deal with the old masters of the foreign schools, specimens of whose work are found in the Gallery. The third and concluding volume, which will be published in the Autumn of 1900, deals with the British masters and modern schools, including the pictures at the National Gallery of British Art, (Tate Gallery.) The editor of the work is the Director of the National Gallery and President of the Royal Academy; its presentation has been undertaken at the suggestion of the Trustees of the National Gallery. It is intended to be a complete illustrated catalogue of the whole of the paintings in the Gallery. Besides carefully supervising the arrangement of the work, Sir Edward Poynter has written an introduction and such notes as are additional to the descriptions of the official catalogue which present his personal views on the characteristics and authenticity of some of the principal pictures in this national collection. The photographing of the paintings was made under the special supervision of Mr. Edwin Bale, R. I. A fine plate paper has been specially manufactured for the work, which will contain about 1,000 pages and between 1,300 and 1,400 illustrations.

THE MADONNA IN LEGEND AND HISTORY. By Mrs. Elizabeth C. Vincent. Illustrated with ten reproductions of famous pictures of the life of the Virgin Mary. Small quarto, white and gold binding. New York: Thomas Whittaker. $1.50.

The Bible story of Mary, the most sacred, the most beautiful of all the legendary lore of Christianity, is the topic of Mrs. Elizabeth C. Vincent's volume. Infinite are the sources whence the author has collected her materials. The piety of ages has cherished and embellished the Madonna, and she has been a source of devout inspiration for the greatest of painters, and the volume gives fine reproductions of the noted pictures. "The Madonna in Legend and History" is particularly appropriate for the coming Christmas.

The thirty-three full-page pictures illustrating this small volume are after the pictures of celebrated masters, and most of them are well reproduced. Mrs. Clement's researches have brought many interesting works to light, and although the vast nature of her subject forbids her to treat it exhaustively, she has made judicious choice of the best presentations of the noblest persons, preferring the great saints belonging to the whole world rather than those whose fame is peculiar to small districts. The book is equally useful to the lover of art, to the pious, and to the traveler in Christian countries, although its ornamented cover hardly suggests the guide book.

FOR THEE ALONE. By Grace Hartshorne. 12mo. Boston: Messrs. Dana Estes & Co. $1.50.

The sixteen pictures illustrating this volume are so many titles to admiration, for each is a reproduction of a painting well known but not yet hackneyed in an engraved form. They are "Love's Whispers," by Mr. Norman Prescott Davies; "The Reconciliation" and "A Shady Nook," by Signor F. Andreotti; "Waiting," by Mr. W. Menzler; "Woodland Vows," by Mr. Robert Beyschlag; "Pense-t-il a moi," by Mr. G. Papperitz; "Expectation," by Becker; "In Love," by Mr. Marcus Stone; "A Messenger of Love," by N. Sichel; "A Silent Confession" and "Of Thee I'm Thinking," by Signor Tito Conti; "Fond Recollections," by E. Niczsky; "At the Shrine of Venus," by Mr. Alma-Tadema; "La Fiancée," by M. Edouard Bisson; "Dolce Far Niente," by L. C. Nightingale, and "A Love Song," by Sonderland. All are full-page "half-tones" of uncommonly good quality, and would make a commonplace collection of verse attractive, but this is very far from commonplace, being so judiciously planned that it may serve either Phyllis or Strephon as a gift, and will be equally acceptable to Strephon or to Phyllis.

New Publications.

"The demand is not for more books, but better books," says The Independent, and to make these better books has been our aim.

A REVOLUTIONARY MAID.
A STORY OF THE MIDDLE PERIOD OF THE WAR FOR INDEPENDENCE. By AMY E. BLANCHARD. 321 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

Kitty De Witt, the heroine of the story, has the fortune (good or bad) of living on Bowery Lane, New York, when the "Liberty Boys" sailed down the statue of George the Third on Bowling Green. This act of the New York patriots obliged Kitty to decide whether she would be a Tory or a Revolutionary Maid, and a patriot good and true she became.

THE GOLDEN TALISMAN.
By H. PHELPS WHITMARSH. Author of "The World's Rough Hand." 300 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

The narrative is based upon the adventures of a young Persian noble, who, being forced to leave his own country, leads an army against the mysterious mountain kingdom of Kaffiria. Though defeated and taken prisoner by the enemy, the hero's talisman saves his life, and later leads him into kingly favor.

WITH PERRY ON LAKE ERIE.
A TALE OF 1812. By JAMES OTIS. 307 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

"The story carries the reader from March until October of 1813, being laid on Lake Erie, detailing the work of the gallant Perry, who, at the time of his famous naval victory, was but twenty-seven years of age.

"From the time the keels of the vessels which became famous were laid until the victory was won which made Perry's name imperishable, the reader is kept in close touch with all that concerned Perry."

WHEAT AND HUCKLEBERRIES.
DR. NORTHMORE'S DAUGHTERS. By CHARLOTTE M. VAILE. 336 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

Two girls, Esther and Katherine Northmore, born and brought up in the rich farm regions of the Middle West, spend a Summer in the New England home of their grandfather. The characters are well drawn, and the action moves quickly.

BARBARA'S HERITAGE;
OR, YOUNG AMERICANS AMONG THE OLD ITALIAN MASTERS. By DERISTHE L. HOYT. 300 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

With a desire to broaden the education of her son and daughter by the opportunities afforded in foreign travel, an American mother takes them to Italy, and the author, in a very happy strain, has given us their many experiences, into which has been interwoven much instructive and valuable information.

THE ROMANCE OF CONQUEST.
THE STORY OF AMERICAN EXPANSION THROUGH ARMS AND DIPLOMACY. By WILLIAM E. GRIFFIS, D. D. 311 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

This new book of Dr. Griffis, his third along these lines, is aptly named. It is indeed a romance—a well-told story of the diplomacy, the treaties, the valor of the American soldier and sailor, the enterprise of our people, whereby the United States has become great in the acquirement of territory.

THE QUEEN'S RANGERS.
By CHARLES LEDYARD NORTON. 352 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

The thrilling period during the last years of our struggle for independence forms the ground work for Colonel Norton's latest work.

The intense patriotism which prompted our young men to do and dare anything for their country, is shown in the exploits of the three young heroes.

WHEN BOSTON BRAVED THE KING.
A STORY OF TEA-PARTY TIMES. By W. E. BARTON, D. D. 314 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

The ready pen of Dr. Barton finds a fit subject in sketching colonial history, and right well has he described one of the most famous of Boston's historical events.

CADET STANDISH OF THE ST. LOUIS.
A STORY OF OUR NAVAL CAMPAIGN IN CUBAN WATERS. By WILLIAM DRYSDALE. 332 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

Of all the many war stories this is one of the best. Mr. Drysdale's intimate knowledge of Santiago and the surrounding country, Cuban life in general, and the late war in particular, gave him the basis for what is one of the strongest books of the year.

A DAUGHTER OF THE WEST.
THE STORY OF AN AMERICAN PRINCESS. By EVELYN RAYMOND. 347 pp. Cloth, $1.50.

Miss Raymond tells in easy, flowing manner of the home life of a high-minded, wide-awake motherless girl. One can nearly feel the sweep of the Western breezes as he reads of the perfect freedom of ranch life as delineated in this story, and no one will lay down the book without admitting that true honor counts.

SELECT NOTES.
By Rev. F. N. PELOUBET. A COMMENTARY ON THE INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSONS FOR 1900. 370 pp. Cloth, $1.25.

"Select Notes" is now, as ever, most of all an illustrative commentary, and into no other one volume was ever gathered such a wealth of illustrative and illuminating material.

Among the new features is the use of the new revised text in connection with the old version—a chronological chart in seven colors, and a beautiful lithographed bird's-eye view of the Sea of Galilee.

GREAT BOOKS AS LIFE-TEACHERS.

16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.50.

Twelve masterpieces of literature, treated under the title of "Great Books as Life-Teachers": Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," Ruskin's "Seven Lamps of Architecture," George Eliot's "Tito," Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," Browning's "Saul." To these are added several studies of recent notable biographies.

"Leaving to others the problem of literary criticism, these studies emphasize the importance of right thinking in order to right conduct and character, and the use of great books as aids and incentives to the higher life."—Preface.

16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"Right to the point, and as good as gold. . . . The author knows how to reason as well as to preach and clothe his thoughts in beautiful forms of expression. The volume is a storehouse of enrichments for the practical and spiritual life, and makes its points with splendor of illustration and cogent reasoning."—Independent.

Tenth Edition.

The Investment of Influence.

By Newell Dwight Hillis.

A study of Social Sympathy and Service.

16mo, cloth, gilt top, $1.25.

"With wonderful facility and power the author shows how great and good men het others by their influence on the atmosphere i which they move, by their vicarious lives, an by the exercise of tender, compassionate love. Every chapter is full of inspiration, and no on can read the volume without being stimulated to seek a nobler manhood."—Presbyterian Messenger.

RALPH CONNOR'S TALES OF THE SELKIRKS.

Each, 12mo, cloth, $1.25.

BLACK ROCK. By Ralph Connor.

THE SKY-PILOT. By Ralph Connor.

"Ralph Connor captivates the reader's imagination and touches his heart from the outset by his simple, tender, sympathetic fashion of telling what he has seen and known. We are reminded of Ian Maclaren at his best."—Christian Advocate.

"Not since 'Ian Maclaren' gave us the 'Bonnie Brier Bush' stories has any one produced so moving a series of sketches. 'Ralph Connor' has painted for us a picture of life in the lumber and mining camps of surpassing merit. With perfect wholesomeness, with exquisite delicacy, with entire fidelity, with truest pathos, with freshest humor, he has delineated character, has analyzed motives and emotions, and has portrayed life. Some of his characters deserve immortality, so faithfully are they created."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Bishop Brooks and the Boston Slums.

"As pure and sweet as a breath of cool mountain air."—Transcript.

The Bishop's Shadow.

By Mrs. I. T. Thurston.

"Sets forth the masterlist life of the Christ-like Bishop".—Interior.

With illustrations by M. Eckerson. 16mo, cloth, $1.25.

"An interesting study of Boston slum life, fine and good in tone. The book gives realistic descriptions of the struggles the street boys have to make a living, how they rough it when without a home, how they form friendships and political combinations, and generously share their joys and sorrows. . . . One reads on, conscious at the time only of the story; but meanwhile one is getting many valuable suggestions on practical methods for reaching the poor and neglected classes of people. The delightful character of 'The Bishop' is none other than Bishop Brooks."—The Beacon.

By Author of "Chinese Characteristics."

Village Life in China.

By Arthur H. Smith, D.D.

A Study in Sociology.

8vo, cloth, fully illustrated, $3.00.

The author of "Chinese Characteristics," now in its tenth thousand, has, from his more than a quarter of a century's experience, completed an equally unique work. It forms a worthy companion to his initial volume, which has fittingly been described as "the best book on the Chinese people."

"Mr. Smith is evidently a man with that rare gift—racial diagnosis. He is able to discriminate between the fundamental and the merely superficial differences between Western and Chinese civilization. He not merely describes what is behind the curtain; he lifts it, and lets us look in."—The Spectator, London.

Fifteenth Thousand.

Friendship.

By Hugh Black, M.A.

With an Introductory Note by W. Robertson Nicoll, D.D., and marginal decorations by F. Berkeley Smith. Printed in two colors.

12mo, decorated cloth, gilt top, boxed, $1.25.

"Mr. Black, who is the associate of Dr. Whyte at Free St. George's, Edinburgh, is probably the most popular preacher in Scotland, and is a man of great spiritual earnestness, simplicity of nature, and very fine intellectual quality. This volume, which is tender and winning and at the same time vigorous and incisive, shows the fine grain of the man's nature. The subject is an old one; the treatment is fresh, vivacious, and genuinely religious."—The Outlook.

The love poems composing the volume are almost equally divided between American and English verse, but a few are translations. Many have never before appeared in any collection, and this and the novelty of the pictures remarkably adapt the book to the wants of those who have made similar gifts in former years.

POMPEII: ITS LIFE AND ART. By August Mau. Translated into English by Francis W. Kelsey. Illustrated. 8vo. New York: The Macmillan Company. $5.

This beautiful volume on the long-buried city is the result of twenty-five years' work on the part of its author. The valuable text is rendered still more valuable by the introduction of ten full-page photogravures, five full-page plans, and about two hundred half-tone illustrations, together with drawings and plans in the text. The introduction briefly discusses the situation of Pompeii, and sketches its ancient history down to the time of the catastrophe that overwhelmed the city. To this is added an account of the excavations which have been carried on more or less systematically for the last one hundred and fifty years. The author then begins the reconstruction of the city. In Part I. he describes the Forum, temples, market halls, municipal offices, the theatres, baths, and other structures designed for public use. Part II. is devoted to private dwellings, notably the more recently excavated ones, "House of the Silver Wedding" and "House of the Vettii." Trades and occupations are treated of in Part III.; the tombs, in Part IV., and "Art and Culture of the Pompeiians" in Part V. Among the illustrations, which are taken partly from photographs and partly from drawings, are a number of restorations of ancient buildings.

RELIGION.

GREAT BOOKS AS LIFE TEACHERS. Studies of Characters, Real and Ideal. By Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis. 12mo. Cloth, gilt top. New York: Fleming H. Revell Company. $1.50.

Dr. Hillis treats under this one title, "Great Books as Life Teachers," his studies on Tennyson's "Idylls of the King," Ruskin's "Seven Lamps of Architecture," George Eliot's "Tito," Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," and Browning's "Saul." To these are added other studies, derived from the most recent biographies. In his preface Dr. Hillis writes that he leaves to others the problem of literary criticism, but that his object is to "emphasize the importance of right thinking and character," and to direct readers to those books which are "the aids and incentives to the higher Christian life." It is impossible not to recognize the fact that while fiction is increasing, the writers of romances play as important a part in shaping morals as do the poets and essayists. Dr. Hillis's reputation as a clergyman is well established. But theological study alone does not preclude him from traversing other grounds, and his many-sidedness is shown in the appreciation of the diverse subjects found in this volume.

THE "OXFORD" ELONGATED, RED RUBRIC EDITIONS OF PRAYERS AND HYMNALS. New York: Oxford University Press.

You take a volume coming from the Oxford University Press, irrespective of its size, and you are struck by the excellence of its manufacture, and above all it is its lightness which surprises you. This particular feature is due to the character of the paper. The Oxford India paper is a famous paper, the secret of its manufacture being strictly guarded. It is a clear, white paper and crisp, but having great strength. The art of bookmaking has, then, reached perfection as far as the Oxford University Press is concerned. This edition of Prayers and Hymnals is a masterpiece of typography. The size of each volume is some 5 inches by 2¾, and the binding is exquisite. The contents of these little volumes need no comment.

LIGHT FROM THE EAST: OR, THE WITNESS OF THE MONUMENTS. An Introduction to the Study of Biblical Archæology. With a New, Comparative List of the Proper Names of the Bible. Fully illustrated. By the Rev. C. J. Ball. New York: E. & J. B. Young & Co. Small 4to, 380 pages. $6.50.

The author of this important work is the editor of the "Variorum Apocrypha" and of the new Illustrated Teachers' Bible, and is well known as a scholar and expert in Biblical and Assyriological subjects. In the volume will be found a large amount of original matter having to do with the history and development of Semitic religion, literature, and civilization. It is a handbook of Biblical archæology, as valuable to the professional student as to the general reader of the Scriptures. A notable feature is an analysis of the primitive languages of Babylonia, and their relation to ancient Egyptian and modern Chinese. Translations of ancient texts have been made directly from original sources, and comparisons are shown or contrasted with the phraseology, the traditions, the ideas, the ceremonials of Israel and the neighbors or contemporaries of the Hebrew nation. In illustrative excellence this work has few equals. The photogravures are many and of subjects often taken from originals which have never appeared before. The colored prints have been executed within the Bible Office of the Queen's printers. The thoroughness of the work and the accuracy of the copies from the antiquities of thousands of years ago recommend the work to the attention of scholars and teachers.

OUTDOOR BOOKS.

THE NATURAL HISTORY OF SELBORNE. By Gilbert White. Edited with an introduction by Grant Allen. Two hundred illustrations by Edmund H. New. F cap. 4to, 568 pages. Bound in buckram. Uncut edges. New York: John Lane, the Bodley Head. $7.50.

Alas! that this work should recall the death of Grant Allen, for no man was better fitted to edit that classic volume, known to all the English-speaking race, "The Natural History of Selborne." Grant Allen's scientific acquaintance with natural history finds its proper place when discussing Gilbert White's special qualities as an investigator. If the naturalist of Selborne sometimes indulged in theories which have been discarded long ago, there is shown in his work the most honest desire to find out the secrets of nature. Grant Allen blends most pleasantly past hearsay knowledge with the actualities of the present. This volume contains photogravure portraits of Thomas Pennant and Daines Barrington, and in its pages there are some hitherto unpublished notes by Samuel Taylor Coleridge.

A GUIDE TO THE WILD FLOWERS. By Alice Lounsberry. Illustrated in color. Size 5¼ by 7½ inches. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $2.50.

"A Guide to the Wild Flowers," written by Alice Lounsberry, is illustrated by Mrs. Ellis Rowan, the well-known painter of wild flowers. The primary aim of the book is to furnish lovers of nature with a convenient hand-book for field use. For this reason the book appears in two distinct bindings, one for outdoor use and the other as a handsome dress for the book as a work of art. The text is arranged according to the kind of soil in which plants grow—the most natural classification. Family, color, odor, range, and time of bloom are all given in each case, while indexes of common names, scientific names, and colors aid in making identification easy. Unlike the familiar school "botanies," "A Guide to the Wild Flowers" is not intended to be a dry, scientific book. It is technically correct, however, in every particular. Botanists will enjoy its beauties, while non-botanists can learn much from its pages with little effort. Mrs. Rowan's illustrations include sixty-four full-page colored plates, showing seventy-nine different plants, and 100 black-and-white plates showing 103 plants, together with fifty-four diagrams. In all are presented descriptions of nearly 500 plants.

OUTDOOR PICTURES. By T. De Thulstrup. Size, 11½ by 14 inches. New York: Frederick A. Stokes Company. $5.

Mr. T. De Thulstrup's work has long been familiar to the readers of the principal illustrated magazines, hence his qualities need not be dwelt upon in introducing his "Outdoor Pictures." This book, it may nevertheless be noted, is in the field where he has been most successful, for in it he deals with polite society as it shows itself in outdoor life and amusements. Mr. De Thulstrup presents twenty-four pictures in all, twelve of them being fac similes of water-colors, and twelve of them half-tones after drawings in black and white. The scenes in which the artist depicts the social characteristics concern rowing, skating, golf, tennis, coaching, yachting, and, in fact, all the outdoor sports in which polite society is supposed to interest itself. One important feature of the book should be considered observed from the point of view of the bookmaker's art. The fac similes have been made by a new color process, which is said to preserve the toning and expression of the artist's original in a manner hitherto deemed impossible. The volume may be regarded as an exquisite portfolio of color prints, which is as interesting as it is artistic. The prints are firmly bound in artistic covers, one of which has a design in color devised by the artist.

THE TRAIL OF THE SAND HILL STAG. With sixty drawings. By Ernest Seton-Thompson. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.00.

From the beauty of its illustrations, its type, paper, binding, and general make-up, "The Trail of the Sand Hill Stag" would excite general interest, even if it were not a beautiful story exquisitely told. The book's ethical message is a striking one, and conveyed in such fashion as not to detract from the interest of the story. The evolution of Jan, the boy hunter, is given. At first the sportsman is only intent upon running down and finally killing the noble stag, upon whose trail he followed for many a long day, either alone or with older hunters, from whom, and especially from the Cree Indian, Chaska, Jan learned to follow a deer's faintest trail. Learned also to know why that trail never passed a tamarack tree; why it pawed the snow at every oak; why the buck's track is plain and the fawn's down-wind. He learned, in fact, all the secrets of the ponds, the woods, the hills; how the muskrat lives beneath the ice; why the mink slides down hill, and what the ice says when it screams at night. The squirrel, too, taught Jan many a lesson—how to strip the fir cones, and what toadstools can be safely eaten. Watching the partridge he learned why it dives beneath the snow, while the fox revealed the secret of his setting his feet so straight, and why he wears so huge a tail. At last, after months of patient tracking, Jan all the while growing wiser and wiser in all wood-lore, and in so doing passing the happiest days of his life, the hunter and the hunted stood face to face, and the glorious sand hill stag was at the mercy of his old enemy, man. Once face to face the two became as brothers—not, indeed, understanding each other's speech, but their characters and motives. What the result of such a meeting really was our readers can best learn from the book itself, one of the most beautiful of the season's output.

DICKY DOWNY. The Autobiography of a Bird. By Virginia S. Patterson. Illustrated in colors. 192 pages. Philadelphia: American Baptist Publication Society. 60 cents.

Why may not a bird, and more particularly a bobolink, tell his own story? Are not bobolinks much given to chatter and song? All that is requisite is that some one fully understanding bird language, and at the same time in sympathy with the winged creation, should act as interpreter. And that is precisely what Virginia S. Patterson has done. There is something more than ornithology taught young readers by means of "Dicky Downy." They are shown how cruelly birds are treated at times, and how unnecessarily they are slaughtered. Besides familiarity with bird lore, the volume has a marked literary ability.

TRAVEL AND ADVENTURES.

THE YANG-TSE VALLEY AND BEYOND. By Isabella L. Bird, (Mrs. Bishop.) In two volumes. Illustrated. 8vo. New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons. $6.

Even the war news from South Africa has not tended to hide from popular view the vast question that the Empire of China presents to the powers of the world. This is the alternative that statesmen all over the world are to-day trying to decide: Shall China be partitioned, or shall all countries be permitted equal footing in commercial and industrial dealings with her? As time passes the argument of the subject becomes more intense. Sooner or later, therefore, Central and Western China may be transformed into a great battlefield or into one of the most active industrial and commercial centres of the world. In either case a more intimate knowledge of the immense territory concerned will have its advantages. This knowledge is offered in a new work by the author of "Unbeaten Tracks in Japan," "A Lady's Life in the Rocky Mountains," and "The Hawaiian Archipelago." Mrs. Bishop is peculiarly fitted to present such a book of information. She deals little with cumbersome statistics, but the results of her observations are true and graphic. "The Yang-tse Valley and Beyond" is an account of journeys in Central and Western China, especially among the Mant-Zu of the Tsu-Kuh-Shaw Mountains, along routes not usually taken by the average tourist. The work is illustrated with maps and about 100 full-page reproductions of photographs taken by the author.

THE LOG OF A SEA WAIF. Being the Recollections of the First Four Years of My Sea Life. By Frank T. Bullen, F. R. G. S. Illustrated. 12mo. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

Some critics have found in this new tale of Mr. Bullen an English companion to Mr. Dana's "Two Years Before the Mast." There are many points of resemblance, both in the style of the author and in the color that goes to make up the first few years of a seafarer's life as viewed from the forecastle. In his new book of sea experiences the author of "The Cruise of the Cachalot" and "Idylls of the Sea" presents to his readers the continuous story of his first four years spent at sea. To all the accuracy of the traditional log-book are added in graphic and picturesque phrasing descriptions of voyages to the West Indies, Bombay, and the Coromandel coast, to Melbourne and Rangoon. In each place where the sailor went ashore he found persons and things which appealed to his sensibilities, while the lonely days spent on the sea itself are turned to a source of ever varied and changing experience. The combination is most absorbing—the vivid account of fo'c'sl humanity, the impressions of strange, foreign lands and their peoples, and the adventures and strange sights and experiences attendant upon deep-sea voyages.

The author of this book sympathizes with many of the aspects of the East, and is hostile only to such defects as all instructed Orientals perceive to be stumbling blocks in its advance toward its own ideals of

NEW HOLIDAY BOOKS FOR ALL.

THE LIFE AND LETTERS OF Sir John Everett Millais
President of the Royal Academy
By His Son, JOHN G. MILLAIS.
THE MOST IMPORTANT CONTRIBUTION TO ART PUBLISHED IN YEARS.

These two magnificent volumes comprise the authoritative biography of the most distinguished and popular painter of the last half of the century. They contain the story of his extraordinary boyhood, of his early struggles, of the founding of the Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood, now first given to the world in authentic detail, of the painting of most of his famous pictures, of his friendships with many of the most distinguished men of the day in art, letters, and politics, of his home life and of his sporting tastes and amusements.

Not the least attractive and remarkable feature of this book is the magnificence of its illustrations, 316 in number. No more complete representation of the art of any painter has ever been produced on the same scale. The owners of Sir John Millais' most famous pictures have generously given their consent to their reproduction in his biography and over two hundred pictures and sketches which have never been reproduced before, and which in all probability will never be seen again by the general public, appear in these pages. Nine of Millais' finest pictures are reproduced in photogravure.

Two vols., size 6⅝x10 inches, about 960 pages, cloth, gilt top, boxed, $10.00.
Three-quarters levant, $20.00.

A Special Edition, limited to 250 sets, contains nine of Millais' great paintings reproduced in photogravure and printed on Imperial Japan paper. The price of this limited edition is $15.00. It is bound in cloth profusely stamped in gold, with title page in two colors, and the manufacture of the set is the most perfect possible in every way. Send for descriptive circular.

OUTDOOR PICTURES

By THURE DE THULSTRUP.

In the field where Mr. de Thulstrup has been most successful—outdoor life and amusements of polite society.

There are twenty-five pictures in all, twelve facsimiles of water colors and thirteen half-tone engravings after designs in black-and-white by the artist. Rowing, skating, golf, tennis, coaching, yachting—in fact, nearly every sport on land and water is treated, and in a most spirited way.

In the manufacture of the book the greatest care has been taken to reproduce the artist's work in the most perfect manner possible. The facsimiles have been made by a new color process, which preserves the artist's drawing in a manner hitherto impossible.

Cover after a design by de Thulstrup in colors.
Size 11½x14 inches, half white cloth, $5.00.

THE TRANSVAAL FROM WITHIN

A Private Record of Public Affairs.
By J. F. FITZPATRICK,
Author of "The Outspan."

This work is such an extraordinary record of the occurrences of 1895-'96 in the Transvaal and of the conditions that led up to them that Lord Rosebery, in a speech, advised all his hearers to procure a copy.

The author, a South African by birth, a resident of the Transvaal since 1884, was Secretary of the Reform Committee, and he has made a record that will be part of the history of South Africa. With index.
Size 6x9 inches, cloth, 452 pages, $3.00.

THE SHIP, HER STORY

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

The story of the birth of the ship, her launch, her growth from the "dugout" to a great ocean steamer or an armor-clad ship of war, as described in this work. In his introduction Mr. Russell says:

"My pages will not be accepted as a very learned and genuinely important contribution to the literature of the ship. . . . At the same time it is perhaps due to myself to say that this book is the issue of considerable reading, and of my lifelong admiration of that most beautiful and sentient expression of the handicraft of man—the sailing ship."

With 50 illustrations by H. C. Seppings Wright, which Mr. Russell pronounces beautiful and in many respects faultless. Size 7½x10 inches, cloth, 358 pages, $2.00.

POINT LACE AND DIAMONDS

By GEORGE A. BAKER, JR.

A presentation edition of this remarkably popular book of Vers de Société.

Many different editions of this work have been published and over 40,000 copies have been sold. The sale has been so extraordinary for a volume of verse, and the book is bought so frequently as a gift, that this new and special edition has been prepared for this purpose.

Size 4½x7½ inches, cloth, 150 pages, $1.25.

BOOKS BY GELETT BURGESS

WORKS FOR OLD AND YOUNG BY THIS DELIGHTFUL AND ORIGINAL HUMORIST AND ARTIST.

THE LIVELY CITY O' LIGG

A cycle of modern fairy tales for city children by Gelett Burgess, former editor of The Lark, author of "Vivette," etc.

In this series of fables Mr. Burgess has taken for his characters and heroes such interesting people as The Pert Fire Engine, The Lazy Lamp Posts, and the House Who Walked in Her Sleep, making the collection a sort of Hans Andersen up to date.

Illustrated with 8 full-page color plates, and 45 black-and-white drawings.

4to, full cloth, with cover by Mr. Burgess, $1.50.

THE NONSENSE ALMANACK

An almanack and calendar combined for the year 1900. Contains 14 humorous drawings in black and white, with nonsense quatrains, distorted proverbs, etc.

The extravagant calculations for the year 1900 are unusually full and complete.

Cover design by Mr. Burgess, printed in two colors on dark brown, antique English paper.
Size 7x10 inches, 32 pages, 50 cents.

WILD FLOWERS

By MRS. ELLIS ROWAN.

Twelve superb representations of America's most beautiful wild flowers after water-color paintings by Mrs. Rowan.

This artist is the world's greatest painter of wild flowers. She has won more medals than were possessed by any other woman, and she recently refused $75,000 offered by the German Government for her collection. Her drawings are from the fresh flowers in or near their homes. While artistic and beautiful, they are technically correct.

Size, 12x16 inches, half cloth, boxed, $3.00.

INDIAN PICTURES

By EDWARD W. DEMING.

This contains 6 facsimiles of water colors illustrative of Indian life, and there is no artist of the present time who can depict this as well as Mr. Deming. He spent some years on the plains, where he made so close a study of the different tribes, their traditions and customs, that he is unrivaled in this field. Large folio, 12½x17½ inches, $4.00.

CUPID AND THE FOOTLIGHTS

By JAMES L. FORD.
Author of "The Literary Shop," etc.

This is a very interesting and unique little love story, told entirely by the documents in the case. It is marked by Mr. Ford's delightful humor, and gives some interesting experiences in the careers of an actress and a newspaper man. Incidentally it shows something of life behind the scenes.

The book is profusely illustrated by some striking pictures by Archie Gunn.

Size 9x12 inches, with an ornamental cover, after a design by Mr. Gunn, $1.50.

THE GOLF GIRL

BY MAUD HUMPHREY.

Four facsimiles of water colors by Miss Humphrey, of girls playing golf, each picture representing a different season of the year. Bright and attractive and full of life.

Accompanied by verses by Dr. Samuel Minturn Peck, the popular Southern poet.

Size 9x11 inches, cover in golf colors, $1.25.

FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

BOOKS by MAUD HUMPHREY

GALLANT LITTLE PATRIOTS

With 12 facsimiles of designs of little boys and girls, in scenes and costumes suggestive of the late war. Some of the pictures are "The Returning Hero," "A Naval Reserve Girl," "A Military Band," "Roosevelt's Rough Riders," "Hobson and the Merrimac," "A Red Cross Nurse," etc.

These pictures represent the children acting out these scenes just as they would imagine them, and the effects produced are very dainty, amusing and fascinating.

Accompanying the color-plates are many illustrations in black and white, together with entertaining new stories and verses by Mabel Humphrey. Size, 9x11 inches, with covers in colors, $2.00.

LITTLE HEROES AND HEROINES LITTLE SOLDIERS AND SAILORS

These books are made up from "Gallant Little Patriots," each containing just half the illustrations and text in the larger volume, and bound in exactly the same manner. $1.25.

LOYAL HEARTS AND TRUE

By RUTH OGDEN.

A new book (the first in two years) by this popular author, whose work has so endeared her to young people. This story concerns the adventures of a group of children who form themselves into "The Dry Dock Club," and who have their headquarters in the Brooklyn Navy Yard. By means of a narrative, that boys and girls will enjoy and be greatly interested in, a clear view is presented of some of the stirring events of our own times and of the causes that led up to them. Illustrated by Harry A. Ogden. Size, 4½x7½ inches, cloth, $1.50.

INDIAN STORIES FOR CHILDREN

Three very interesting books by
EDWIN W. DEMING.

INDIAN CHILD LIFE

This consists of 18 stories about Indian children. Each one tells some anecdote illustrating some phase of their life, describing their customs, their pets, and everything curious and interesting connected with their childhood.

These are illustrated by 18 facsimiles of water-colors, and 37 half-tone engravings after designs in black-and-white by the author, done in his inimitable style. Size 8½x11 inches, cover in colors, $2.00.

LITTLE RED PEOPLE LITTLE INDIAN FOLK

Each of these books contains just half the illustrations and text in the preceding volume. Each $1.25.

A LITTLE DAUGHTER OF THE REVOLUTION

By AGNES C. SAGE.

This new work by Miss Sage is in the same field as her successful work, "A Little Colonial Dame." It is a story of child-life during the exciting period of the war for American Independence, and the scenes are laid in Boston, in Philadelphia, and in New York.

The young heroes and heroines play their small parts in various historical events, including the famous tea-party and the inauguration of Washington. The book is one that possesses as much interest for boys as for girls. Profusely Illustrated by Mabel Humphrey.

Size, 6⅝x8⅝ inches, cloth, $1.50.

THE STORY OF THE TREASURE SEEKERS

Being the adventures of the Bastable children in search of a fortune.

By E. NESBIT,
Author of "Lays and Legends," "The Seven Dragons," etc.

With numerous full-page illustrations by Gordon Browne and Louis Baumer.

The story is a most lively and interesting one, the children, besides digging for a treasure, acting as detectives, bandits and editors. There are also chapters on "The Poet and the Editor," "The Robber and the Burglar," "The Divining Rod," and "Lo, the Poor Indian."

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 296 pages, $1.50.

JACK, the YOUNG RANCHMAN

OR A BOY'S ADVENTURES IN THE ROCKIES.

By GEORGE BIRD GRINNELL, Author of "Pawnee Hero Stories," etc.

Jack Danvers was a young New York boy who was sent by his family to a Western ranch. This was before the extermination of the buffalo and the wild Indian, and when the cattle business was at its best.

On the ranch Jack met with many adventures, learning to ride and shoot, killing antelope, elk, etc., and finally returning to New York the proud possessor of a tame wolf. The story is founded on fact, and is an excellent, healthful book to put into the hands of a boy.

With eight beautiful illustrations by E. W. Deming, the great delineator of Western Life.
Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 304 pages, $1.50.

NEW FICTION

SECOND EDITION.

ACTIVE SERVICE

By STEPHEN CRANE,
Author of "The Red Badge of Courage," etc.

A new novel by Mr. Crane, the first important one he has written since "The Red Badge of Courage." Mr. Crane was in the Greco-Turkish war as a correspondent, and he has laid the scenes of his story in the region where this occurred. Both the hero and heroine are met with many exciting adventures, and the interest in the story is never allowed to flag. There is also a charming sketch of life in a New England college town.

"Stephen Crane has reached maturity at a bound in his new novel. He has dropped his mannerisms and acquired a manner. He tells his story swiftly, vigorously and always with limpid clearness. The story is worth the telling."—The New York Herald.

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 345 pages, $1.25.

THE WATCHERS

By A. E. W. MASON,
Author of "The Courtship of Morrice Buckler."

The scene is laid in the Scilly Islands, in the middle of the 18th century, and the story is an account of the stirring adventures of a London "man-about-town," and there is also a love story of the most original sort, with episodes having to do with mesmerism in its early days.

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 296 pages, $1.25.

THE CROWN OF LIFE

By GEORGE GISSING,

A strong novel by the author of "In the Year of the Jubilee," "Eve's Ransom," etc.

Mr. Gissing's latest work. In this, as in "The Town Traveler," he shows little of the cynicism that marked his early books. He has forsaken the lower strata of society and has written a charming story of love—"the crown of life."

"To the thoughtful reader the story will be worth a dozen tales of love and marriage."—Providence Journal.

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 360 pages, $1.25.

THE DOMINION OF DREAMS

By FIONA MACLEOD,
Author of "The Mountain Lovers," "Pharais," etc.

The spirit and the dreams of the Gael are the author's theme, and she has treated them with wonderful skill.

"For sheer originality, other qualities apart, her tales are as remarkable, perhaps, as anything we have had of the kind since Mr. Kipling appeared."—London Academy.

"Miss Macleod's work has a peculiar esthetic charm."—The New Era.

"Of the extreme beauty and subtlety of Miss Macleod's work, there is no need now to speak."—Literature.

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 327 pages, $1.50.

JENNIE BAXTER, Journalist

By ROBERT BARR,
Author of "Tekla," "In the Midst of Alarms," etc.

Jennie Baxter was an American girl, a journalist of the modern school, pretty, bright, and audacious. Visiting London she began to introduce her American methods into the English and Continental newspapers. Mr. Barr, as a veteran newspaper man, tells the story of her adventures with great people and affairs in his spirited and humorous style.

Jennie Baxter is a unique character in the world of fiction, and a most interesting one.

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 327 pages, illustrated, $1.25.

THE LIGHT OF SCARTHEY

By EGERTON CASTLE,
Author of the "Pride of Jennico," etc.

Of this stirring romance the author has just written as follows: "Among the writer's literary family is there not one nearer his heart than all the rest—his dream-child? . . . This book is my dream-child."

The story is of one Adrian Landale, a young English nobleman of a hundred years ago—"the days when in Liverpool the privateers were daily fitting out or bringing in the 'prizes' . . . the days of war and the fortunes of war; days of press-gangs, to kidnap unwilling rulers of the waves"; days of "the now rather incomprehensible pursuit of gold-smuggling—a romantic subject, if ever there was one.

"It is not times of now-a-days, no ordinary scenery that would suit such adventures as befell Adrian Landale or Captain Jack, or 'Murthering Moll the second,' " the chief characters in the story of the love and life of a lighthkeeper, "who was once a Dreamer of Beautiful Things."

The first edition of this book has already been oversold, the second edition is now printing.

Size, 4⅝x7½ inches, cloth, 434 pages, $1.50.

ARTISTIC CALENDARS

Over one hundred and fifty varieties of many styles and shapes, and varying in price from 10 cents to $6.00 each. Most of the calendars on the market are made abroad and are designed by foreigners. If they depict children, they always have a Teutonic appearance; if a pretty woman is the central figure, she looks as if she had just left the boulevards.

The distinctive feature of the Stokes calendars is that they are thoroughly AMERICAN. They are designed by American artists and manufactured in this country.

With so many subjects to choose from, every taste can be suited. There are calendars of sixteen sorts, of photogravures, of half-tone engravings, and also facsimiles of water-color paintings by well-known artists. The leaves are tied together with bows of satin ribbon. They are printed on heavy paper of the best quality, with title dates on the different sheets, and are boxed.

THURE DE THULSTRUP, sport; EUGEN F. ZOGBAUM, the sea; LOUISE L. HEUSTIS, polite society; E. W. DEMING, Indians; PAUL DE LONGPRE, flowers, are represented. There are charming pictures of children by MAUD HUMPHREY, some wonderful reproductions of designs of wild flowers by MRS. ELLIS ROWAN, and spirited examples of social life by MABEL HUMPHREY and ARCHIE GUNN. There are also numerous reproductions of Stokes pictures of the best examples of modern and religious art. Many imported calendars are offered as well. For full particulars send for Descriptive Catalogue.

For sale by all booksellers or sent postpaid. On receipt of 10 cents, a descriptive Catalogue and a Calendar or a copy of the Christmas number of the Pocket Magazine will be sent to any address. Mention the Times.

HOW TO JUDGE A BOOK.

There is always so much discussion going on as to the evil tendency of the vast amount of commonplace books and magazines which are said to make up the larger portion of each season's output that one not well acquainted with English and American literature would think them both in a deplorable condition. Numerous articles have been written from the standpoint that the majority of people being commonplace themselves, the natural law of supply and demand is responsible for the great output of equally commonplace literature. But are not both these views entirely too pessimistic? Just as there are in the world all sorts and conditions of men, so does our literature vary in quality and degree of fineness.

It may be that the very cheapness of our books and periodicals, and the full stream of all sorts of literature constantly being poured forth, contribute toward encouraging mediocrity in both the reader and the matter read. But it must be granted, we think, that the general average of intellectual development is far higher than it was a half or, possibly, even a quarter of a century ago. It was considered nothing unusual for our grandmothers to be able to read only sufficiently well to be able to enjoy their Bibles, catechisms, and almanacs—the standard literature of the day for women—or, if great readers, possibly the list might be enlarged by the addition of bound sermons, The Young Lady's Companion, and one or two so-called novels. Our granddfathers' books were much of the same character, and it was only the student, the few out of each community, who really cared for and collected books. The latter being high priced and hard to get at, were prized accordingly. Perhaps, too, the mental requirements of these men of a past generation were not so great as we fancy. It is quite possible that the mental development of the great students of a past century was really very much on a par with their more superficial knowledge of the majority of their brothers of the present day, and that it is really the much higher general level of intelligence, which materially assists in dwarfing the more unusual man of our own time.

Our own day is most fortunate, the last fifteen or twenty years having seen an immense increase in the output, and consequently cheapness, of books, as well as in the establishment of free libraries. The department store has had its influence for good in bringing the best books in cheap editions, as well as the regular publications, at prices lower than prevail in the better class of book shops, within the financial reach of almost every one—so that he who will may have many and good volumes.

Poor indeed must be the community that has no access to free libraries; whose reading matter is drawn entirely from its own resources, or, at best, supplemented by its Sunday school libraries; for it must be allowed that the general average of books found in such collections, and particularly in small places, is remarkably poor.

It is one of the tendencies of the age to take a gloomy view of things in general; another, quite as regrettable, being our fondness for laying the blame for our individual shortcomings upon some one else, and thus to question the tendency of our age rather than our own responsibility. It might seem, therefore, that it is not the great output of all sorts and conditions of literary matter that we ought to fear; indeed this might seem the greatest possible blessing to our age—if only wisely used. The great danger, if we are to call it by so serious a name, lies in our failure to cultivate a discriminating attitude toward the books, magazines, and papers we admit to our homes, as well as the books we take, or allow to be taken, from our circulating libraries. Indeed, if there is danger anywhere, much of it lies in this indiscriminate use of free libraries by our boys and girls, or even by those of larger growth, whose taste in literature is still in the formative stages.

Those of us who are older, and who have been readers for years, know instinctively when we are wasting our time. For such readers, therefore, a poor, weak book, one too easily followed, which does not make us think, which absolutely requires no effort on the part of the reader, may in reality be quite as harmful in its tendency as one whose influence is positively baneful.

There are, of course, two classes into which all good books may be roughly divided—those we simply wish to read and those we care to own; to read and reread, until they come to form part of our very natures, and we instinctively find ourselves thinking the author's thoughts, and, perhaps, in some emergency, being guided by what we fancy he would say or do in such circumstances.

Therefore it will be seen how necessary it is that our choice of the latter class of books should be wisely made. The books selected should be those written by right-thinking, strong-minded men and women; the real thinker, who writes because he has something to say—a message to deliver which must be spoken. When such a book falls into our hands we are seldom doubtful as to its value. We may not, either wholly or in part, accept the author's conclusions, but such a book always makes us think, if only so that we may successfully, at least to our own satisfaction, oppose the opinions thus presented. Dr. Channing has said:

> The best books for a man are not always those which the wise recommend, but oftener those which meet the peculiar wants, the natural thirst of his mind, and therefore awaken interest and rivet thought. And here it may be well to observe, not only in regard to books, but in other respects, that self-culture must vary with the individual. All means do not equally suit us all. A man must unfold himself freely and should respect the peculiar gifts or biases by which nature has distinguished him from others. Self-culture does not demand the sacrifice of individuality.

Those books which require the most thought from us in the reading are always best for us, except in certain moods, when an author must be found whose style exactly fits a particular frame of mind. Few really good books fail to suggest others which must be read at once, and certainly we can all see that a book, to do us the most good, should have been written by a man older in wisdom than we ourselves, if not in years.

Goethe reminds us that there are three classes of readers; those who enjoy without judgment, a second class who judge but fail to enjoy, and a third who, fortunately for themselves, judge while they enjoy and enjoy while they judge. May it not be wise therefore, for us to examine under which classification we personally belong? A taste for reading is the purest joy in existence, nothing being necessary on our part but a willingness to approach a book in the proper spirit and surrender ourselves to the personality of its author. Mr. Mabie has truly said that it is quite as necessary to read wisely as to write well.

It is much easier, we think, to know when we are reading a book which is really good and strong than to decide we are wasting our time or giving ourselves up to a book whose tendency is positively baneful. Perhaps Southey, in "The Doctor," has best stated the case against such books, which, in an age when good men are so abundant, we had better leave severely alone:

> Readers: You whose hearts are open, whose understandings are not yet hardened, and whose feelings are not yet exhausted or incrusted with the world, take from me a better rule than any professors of criticism will teach you! Would you know whether the tendency of a book is good or evil, examine in what state of mind you lay it down. Has it induced you to suspect that what you have been accustomed to think unlawful may after all be innocent, and that may be harmless which you have hitherto been taught to think dangerous? Has it tended to make you dissatisfied and impatient under the control of others and disposed you to relax in that self-government without which both the laws of God and man tell us there can be no virtue and consequently no happiness? Has it attempted to abate your admiration and reverence for what is great and good and to diminish in you the love of your country and your fellow-creatures? Has it addressed itself to your pride, your vanity, your selfishness, or any of your evil propensities? Has it defiled the imagination with what is loathsome or shocked the heart with what is monstrous? Has it disturbed the sense of right and wrong which the Creator has implanted in the human soul? If so, if you are conscious of all or any of these effects, or if, having escaped from all, you have felt that such were the effects it was intended to produce, throw the book in the fire, whatever name it may bear on the title page. Throw it in the fire, young man, though it should have been the gift of a friend: young lady, away with the whole set, though it should be the prominent feature of a rosewood bookcase!

"THE WATER POET."

"A. B. S." New York City: "Will you kindly inform me who is the 'Water Poet' mentioned in the preface of Curtis Major's 'When English Blood Was in Flower'?"

John Taylor, (1580-1653,) the "Water Poet," as he called himself, was born of humble parentage at Gloucester, England, and went to the grammar school there for a time, but was soon apprenticed to a London waterman. Later he was pressed into the navy, and served in the fleet under the Earl of Essex, being present at the siege of Cadiz in 1596. Prior to 1603 he is said to have made sixteen voyages in the Queen's ships. When he retired from the service he became a Thames waterman, and for fourteen years was a collector of the perquisite of wine exacted by the Lieutenant of the Tower from all ships that brought wines up the river. He was discharged from the place about 1622, and for a few years picked up a living on the river, but finally turned to account his gift for easy rhyming and celebrating in verse current events, &c., as well as in various wagering journeys which he made, such as from London to Edinburgh on foot without money. He also visited the Continent, and each of his journeys resulted in a booklet with a quaint title. He kept a public house in Oxford about 1642 and another in London in 1645. He died in December, 1653, and his widow carried on the business until her death, in January, 1658. The list of Taylor's works attached to the valuable account of his life by Gordon Goodwin, in the fifty-fifth volume of the "Dictionary of National Biography," comprises as many as 157 publications. The earliest of these is "The Scoller; or, Gallimawfry of Sonnets, Satyres, and Epigrams," quarto, 1612, (with a woodcut of Taylor rowing in a boat.) All of his works have long been quite rare. Though trivial and often coarse, they accurately mirror his age, and to the historian and antiquary are of value.

BOOKS AT AUCTION.

At a sale of books held by Bangs & Co., on Nov. 20, W. Chalmers's own copy of the "Introduction to the History of the Revolt of the Colonies," 1782, bound in two volumes, fetched $60. Dodd, Mead & Co. being the purchasers. It had many corrections and additions and was, in fact, used by the historian for an intended second edition, the altered title of which was to be "The History of the Revolt of the United States of America."

Cicero's "Cato Major," printed by Franklin in 1744, original calf, brought $32 at the same sale, and Increase Mather's "Angelographia," Boston, 1696, fetched $11. The remainder of the books offered were mainly standard works. Among them may be mentioned an excellent set of Pickering's Aldine Edition of the British Poets, 1833-53, fifty-seven volumes, calf, which realized $59.85.

The Last Pansy.

December 4, 1899.

Up to my startled gaze
From the honry, tawny grass
Leaped a hooded figure,
That challenged as I passed—
Purple was the bonnet, clasped with heart of gold,
That gleamed bright and steadfast in the piercing cold.
"Where is Spring? The flowers all sleep,
I cannot leave my post," it said—
Intrepid, fearless sentinel,
Alone with its dead!

By JAMES BARNES, author of "Drake and His Yeomen," etc., etc. Illustrated by R. F. ZOGBAUM and CARLTON T. CHAPMAN.

"Mr. Barnes's style is admirable, and the stories he has taken from history and tradition are stirring narratives of valiant deeds."—The Dial.

The New York Sun says:

"Mr. James Barnes is a good story teller. He knows how to spin a yarn. . . . We are free to declare that these yarns are natural and that they reel easily off the spindle. The book is founded on history and does not ignore tradition. It is well done and very interesting."

ABRAHAM LINCOLN: The Man of the People.

By NORMAN HAPGOOD, author of "Daniel Webster," etc. Illustrated from portraits and facsimiles. Crown 8vo. Half leather, gilt top. $2.00.

"A Life of Lincoln that has never been surpassed in vividness, compactness and life-like reality."—Chicago Tribune.

Mellen Chamberlain says:

"It is a remarkable book. Mr. Hapgood has truly presented Lincoln as a man of the people. No one could have done this better, and few so well. I feel sure that it will live in literature."

TALES OF LANGUEDOC.

By SAMUEL JACQUES BRUN. With an introduction by HARRIET W. PRESTON and illustrations by ERNEST C. PEIXOTTO. Cloth, $1.50.

Professor Brun's stories are of quite exceptional popular interest. They belong, of course, with folk-stories and fairy tales, and moreover they are unusually direct, energetic and entertaining.

THE JINGLE BOOK.

By CAROLYN WELLS. Illustrated by OLIVER HERFORD. Small 4to. Cloth. $1.00.

No more delightful gift for young people could be imagined than this charming book. Author and artist are so happily in sympathy with each other that the clever drawings seem essential to the verses, and each strives to outdo the other in whimsical comicalities.

This remarkably well-written history gives a vivid pen-picture of the origin, rise and progress of the largest city in America and embraces a wide range of varied and authentic information.

"It reads like a romance, and nothing has been left undone to make it complete. The illustrations are very numerous, and many of them unusually fine. . . . Mrs. Lamb has explored a thousand by-ways; she has brought to light hosts of old manuscripts; she has unearthed innumerable anecdotes and incidents; she has sought out many living persons and drawn from their rich stores of family reminiscence; she in all her task has left not a stone unturned that might contribute to the fullness of the narrative; hence her history is such a monument of patient care and tireless industry, that it has won a great and enviable reputation."

"By far the best history," said Mr. Bancroft. "Rich with information," said Geo. William Curtis. "Absolutely sure of a reading," said Edmund C. Stedman.

The Nation says it is "indispensable to the student," and The New York Times calls it "a striking record clearly set forth and altogether inspiring," etc., etc.

Can the lover of history and fine books find a more splendid work? John Swinton of The New York Sun once said this is truly "an American monument to an American woman."

The Rhode Island Quakers.*

The records of the old Quakers are always most interesting reading. Those of the present, or, at least, of the younger generation of Quakers are for the most part such in name only, and year by year the meetings grow smaller, until it would seem to be only a question of time when they will cease altogether. The first mention of the sect in the annals of Rhode Island occurs in 1657, when the Commissioners of the United Colonies wrote the Governor of Rhode Island that such "arrival may prove dangerous to the Colonies. * * * That you remove those Quakers that have been received, and for the future prohibit their coming amongst you."

The early Friends suffered all sorts of indignities, women as well as men being imprisoned and whipped. "The cords of their whips were commonly as thick as a man's little finger, having each some knots at the end." After being imprisoned for a varying period of time these zealous people would be sent back to England, only to return at the first opportunity. One of the women, Mary Fisher, who was so badly treated here, being "called by God," journeyed to the East in 1660, quite alone, entered Turkey, and declaring she had a message for the Sultan, was courteously received by him, who begged her to abide with them, saying "they could not but respect such a one as should take so much pains to come to them so far as from England with a message from the Lord God." Mary Fisher's message being delivered she would abide there no longer, and refusing the guard the Sultan wished her to take, returned safely to England "without hurt or scoff," a slightly different treatment from that measured out to her and other Quakers in a more enlightened country.

The early history of the Quakers in our country is a dark page in its history, only lightened by the stories of faith and courage and devotion with which it is sprinkled—notably, the history of Mary Dyer, a Rhode Island woman, and the only one of her sex to suffer death in that time of persecution.

Her death reaped its harvest. "The Seed," as Friends delighted to call the principles of truth they lived and died for, flourished abundantly. Within a year of Mary Dyer's death the Rhode Island Yearly Meeting was established, which grew until it became the General Meeting for the whole of New England.

Rhode Island, as is well known, was always a refuge for all men of oppressed consciences, and her early history is full of political dissension, as well as religious troubles. Miss Hazard's book takes up the establishment of the various meetings, the meeting houses, the clerks of the meeting, and the work of the society. An interesting chapter is that devoted to "The Women's Meeting," which was brought about through the agency of George Fox, who early recognized the importance of women's work in the Church. The records of this meeting date from 1744, a few months later than that of the men's meeting. One great care devolving upon the women's meeting was to see that the young women of the society married in "Younety," as the clerk of the meeting often spelled it, or, as at other times expressed, "in the good Order of Friends," and many are the stories of the public rebukes marriages outside the order brought upon not only the delinquents, who were punished by disfellowship, but upon their natural guardians also, for not preventing such marriage.

The attitude the Quakers took toward the slave question is well known. John Woolman ("Get the journal of John Woolman by heart and love the early Quakers," says Elia) came to the yearly meetings in 1743 and in 1760, and preached vigorously in private as well as in public against slavery. Many of the old Quakers freed their slaves, and many instances are on record of Friends "under dealing" about the holding or sale of slaves, the whole vexed question, so far as they themselves were concerned, being settled in Meeting in 1773.

The Revolution forms the subject of the last chapter, while an appendix contains a fac simile reprint of a bit of rare Americana, "A Quaker's Sea Journal: A True Relation of a Voyage to New England," London, 1659, and some data from old records concerning slavery. The little book, which Miss Hazard says has grown from a paper read before the Rhode Island Historical Society, is a pretty little volume of about 200 pages, and one well worth reading by all who are interested in the early history of our country.

preaching, even beyond what may be his own subject the title of "Master Thought." He sometimes misses the real excellences of Mohammedan training, but his Christian prejudices are not violent, and, what is of much more consequence, he has the true journalist's eye, seeing things as they are, and the journalist's instinct for seizing upon some feature or quality hitherto neglected and grouping his observations and criticisms about it. He begins his journey with a few observations on Manchester, Spain, and Portugal, but these occupy only a few pages, and beyond them he Baalbec and Damascus, and El Kurds itself, the goal of the Christian traveler, although generally called by another name. It will be remembered that Mr. Barr, having attempted to visit certain ruins, and having arrayed himself in an Arab garment for the simple reason that he could not find an overcoat in the country, was arrested as a dangerous spy, and, although provided with passes and permits of every conceivable degree of authority, was, through official stupidity, detained for some little time.

FICTION.

HUGH WYNNE, FREE QUAKER. Sometime Brevet Lieutenant Colonel on the Staff of his Excellency, Gen. Washington. By Dr. S. Weir Mitchell. In two volumes. New York: The Century Company. $2. Continental edition, $5.

As more than half a million of the reading public are now aware, Dr. S. Weir Mitchell's historical romance, "Hugh Wynne," is a great novel of the American Revolution, which presents a vivid picture of Philadelphia society during the stirring scenes of the conflict between the British mother country and the colonies in America. Owing to the increased demand for the work, stimulated in many quarters with the desire to become more actually acquainted with the scenes in which the action takes place, the publishers have just presented a special illustrated issue of the work, called the Continental Edition. "Hugh Wynne" thus presented appears in rich binding, with broad margins and deckle edges. Twelve pictures made by Howard Pyle for the story while it was appearing serially in The Century Magazine are reproduced in photogravure, together with a great number of reproductions of rare prints that have been selected after months of the most careful research, most of which are contemporaneous, or nearly so, with the story. Added to these are photographs of the present aspect of certain places that are mentioned in the story. Among the reproductions are a drawing by Strickland of the original Valley Forge, which has been engraved by Tiebout; "Margaret Shippen," from a sketch by Major André, showing the headdress designed by him for Miss Shippen in the Mischianza, and a fac simile of Major André's last letter to Washington, photographed from the original in the State Department at Washington.

JANICE MEREDITH. By Paul Leicester Ford. In two editions, cloth and an illustrated holiday edition. New York: Dodd, Mead & Co. $1.50 and $5.

This new historical romance by the author of "The Honorable Peter Stirling" has already passed through several editions after having been widely read as a serial. The novel is now also presented in an illustrated holiday edition of two volumes. The illustrations of this edition are the work of Howard Pyle and his pupils. Mr. Ford has brought to his work an intimate knowledge of American life as it was during the last quarter of the eighteenth century, and the literary power to write a strong, absorbing, and successful novel. Mr. Ford has attempted to do with the social life of the time of the American Revolution what other writers have done with life in camp and on the battlefield at that time. The story opens in New Jersey in 1776, and in a series of dispassionate pictures the author gives us a representation of the thought and culture of the time and place. Then Washington appears upon the scene, the conflict begins, and the reader is made to observe from the point of view of a civilian of the period the gathering together of the American Army, and later on the actual battles of the war. Although the opening chapters are written in a quiet mood, the action, even as the national strife deepens, becomes more rapid. There is mystery and love in the romance. Both themes are said to be dexterously handled. The appearance of Washington now and then in the story is managed most carefully and is in no way forced. The character of the hero is said to be based on that of Alexander Hamilton.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE DE WILLOUGHBY CLAIM. By Frances Hodgson Burnett. 12mo. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons. $1.50.

This new novel from the pen of Mrs. Burnett may well be considered one of the most distinctly literary events of the season. Although it was the original intention of the author to make it purely a story of diplomacy and political intrigue, with its principal scene of action Washington, other influences prevailed and we have presented to us a story of wild, tropic interest, in which adventure in the real surrounding the history of the "Claim" is a story of deception which closes in great dramatic scenes, the prattle of children's voices, and the intensified contrasts of New England stubbornness and Southern shivalry. The interest is centred upon the winning of the great claim which is to reinstate good-natured "Big Tom" De Willoughby in his birthright, the love between a beautiful, romantic child and a strong man, and the means by which the hero's life is saved from blackness and desolation, and made to overflow with delight and happiness. All this is accentuated by the dramatic qualities of the story, which conceal the identity of the conspirator until the last, and work out the fate of the heartless fanatic who stood nearest the loving couple, brutal in his loyalty to his idea of the right. While the pages devoted to the description of child-life notably augment Mrs. Burnett's gallery of juvenile portraits, others, too, more than emphasize the fact that "Mrs. Burnett's characters are as veritable as Thackeray's."

STALKY & CO. By Rudyard Kipling. Illustrated. (Uniform with "The Day's Work.") New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. $1.50.

Persons who are interested in either the military or political history of British Africa or India have undoubtedly been impressed with the fact that the vast working and achievement of the British imperial system is due to individual, and frequently to independent, effort. And it is doubtless often asked, What were the formative influences of these pillars of the empire? Mr. Kipling, in his recent tale of English school life, tells us. In so doing his schoolboy trio are fashioned to appeal to the same sensibilities that were aroused by the "Soldiers Three." They are English boys, rough-and-tumble fellows, whose intrigue and strategy and daring seem to present in petto or at any rate to foreshadow the vast and elaborate events of British diplomacy. For it is these youths, when they are grown to man's estate, upon whose shoulders rests the mighty responsibility of British Colonial Governments. The author may be deemed to do well at this time to emphasize this point, for one of the stories shows these "three musketeers" of England taking up the "white man's burden" in India.

*VANITY FAIR. A Novel Without a Hero. By William Makepeace Thackeray. The Becky Sharp Edition. With many illustrations of the comedy as produced by Mrs. Fiske and other players. New York: Harper & Brothers. $2.50.

Those of our readers who are admirers of the acting of Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske, and who have seen her in Mr. Langdon Mitchell's version of "Vanity Fair," will perhaps welcome the appearance of that novel with illustrations taken from scenes in the play. But as Mr. Mitchell's play, from the very fact that it can be successfully acted, differs in many essential particulars from the book itself, devout Thackerayans will doubtless prefer the book with its original illustrations. The Maude Adams edition of "The Little Minister" is not a parallel case, because not only is the latter not yet, at least, a classic, but because Mr. Barrie is not only still with us, but he arranged and authorized the use of his book for a play. And yet many of us who have seen Mrs. Fiske's "Becky Sharp" know how well certain scenes lend themselves to illustration, as, for instance, the superb setting of the ballroom scene on the eve of the battle of Waterloo. Rawdon Crawley, too, in the supper scene, standing over the prostrate body of my Lord Steyne in a manner which, even at such a critical moment, excited Becky's admiration, is fine. Then, too, the extreme fidelity with which the costumes are suited to the age in which the action of the story takes place, also adds value to these illustrations. Miss Crawley, in her bird of paradise head dress; Becky, in her demure little gown, so coquettish yet so well suited to the dependent; Rawdon, Dobbin and George Osborne, in their military garb, are all very successfully and charmingly pictured for us. Even Joseph and Amelia are so drawn as to illustrate their main characteristics. And yet, after all, the edition is more one of Mr. Langdon Mitchell's play than one of Thackeray's novel.

THE KING'S MIRROR. By Anthony Hope. 12mo. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

The scenes of action that Mr. Anthony Hope has selected for many of his novels have an environment that is very delightful; we feel that it is an actual picture of some German or Balkan State, even if we cannot exactly point it out on the map. Into the atmosphere of royalty and aristocracy he introduces modes and persons that are typical of London or of Paris, and the result is a delightful combination of illusive romance and very human characters. This new tale of his, "The King's Mirror," is a series of pictures in the life of a Prince and King under modern conditions, yet with intrigues of love and cares of state that are supposed to have been identified with

"It has been remarked elsewhere that Mr. Kipling has discovered three worlds for English literature to rejoice in: Of the native Hindu, of the brute beast, and of the modern machine. He now publishes a book which shows him to have exploited a fourth field, almost as little known, the field of boyhood. . . . Critics who realize the truth and the mastery of the boyish mind displayed here will hold 'Stalky & Co.' to be among the most notable of Mr. Kipling's many diverse achievements."—WALLACE RICE IN CHICAGO EVENING POST.

"Why, then, is Stalky a safer companion for his kind and a more attractive subject for adult consideration than Tom Sawyer? Precisely because Mr. Kipling has what a French critic has recently reproached him with lacking—the moral vision. The chapter that most clearly shows Mr. Kipling's power and insight and sincerity is the second chapter of 'Slaves of the Lamp.' It is this chapter that gives to the book the weight that makes it so satisfactory."—NEW YORK TIMES.

"The book affords another example of the completeness with which Mr. Kipling has entered into the subject with which he deals. . . His mind seems to be saturated with the life he portrays, so that everything is done with an unconscious rightness and appropriateness to the circumstances. Not only is it the case that the dialect sounds absolute in character, but the unconscious prejudices, the habits of thought, the little touches of association are conveyed as by accident and casually. . . . 'Stalky & Co.' has the higher consistency which is the mark of the truly creative imagination."—PROF. H. E. LATHROP, STANFORD UNIVERSITY, IN SAN FRANCISCO CALL.

"A healthy trio are 'Stalky & Co.,' and Mr. Kipling evidently took a great deal of enjoyment in developing them, which enjoyment is bound to be shared by his readers. The older ones will find much in the stirring narrative to recall their own boyhood, and the younger crowd an incentive to a wholesome and ambitious life. There isn't a namby-pamby line in the book, nothing but Kipling's robustness."—PROVIDENCE NEWS.

"This book reveals a striking consistency both in the characters of the boys and in the nature of their several exploits. Stalky is a marvelous diplomat, the prime factor in every row and escapade, and yet almost always able to prove an alibi. McTurk is a wild Irishman, whose brogue has been carefully kicked out of him by his two friends, only to break out again in moments of excitement. Beetle is Kipling himself under a thin disguise."—CHICAGO TRIBUNE.

Rattling, virile, and clean, these brisk sketches will be devoured by every English-speaking schoolboy."—PHILADELPHIA PUBLIC LEDGER.

"Mr. Kipling has achieved a triumph in this story of boys who grew into men, and manly men at that. We may not grow hysterical over Kipling, and we may choose to discriminate against certain of his stories and poems. If we are wise, however, we will not hurl anathemas at 'Stalky & Co.' If we do, 'Stalky & Co.' will not care a rap, and they will go on being just as much alive as before."—ST. LOUIS REPUBLIC.

"His (Kipling's) imagination is so rich that any human trait he brings out, or any picture he paints, will always be well done. These stories relate to school life in England. . . . In many ways they take us back to the early days of Rugby. . . . The redoubtable trio—Stalky, Beetle, and McTurk—have no end of schemes to work mischief to their victims. . . . One cannot fail to feel a hearty admiration for certain manly qualities these boys have."—LOS ANGELES HERALD.

"It looks to me as if in 'Stalky & Co.' Kipling has tried to do for England and the world what Mark Twain has done for America and the world, namely, show the national boy as he is; and I believe the judgment of the world will be that he has succeeded. The tone of this book is first-class, and the boys who read it will get the kind of help that counts."—BOSTON TIMES.

"The boys are certainly true English schoolboys and there is nothing of the effeminate or over-nice about them. Many of their pranks are of the dreaded practical-joke order, but, after all, they are honest and straightforward, which is the main thing. . . . Mr. Kipling's boy heroes have no hesitation in asserting their judgment on all the affairs of the world. . . . The impression left by the book is that of a fine, true, and upright set of young fellows."—CINCINNATI TIMES-STAR.

"What Kipling has tried to bring out is the manliness of the three youngsters whom he makes his heroes, and in a final story he shows how the traits of ingenuity, daring, and bravery which they displayed at school were found in after years in their work as soldiers and administrators in India. No one can read these stories without some affection for the boys who are merciless in their dealings with cowards and bullies and tyrants, and who develop a reliable cunning in setting traps for sharp(illegible) masters."—SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE. royalty from time immemorable. But "The King's Mirror" contains more than this, for through its pages a new element is developed which is usually shunned by romanticists—the evolution of character. The dramatis personæ respond quickly to the conditions which are supposed to shape their course, and with the incidents of love and adventure are mingled clear-cut personalities which provoke the illusion of reality. "The King's Mirror" is accompanied with a series of artistic and effective drawings done by Mr. Frank T. Merrill.

NEPHELE. By Francis William Bourdillon. (The "Angelus" edition.) 12mo. New York: New Amsterdam Book Company. $1.

The "Angelus" edition of this musical romance, by the author of "The Night Has a Thousand Eyes, the Day but One," has for frontispiece a superb reproduction of Millet's masterpiece, "The Angelus." Copies of the edition are also bound in white vellum, with title and design in gold, making a most appropriate gift for a person who is at all interested in the romantic literature of music. The charm of the tale is said to resemble a strain of soft, sweet music, which it certainly may inspire in certain minds; or, it recalls the haunting memory of some half-forgotten melody. No attempt has been made by the author to force the illusion of dramatic poetry. But, although written in prose, the illusion is there nevertheless. The book has, too, an allegorical significance, which is said to appeal with especial force to the skilled and sympathetic musician. Withal, it is a musical novel, and deals with actual life and character, which, set apart from their particular sphere, would have immense human interest all the same.

THE GENTLEMAN FROM INDIANA. By Booth Tarkington. New York: Doubleday & McClure Company. $1.50.

"The Gentleman from Indiana" is a Western tale told by a Western man; moreover, it is the author's first book. But possibly more significant than all is the fact that some of the reviewers have seen in the book the evidence of a new school of fiction, if not as regards style, at any rate as far as genre literature is concerned. Evidently the reading public has been curious to discover whether these opinions were worth anything, for the book has already sold well into its twentieth thousand. At least the author of "The Gentleman from Indiana" has produced an exceedingly strong and realistic novel of the Middle West, and as a first book it augurs for its author speedy recognition as the interpreter of a certain phase of human nature which must appeal to Americans at large. Mr. Tarkington's canvas is small, but he works in his figures with much care of detail and with discriminate proportion. People who have lived in the part of the West where the scene of his story is principally laid all say that his pictures of a country editor's life are extraordinarily real, while at the same time Eastern readers of his tale are said to be charmed with the delicacy and romance of the love story that forms the basis of it all and which of itself will for many sustain the interest in the book until the last page.

What first attracts the eye of the reader who would peruse this delightful little Christmas tale by Mr. Page are the color illustrations and the pleasing effect of the general make-up of the book. The pictures, which are done in color by Mr. W. Glackens, are worthy of special note, not only because they are beautiful to look upon, but because the introduction of this kind of picture work in book illustration has a deep meaning for the future of book-making. There are seven of these pictures, which are conspicuously in advance of the color work done by the same artist for the Scribner Magazine of August last. As to the story itself, it may be noted that this is the first presentation of the tale, which is fashioned to appeal to the universal human heart at the most humanly suggestive period of the year. Mr. Page tells how a child wrought a transformation in the character of a business man whose nature had become hard and selfish in the pursuit of wealth. Admirers of the author's "Marse Chan" will find in the Christmas story the same charm of manner and tenderness of feeling, even though the scene is changed to a great Northern metropolis teeming with life and the rush for bare existence or for great riches.

RIP VAN WINKLE AND THE LEGEND OF SLEEPY HOLLOW. By Washington Irving. (Thumb-Nail Series.) Introduction by Mr. Joseph Jefferson. New York: The Century Company. $1.

A new edition of Washington Irving's masterpieces, presented in the Thumb-Nail Series of the Century Company, has several important features which other issues of the works do not possess. In the first place the introduction to "Rip Van Winkle" has been written by the veteran actor Mr. Joseph Jefferson, whose gentle and human interpretation of the humorous, invincible Rip has given so much joy to thousands of persons, old, young, and middle aged. The importance of an introduction from such a pen must at once appear obvious. For thirty years Mr. Jefferson has been identified with the character of the traditional Dutch-American dreamer of the Catskills. In the introduction the actor writes of the legend of the sleeper, and relates the changes that were necessary to make in the original story in order that it might be set properly upon the stage. The little book contains a couple of artistic illustrations, one for each of Irving's tales, by Relyea. The form of the volumes of the Thumb-Nail Series, it will be recalled, is about 2½ by 4 inches. The covers of "Rip Van Winkle" and the "Legend of Sleepy Hollow" are embossed leather, upon the front of which is represented a frolic of Hendrik Hudson and his merry crew.

MISTRESS CONTENT CRADOCK. A Historical Tale of New England Life in the Time of Gov. Winthrop and Roger Williams. By Annie Eliot Trumbull. One volume. 12mo. Cloth. Illustrated. New York: A. S. Barnes & Co. $1.

Annie Eliot Trumbull's romance is a story of the Colonial period, and the author shows how thorough is her comprehension of the early times. It is a study of primitive New England life, simply but most effectively told. The thread of the romance is never tangled, and the descriptions delicately wrought up and the dialogue entertaining. Lovemaking may have been fairly formal a century ago, but never stilted, for passion always must have found its proper expression. "Mistress Content Cradock" is, above all else, a thoroughly wholesome story and attractive in every way.

THE LEGIONARIES. A Story of the Great Morgan Raid. By Henry Scott Clark. 12mo. Cloth. Gilt top. Illustrated. Indianapolis, Ind.: The Bowen-Merrill Company. $1.25.

Mr. Henry Scott Clark tells in good style such adventures as befell his hero, John Trenham, who followed Morgan during the war of secession. Morgan was a military genius, and as a cavalry leader was second to none. He had all the boldness and dash of the rabbler, but showed at the same time that he was a great deal of a strategist. Trenham follows in Morgan's lead, and there is much that actually did happen in Mr. Clark's romance. There is a well-worked-up love episode in the romance, and it is just one of those cases where the man and the woman took different sides. The author is impartial. The prowess of Federal and Confederate soldier is fully acknowledged. The incidents are cleverly arranged, the salient traits of hero and heroine well contrasted, and, as it should be, the denouement is happily arranged.

THE THREE MUSKETEERS. By Alexandre Dumas. Illustrated. Boston: Little, Brown & Co. 2 vols. 8vo. $2.50.

Thackeray's brave, kind, gallant old Alexandre, the same new that he was in the best past years when his jovial, swelling could read him thirteen hours of a happy day, cuts such a figure in this holiday edition as would have delighted both him and the hero after his own heart, D'Artagnan. Conceive their raptures over covers of royal red, emblazoned with the three silver-sheathed swords bound with a ribbon bearing their owners' motto, "All for one, and one for all"; over the pictures representing the four shining in velvet and lace or tatterdemalion with fighting and riding, and twice as real as the portraits of actual personages inserted here and there! Little would any Porthos or D'Artagnan, and not too much would Athos, have cared for the good paper and clear print, but they would have improvised Aramis and Dumas himself, as they will impress their admirers. Is it possible that any one needs to be told that Aramis, Porthos, and D'Artagnan wander about seventeenth century France gone brawling with a stray traveler, now diverting royal intrigues to please themselves, now the tools of the Cardinal, but always freedom, brave, and irresistible, always friends to the reader, whatsoever they may be to those who challenge them or plot against them?

THE QUEEN'S TWIN. By Sarah Orne Jewett. Illustrated. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co. $1.25.

"The Dunnet Shepherdess," the second story in this volume, which takes its name from the first, is the prettiest imaginable account of the thwarted love of a man and woman whose lives are controlled by their mothers, dependent upon them. Probably neither had ever heard of Charles Lamb, but they followed his advice, cultivated the natural affections, and were happy. The book contains two good Irish stories and four of simple village life. The first describes the whim of a woman who, knowing that Queen Victoria's age is the same as her own, makes her determined to follow the royal movements from day to day, regarding and surveying as coincident. The pretty, barbarous fancy heightens her life and readily outwits her in trouble.

DOROTHY AND HER FRIENDS. By Flora Haines Loughead. Illustrated. Boston & Co. $1.25.

Dorothy's grown-up friends were delightful to know; not the stupid sort of men and women whose times and seasons, evenings and goings, are all for their own selfish and unimportant interests, but persons who held place for children—place which, like Hester's affection, came of. True, Cousin Bess's plan for a long day in town, with shad and green peas and dragonflies and ice cream and strawberries for dinner, did not quite IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT OF A NEW FINE ART WORK ILLUSTRATING EVERY PICTURE IN THE NATIONAL GALLERY.

The National Gallery

EDITED BY
SIR EDWARD J. POYNTER, P. R. A.,
Director of the National Gallery
Issued under the Sanction and with the Authority of the Trustees of the National Gallery.

MESSRS. CASSELL AND COMPANY, LIMITED, have the Pleasure of announcing that a work of unique character and importance, upon the preparation of which they have been engaged for some years past, is now approaching completion and will shortly be published.

This work, which Messrs. Cassell undertook on the suggestion of the Trustees of the National Gallery, is a COMPLETE ILLUSTRATED CATALOGUE of the whole of the paintings in the National Gallery.

There will be an introduction by the editor, and such notes as are additional to the descriptions of the official catalogue will give his personal views on the characteristics and authenticity of some of the principal pictures in this National Collection.

Every picture in this collection has been specially photographed for the purpose of this work, the artistic production of which has been under the special supervision of Mr. Edwin Bale, R. I.

The work will be issued in three volumes, in paper covers, and will contain about 1,060 pages and between 1,300 and 1,400 illustrations. It will be the most complete catalogue of any national collection of works of art that has yet been published in any country in the world, and will be in itself a sumptuous monument to the wealth, learning, artistic taste and public spirit that have gained for the National Gallery its present supreme reputation among the picture galleries of Europe.

Volumes I. and II. will deal with the old masters (foreign schools), and will be published early in December, 1899.

The third and concluding volume, dealing with the British masters and modern schools, including the pictures at the National Gallery of British Art (Tate Gallery), will be published in the autumn of 1900.

This EDITION DE LUXE will be limited to 1,000 copies—which will be numbered The allotment to the United States market is 250 copies.

The size of the paper on which the work is printed will be 12¼ in. by 8¼ in., and there will be large margins to the pages.

The price to subscribers will be $35.00 the set, net, up to the time of the publication of the concluding volume, after which the price per set will be increased.

Applications for copies may be forwarded at once, and will be registered in the order received.

come off, but through its failure Dorothy became acquainted with Jinny, a bewitching street waif. As for her expeditions with her aunt, who collected old-fashioned furniture from quaint homesteads, and with Captain Narraway, who knew exactly how many clams a bushful of children could eat after four hours' sail, they were brilliantly successful. Her child friends were as active as their elders. Did not Jim and Guy contrive to celebrate the glorious Fourth of July in such style as to have a bill to pay for 312 broken panes of glass, and did they not consequently resort to arithmetic of a species to delight any child from the third grade upward? And did not one of the girls contrive to be left upon a small strip of land always submerged at high water? As for Dorothy, she is as sweet a maid as ever set a sailor hat above pretty curls and steady, kind eyes, and all the other girls should be the friends of the little gentlewoman.

VIA CRUCIS. By F. Marion Crawford. Illustrated. 12mo. New York. The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

In his new novel Mr. Crawford places his scene of action at the time of the second crusade. On a large canvas he attempts to present a picture of the primitive Christian and his environment, and to contrast these with the life of the Middle Ages, the splendor of the great French and German barons, and the abject misery of the poor of that age. The story closely follows the career of a young English knight, whose fortunes become closely linked with Queen Eleanor. There is plenty of intrigue, love, romance, and adventure displayed in the study of the character of the young knight, whose simple convictions are opposed to the complicated temptations of the beautiful mediæval world. But in the end he emerges victorious, and with his convictions unchanged. The motif of the book appears to be to show that the simplest and most primitive forms of Christian belief and worship make the highest standard for the civilization of all ages.

SARACINESCA. By F. Marion Crawford. Illustrated. 8vo. In two volumes. New York. The Macmillan Company. $4.

This is perhaps Mr. Crawford's most famous novel, for not only has it been widely read in this country, but French and Italian translations of the book have appeared. It was in "Saracinesca" that the charming series of romances concerning Italian life and character had its beginning. Here we have a graphic picture of Roman society in the last days of the temporal power of the Vatican, into which are woven intrigue and incidents of great intensity. The announcement, therefore, of an elaborately illustrated edition of this work should have much interest for the reading public. The new edition is presented in two volumes, and contains twelve full-page photogravure illustrations by Orson Lowell, and many other drawings and head and tail pieces by the same artist in the text. Several of the pictures might well stand by themselves as works of art. In making his drawings Mr. Lowell has paid close attention to the period of Italian history in which the characters of "Saracinesca" lived, and his figures are presented with proper surroundings and in the dress of their period.

MISCELLANEOUS.

UNDER THE MICROSCOPE. By Algernon Charles Swinburne. Hand-made paper. 250 copies only. Portland, Me. Thomas B. Mosher.

"Are we crance or mice, that we should give battle to the frogs or the pigmies?" That is what Mr. Algernon Charles Swinburne wrote in "Under the Microscope" when he went south and call for Robert Buchanan, for Buchanan had made a rough attack on Rossetti, Swinburne, and Morris. Mr. Swinburne's reply was published some twenty-seven years ago. At once the edition was absorbed, the price being then 2s. 6d. To-day if found, you may pay 3 guineas for the book. If it contains a particular leaf where Tennyson caught it heavily you would have to pay £10 for it. The book being then so scarce, Mr. Thomas B. Mosher has reproduced it in his inimitable style, and it is admirable in type and paper.

FABLES IN SLANG. By George Ade. Herbert Stone & Co. Chicago.

Mr. George Ade, in "Fables in Slang," catches on to the current vernacular, and presents episodes in life with "a moral" in a most amusing manner. He shows keenness of perception, decked with much humor. The irony is hardly of the mordant kind. You may wince a little, but then you find that the lesson imparted is an evidence of the writer's sympathy. Doc Horne is a curious character, and has to be considered. It is a commentary on American life and fully worthy of attention. Mr. Howells says of this character that it "is not a strident or extravagant note in a picture painted with such temperate skill." In this criticism the same authority believes it to be "a type of an American growing leisure and farm." We may not agree with Mr. Howells in regard to "Doc Horne." We think it a recurrent type, and as much alive and dominant to-day as in the past.

JAMES'S TALKS TO TEACHERS ON PSYCHOLOGY AND TO STUDENTS ON SOME OF LIFE'S IDEALS. By Prof. William James of Harvard. 12mo. New York. Henry Holt & Co. $1.50 net.

Prof. William James's "The Principles of Psychology" and "The Will to Believe" have secured for him many readers. The volume with the title "Talks to Teachers and to Students on Some of Life's Ideals" will widen his already acquired reputation. Mr. Henry James (Prof. William James's brother) more or less vaguely explains peculiar doctrines in his romances. Prof. William James's endeavor is to specialize psychology and to lay down for us as far as he is in his power its particular laws. A portion of the volume having appeared in The Atlantic at once attracted attention. In the work under review the eloquent head of psychology and the teaching art, the stream of consciousness, the child as a believing organism, the necessity of repetition, the laws of habit, the association of ideas, interest, attention, memory, the acquisition of ideas, the will, the gospel of relaxation, on a certain blindness in human beings, what makes life significant.

NAVAL YARNS, OR, SEA POETRY AND MUSICAL PROSE. THE AIRS AND FREE STRAINS FROM MEMORY. Collected and edited by W. H. Long. Illustrated. New York. Francis P. Harper.

There are innumerable sea stories floating around to-day, and many of great merit. Readers of sea adventure are omnivorous, and the modern tendency of writers seems to show that at least in the American commercial marine Captains and mates rule rovers with an unfortunately heavy hand. In Mr Long's "Naval Yarns" there is little or anything of this character. The volume tells of sea adventure, beginning as far back as 1588, and concludes with the battle of Navarino, some three-quarters of a century or more ago. A gore English ship sails from Zante, and is attacked by a Turkish fleet, and the English ship's Captain is a hero and beats off the Turks. The gallant deeds of the English seamen—truthful ones, without humor or exaggeration—find their place in "Sea Yarns." Highly entertaining are the letters Jack writes home to his mother or his sweetheart telling of the part he played. Old sea phrases are recalled. The duties of officers in the last century are given. One notable part of the book is devoted to the experiences of a naval surgeon on board an English man-of-war during the war with Spain and France.

AN ALPHABET OF CELEBRITIES. By Oliver Herford. 4to. Boston. Small, Maynard & Co. $1.50.

Mr. Herford, less considerate than Dr. Holmes, always dares to be as funny as he can, and the wicked glee with which he groups persons incongruous and antipathetic and shows them doing things impossible to them, and doing them at the most absurd times and seasons and in places manifestly inaccessible to them, and makes pictures of them, is a thing to shock the Grundyists and dismay the Chadbands. Each letter of the alphabet has its group and season, and the quiet-minded reader turns each leaf in the full conviction that jokes must be exhausted and that something serious and truly instructive will appear on the next page, but to him cherishing such visions come only laughter and another jest, and, like Brobdingnag, he remembers the crackling of thorns, and wishes that he could write something similar. The book has borders and letters designed by Mr. Bertram Goodhue, and is printed in two colors to divert the reader's mind from the jokes, lest laughter be fatal to him.

BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG.

It has long been the theory of educators that the best results in the education of youth are reached through making instruction an adjunct of interest. That this aim has now become general the latest text-books show. Many of these books have their value as mediums for the transmission of knowledge in the design to kindle the imagination or curiosity, as the case may be. Then there is a class of books which, while not exactly textbooks, nevertheless are intended to impart knowledge to the youthful mind by explaining natural and mechanical phenomena which come under the eye in daily life. Mr. Baker's new book belongs to this class. Therein the author relates for the benefit of the younger generation some of the most noteworthy marvels of modern science, such as the automobile, wireless telegraphy, submarine boats, flying machines, great bridges,

&c.—in fact, those inventions of the moment the experiments about which the newspapers of the day are filled. All these subjects are adequately illustrated. Such a volume should appeal to the youthful mind, for its fascination is only equaled by its value of instruction.

ST. NICHOLAS CHRISTMAS BOOK. By various authors. Square 8vo. New York: The Century Company.

The Century Company has compiled in a square volume of about 250 pages several selections of the most distinctive matter in prose, verse, and pictures that has appeared in the columns of St. Nicholas in recent years. What these selections are may readily be imagined when one considers the high character of the St. Nicholas as a magazine for the young. The long list of special and constant contributions has been carefully examined, and the result is an especially attractive volume, consisting of stories, sketches, poems, and illustrations, which serve as an adequate representation of the periodical in which they first appeared, hence forming a most admirable gift book for boys and girls. Among the better-known authors represented in the selections are Miss Wilkins, Mrs. Wiggin, and Mrs. Mary Mapes Dodge.

MOTHER GOOSE'S NURSERY RHYMES. Illustrated. 8vo. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company. $1.75.

A recent report on the question of juvenile eduction pointed out that the growing use of bad English and ungrammatical expressions among school children were owing principally to two causes, illiteracy of parents and the falling off in the practice to teach the little ones those nursery rhymes which have become classic in the English language. From this the conclusion may be drawn that the "Mother Goose" songs that have just been presented by the Lippincotts, while they may be familiar to most of us, are not so familiar to the child of the period. But the principal feature of the book is the way in which the artist F. Opper has interpreted the tales told in rhyme. He gives expression to his idea in 260 pictures, which, to judge from this artist's former work, may be depended upon to have caught the point of the worthy old lady's wit. In fact, a child may be invited to the illusion that the rhymes were written around the text and not vice versa. The pictures are never coarse, and strikingly appeal to the sense of fun of adults as well as that of the little ones.

PICTURES AND RHYMES. By Peter Newell. Square 8vo. Cloth, Ornamental. With colored top. New York: Harper & Brothers. $1.25.

It is a new and original style of comic picture, for which Mr. Peter Newell is to be credited. He draws funny children. He gets at their gawkiness. Theoretically, all children are graceful, but practically they are not. The little ones are not invariably sylphs. The wholesome, natural young one is Mr. Peter Newell's subject. If your own little boy or girl in the embodiment of grace you are quite positive that somebody else's offspring are of a different build. Mr. Peter Newell draws them somebody else's children. The rhymes are as original as are the sketches. "Simple Simon" always will be the most delightful of jingles, and that naïve hero may be the source of many of Mr. Peter Newell's inspirations. Mr. Gunga, in his introduction to "Peter Newell's Pictures and Rhymes," writes that "it is Peter Newell's mission to bring laughter into the world, and he succeeds beyond measure, and always clearly, cleanly, and humanly."

ALICE IN WONDERLAND; THROUGH THE LOOKING GLASS. By Lewis Carroll. Illustrated with twenty-two plates in color from the drawings of Blanche McManus. Two volumes. Quarto. Decorative cover design and end papers. The set $5. Each volume $3.50. New York: H. F. Marshall & A. Wessels.

The test of the popularity of "Alice in Wonderland" or "Through the Looking Glass" is the thumbing out of them. The mother and her little ones have spent delightful hours over these books, and from usage, no matter how tender may have been the handling of them, Alice and the Queen, likewise the walrus, have been frayed to tatters. There cannot be then too many editions of Lewis Carroll's books, for the supply only meets the demand. It may be that John Tenniel's pictures are as much a part of "Alice in Wonderland" as were Hablot Browne's sketches a portion of "Pickwick." But illustrators may break new ground, and Blanche McManus shows a fine appreciation of the text. "Are their heads off?" shouted the Queen. All their heads are on and well poised in the new Lewis Carroll books, and lovely Christmas gifts will they be.

CAPTAIN KODAK. By Alexander Black. Boston: Lothrop Publishing Company. 8vo. $1.

If there must be stories of boys' games, much more should these be fiction centred about a pursuit like photography, which is almost sure to be a lifelong amusement and may be the gateway to a pleasant avocation or even to important scientific discovery, and so Mr. Black has done well to give this volume to the children. No one could be better qualified to reveal the myriad devices by which the skilful photographer dodges mother or spoon to cheat him of his picture, and even contrives to supply his own light and to blend two pictures in one, and few writers could make a more agreeable story of the doings and sayings of youngsters to whom the mysteries of the art are undefiled. Specimens of all manner of photographic art to be found in the book, photographs by daylight, flashlight, moonlight, and rathlight, photographs in and out of doors, photographs to amuse envy, and one or two to revive the drooping spirits of the unsuccessful. Captain Kodak will lead not a company, not a regiment, but an army into camp-orchard.

FATHER GOOSE. His Book. By L. Frank Baum. Illustrated by W. W. Denslow. 4to. Chicago: George M. Hill Company.

Over and over again we turn the leaves of "Father Goose, His Book," and are more and more pleased with the text, the pictures, and the excellent make-up and typography of the volume. Even if you are the illustrator of a child's book, you may exhibit true artistic ability and just this rare trait Mr. W. W. Denslow possesses. Mr. Frank Baum's idea has its originality, and Mr. Denslow catches on to the fancy and gives you three pages replete with what is true comicality. The publishers are to be complimented on the care shown in the manufacture of the book, the clearness and strength in the coloring of the prints, and somehow, though this be a book for little ones, it is good to know that every letter in it has been the handiwork of a real artist, whose name is Ralph Fletcher Seymour. In the class of juveniles or holiday books this "Father Goose" is a typographical event.

WARNER THE MAGICIAN. By Mabel Osgood Wright. Illus. Illustrated. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.50.

This book, which is a sequel to "Tommy-Anne" and "The Three Hearts," is a quaint story of child life with nature interwoven with numerous Indian legends. In it the reader meets many old favorites, save grown older, while Waldhu, the famous dog in "Tommy-Anne," is supplemented by a St. Bernard pup, Lumbertoes by name. Waboos, it should be said, is the Indian equivalent of the god Pan, the spirit of wild nature, who is made to answer the innumerable questions that juvenile minds conceive. The pictures in the book, which are intended to lend suggestiveness and vitality to the text, are the work of Joseph M. Gleason. Some idea of the subjects treated of may be gained from the titles of a few of the chapters: "The Dream Pan," "The Man of the Moon," "Adam the Honey Bee," and "The Story of Bob-Whit the Arrow."

SOLDIER RIDDALE. By Everett Mayo Dick. Illus. Illustrated. New York: The Macmillan Company. $1.25.

In this story the author of "Hugh Gwynn" relates the life and adventures of Miles Riddale, who with his household sailed on the Mayflower for New Plymouth. He is a youth full of promise, and soon becomes known to Capt. Miles Standish, whom he at once sets up as a hero worthy of imitation. Young Riddale, who becomes an orphan soon after the landing of the Pilgrims, is placed in the household of a severe Puritan, where, under the influence of a disagreeable serving man, he gets into much mischief. Finally he takes his little sister Dolly and runs away into the woods and for some time lives among the Cape Cod Indians, until an expedition from Plymouth rescues him. Capt. Miles Standish, in spite of the boy's faults, perceives his liking for him, and finally takes Riddale to live with him. The historical characters in the tale are said to be drawn with much care, and people competent to judge have declared that a true picture of the period, so far as it pertains to the youthful hero, is properly presented.

A Request Granted with Much Pleasure.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

You make mention of books reaching large circulations, and promise on issue on Dec. 9 giving a list of 100 books best adapted for purchase in the holiday season. The centennial edition of Thayer's poems was published at the end of April last—4,000 copies. In seven months 2,000 copies have been sold, which for a volume of poetry is thought to be and is a phenomenal sale.

As the entire profit is for a public memorial, as 1,000 copies only remain for sale to accomplish this result, as nothing could well be to better taste than this charming volume for a Christmas present, would it not be a gracious recognition of the success so far achieved to mention these interesting facts in your coming issues? The Times Saturday Review has heretofore so favorably mentioned Thayer's poems that I feel that the association in approaching a very friendly journal in making this request. The South unfortunately has few literary favors to ask. Will you not grant this?

ELBERT HUBBARD

His Interesting Career and the Roycroft Shop, Where He Helps Sell Things.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW by

Col. Richard J. Hinton.

It has been through a series of "Little Journeys" that my admiration for Elbert Hubbard has grown. There's a theme under both ends, yet the man impresses me as compounded of Dante and Cyril rather than Mike Angle and fair-haired Saxon. It was by a little journey to the "Roycroft Shop" and the author-workman's home in East Aurora, Western New York, that I have come to have something more than admiration for this kindly wit and scientific essayist, with his ability and philosophy of indifference, or "What's the use?" Yet, after all, he is not easily known. Indeed, we do not know a real man by so slight a thing as a "little journey." Perhaps there is only one thing in life that is reckoned in this way—the marriage ring, to the contrary of which there is usually necessary a sufficient number of happily concluding and consecutive "Little Journeys."

Yet my Roycroft trip has enabled me, in its vibratory responses, I think, to arrive at Elbert Hubbard in some marked degree. Of the "Philistine" I have heretofore had but a fugitive apprehension; of the artistic enterprise known as the "Roycroft Shop," I had but a slight comprehension, and was taken "on suspicion," as the Roycrofters say when their dainty books are sent out on approval. Of course, I was by no means unaware of the existence of magazine or shop, and I had eagerly read two of the Hubbard novels, while my eyes had been delighted with the charming representation of the Venetian printers which the Roycroft Press sends forth. But still, before going to East Aurora I had learned to know my genial host through the charm found in the dainty pages of "Little Journeys" up and down the world of letters, and in and out of many varied corners of this old world in search of the abiding places of men and women whose footprints are reverenced and whose homes are "household words."

Is it not he pen which brings Barbizon before us in revealing the personality of the painter peasant, Millet, in a way that not even the mystic insight of the poet, Edwin Markham, has done? He makes us see that Jean François did not belong to Paris. "He love," writes Hubbard, "can rustics build a nest in an ostrich?" The commonness of the inquiry makes one wish to remark that it might be done if a "hen" became stationary instead of a vehicle. That the painter's wife was "neutral salts" is another of the swift touches, sometimes acrid with smoke, and always pungent in flame, he sets on fire to illumine the pathway o'er which we make with him the "Little Journeys." Then, too, with what a wide and illuminant sweep he can dower the shadows, and open great vistas, as he does, by reminding us that epochs and men come together. Wagner opened his eyes in 1813; Millet his eyes in the following year, and Walt Whitman both and all of his senses five years later, in 1819.

Revolutionaries were they all. One aim in art—that of sincerity—is the Hubbard interpretation. Of Millet he writes that his pictures could "not be anything else than what they are." Wagner, whose ears were attuned to cosmic music, felt utterly that we must "cast ourselves with contentment bend into the arms of Nature," and the "Good Gray Poet" always felt that the light of culture must be its simplicity. All of them demanded freedom for art, and held out for that absolute individuality therein which strikes amid the varying latitudes the counter and corrective note of warning.

Hubbard ascribes to Millet terms the original theory of education which he found in a brief college career, but whether he benefited by it or not, he has himself mastered a style of grace and power, especially in the penned etchings wherewith I write. These stand out shell-like on the background of dainty type and paper as if the thoughts and the words they wear are a cuticle of the finest and cleanest cut of nature designed. Turn, for example, to the Mme. Cheron "Journey" and read the graphic portrait of Father François, curé of the little village church wherein the epistle of quietism was married, and sometimes came to her and worship and sudden confessional, and within whose rustic walls still float the subterranean echoes of Fénelon's voice: "He was tall, slender, and straight," writes the American, "grave, yet not depressed. His face showed such feminine delicacy of feeling, such grace, such high intellect, that I stood and gazed as I might on a statue of bronze." It is worth noting as we pass that this latter epithet, this keen mastery of irony, this witty yet withal gentle humanist, always has a feminine characterization for still virile but finer susceptible touch.

East Aurora, seventeen miles from Buffalo, has no pretensions and few charms. It is near enough to a great city to feel its smut, perhaps; it is far off, lonely, and simple enough to give rest as a residence spell to bourgeois Buffalonians who have gloomiest homes therein. It has the usual accompaniments of an American country town of 3,700 inhabitants and a rugged farm country round about. Its roads are wide and well lined with trees. It has a public school building that won my approval, set as it was, broad, simple, and unpretentious, roomy, only two stories high and with well-lighted floor, amidst the misty gray-blue sky—in an ample space of emerald verdure and shadowing trees. The village had another attraction to me in [illegible]

[illegible] the Roycroft shop and the "Athenæum." For it contains the famous Honolulu Bishop Piers, the piano whereon the finest literary and poetic lions have lain and are being lured. It was a delight to visit this.

At the station I got into a light surrey and was driven to a graceful of a broad, quiet cross street which, in its form and central color, looked a little like a quaint village church, or rather a double one, set at angles with a small, pointed building, well lighted with broad windows, and an artistic cupola on a tower, that might be—that is, the entire building—taken at a first glance for a school or nursery. There were clean green steps, flanked by artistic iron railing and an open door, beyond which you could see pleasing lines and forms and catch a glimpse of light oak-panelled walls, open rafters, broad window, and busy activities. Two hands were outstretched, and a quiet, deep-toned, musical voice gave me a cheerful welcome to the Roycroft Shop, as a written invitation had already expressed. "Fra Elbertus" was before me.

A man of seventy years, good stature, five feet nine or ten, broad-shouldered, deep-chested, strong, well-knit frame, giving the aspect at a glance of an open-air man, fond of bicycle and used to the saddle. The face is strong in mold, texture, and general form, and of a purely modern and American type. It is that of the mid-Atlantic and Central States, a historic type, too, which many Pennsylvanians like John W. Forney and Daniel Dougherty have presented. It is a composite of English, Celt, and Dutch-Irish ancestry, the mold being modified by the Danish and Flemish or Walloon strains still so perceptible in the Midland shores and Welsh marches. Elbert is from Central Illinois, born at Bloomington, and belongs to the great wave of early pioneers that swept westward from the coastlines of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Virginia into the region redeemed next by the Central Western States. Elbert Hubbard has a striking head and face. Both are large, broad and round; the head being also high in the cerebral, and deep forward from the ears. The complexion is brunette, health-hued and weather-tanned. The features are somewhat massive, the nose especially being massively in mold. The face is clean shaven. The mouth and eyes are large, strong, yet tender in their understress. The Roycrofter's eyes are a deep hazel, with a strong flash of dark gray-shadowing and interwoven in repose, but swift in moving as they go. They are deep-set, with heavy, curvatious lids and long, well-arched brows. The forehead is high, and I could almost say "superb" in its shape and impressiveness, high and broad, deep and massive, it might be said to be Websterian but for a lightness of mould and play of thought which I found to be a constant trait. The voice is excellent. It has a deep cellar key in it like one who hears burdens, yet is cheerful withal. One might easily believe it could roll deeply and thunder loudly, too.

Hubbard's daily garb is not the least of his idiosyncrasies. He wears the soft felt hat of the Westerner, a dark-blue woolen business shirt with broad falling collar, a loose-flowing black silk tie, rolling boots, and black knickerbockers or pantaloons. He does not impress you as singular by his garb, but as a man who dresses only for his occupations and tastes, a combined rider—as horseback is chairs I found. He is not only both writer and editor, with abundant work thrown to fill every hour's press, but printer, leather former manufacturer, a consistent pioneer of advertising affairs and activities which belong to the overcoming of those several industries and the already large number of persons employed therein. Now he has added lecturing for the coming Winter. Elbert Hubbard is not a "business man with a literary attachment," as some one pertinently remarked, but he is primarily a literary man, deepening thereby a student and thinker glorified by incisive insight and a rare gift of felicitous expression. This is tempered with a lightning-tipped and fierce power of sarcasm that has also its heartening side. I think there is a possibility, if conditions surround it, of a tendency to humoristic expression. He can be heroic in emotions, and both the stage and their artists are in his spiritual vocabulary. In fact, Hubbard is more than writer, artist, organizer, or administrator; he is a man of large mould and many sides. He writes because he must express, he does many things because he must live much of what he writes, and he manages and edits an affairs because he is practically two strongly individualized to allow his nature to be exploited for some one else's benefit.

The author's home is a charming but not large dwelling next to the "Shop." They stand, in fact in the same grounds. They are a delightful home circle—Mrs. Hubbard, two sons, one of fifteen or so and the other of ten or eleven, and a little sunny-haired maid of three years, akin to the epoch, with all that that means. There are always visitors. The "Roycroft Shop" visitors have to filling with names known to us of honor and praise in the land. The Hubbard cottage is simple, yet elegant. The people who live in the house evidently do not make a burden thereof, yet it is individualized and comfortable, artistic yet plain, tasteful but not "literary." There are books enough to show wide reading and taste, but nothing of the collector or specialist. This author, who must have had a "large full ground somewhere," carries no rugs and scatters no space for fancies and prizes in his daily environment. One who knows him well says he writes anywhere on his knees, at his easy desk in the room where the apprentices are applied, or study generally in the "shanty," where his boys keep their guns and rods for hunting and fishing. I noted him for his books, and he laughed, saying: "I keep none. I'm hunting for things."

Have I written enough to show that my author at home presents a strong and attractive personality? I think so! But, after all, the real home of the man to-day is found in the "Roycroft Shop." He lives therein. Let us briefly see how it came to be and what it may presage. Some one has written of Hubbard as the American "William Morris." Of course he has learned, and greatly, too, from Kelmscott and what was done there, but he is no more Morris than he is "Koheleth" that the Talmudian scholar asserts wrote "Ecclesiastes," or the Moses who he asserts wrote the marvelous poem of "Job," that mighty outgiving of all human days which has been handed down to us from the heart and brain of a sage; the race that once builded greatness on the Arabian peninsula, and has long since been obliterated, or the shepherd king who chanted the song of songs—from all of whom this modern Philistine has drawn molding and enduring force for himself and the use he is making.

Elbert Hubbard is the son of a pioneer physician still living at Bloomington, Ill., in his eighty-fourth year. The son is just half that age. He is reported as having been indifferent as a schoolgoer. He began active life at twelve. He evidently got education, and in its better sense. Later he was at Harvard, but would not stay to be graduated. He worked as a farmer, laborer, shepherd, and miner. A printer, also, he has been a reporter and critic on daily papers in more than one city. He was for several years with a business firm in Buffalo, traveling constantly. This decided his place of residence, as he early bought land in the Erie village. He has bred horses, and traded them, also. "Ali Baba," the quaint old workman around whom Hubbard is weaving some of his wittiest essays and wisest sayings, has never forgiven the "Frater" for ceasing to swap horses and turning to make books. He thinks the former the more reputable. "Maybe he is right," remarks the "Philistine." Some years since Hubbard decided to give up commercial life. He wrote "Harvard Days," "No Enemy but Himself," and began the "Little Journeys," whose telling has already made a series of minor classics.

About five years since, in conjunction with a newspaper friend, he also began The Philistine. It was not expected to become permanent, but it was determined that it should be original as to matter, appearance, and distribution even, wherein Hubbard ignored the middleman. It succeeded, however. Out of that fact has grown "The Roycroft Shop." A village printing office was secured for The Philistine. Then came essays gathered and put into dainty volumes, as seems to me, "The Journal of Koheleth," "The Book of Job," and other striking booklets. On January, 1896, the present shop began and the "Academy of Immortals," as the list of constant subscribers to the art and hand-made books it produces is named. There are natural gas and electricity for light, heat and power, but all other work is done by hand. A dozen, not more, was the working force less than two years since. Now there are nearly 100 in the shop, half as many more are engaged out of doors laying pavements, working on the farm, &c., and building the Roycroft Library and studio structures. All the workers are village folk, except perhaps half a dozen, which include the artist, the sculptor-workman, Jerome Conner, who has been renamed by the Roycrofters "Gernone Roycroft," the German bookbinding expert from Leipsic, and the indispensable "Curator" and "Bursar" of the shop.

The former is a whole drama in his own person, and to Mr. Hubbard as the chief overlooker is beyond praise. The other function is filled by a lady, who is secretary, bookkeeper, and archivist. Wandering about the shop and grounds I counted nearly two hands. No orders, in the ordinary sense, are issued in this unique establishment. There are fifty young women engaged in the illuminated letter and border work. All this is carried out by hand. Borders, initials, floats, &c., are drawn for the Roycroft books only, and every one is colored in by these busy workers. This training of village maidens in one of the charming results achieved in so short a period. The bookbinding requires as fine tooling and as skillful direction, and it gets both. The presses demand the best of artisans, while the typesetting demands artistic compositors. The curator tells me that the weekly pay roll now required over $800 and enlarges steadily. Taking this as a basis, it is not difficult to figure out a business of $50,000 or more per year. The "Roycroft Shop" imports its hand-made paper from England. The leathers, vellum, boards, silks, &c., used in the binding are all imported also. It is proposed ere long to make all these at Aurora. It is thus to be seen that East Aurora is likely to become the seat of a marked revival of artistic handicraft work. William Morris's various "applied art" enterprises once employed over 3,000 hands. It is within the bounds of early possibility that the Roycroft may one at least 1,000 workers. The divisibility of power and the individualizing that follows of machine tools, like hitherto, looms, &c., may yet harness invention to permeate skill and restore to us the glory of good and honest work, which will delight the eye, serve the needs, and train also the souls of men.

"The Light of Scarthoy," a romance by Egerton Castle, which was brought out a short time ago by the Frederick A. Stokes Company, has now passed to its second edition.

CHILD LIFE.

Mrs. Earle's Account of It During the Colonial Period.*

"Child Life in Colonial Days" touches upon a most fascinating phase of American history. A number of books have been written about the lives and customs of the people of that period, imparting information having been given to a comparatively small extent with ours and of the primitive households already with our modern conveniences. But of the child life of Colonial days it has been left to Mrs. Earle to give the beautiful account. When we regard the large share which child study now in the interest of the master and thinker of society, it is curious to note how little is said of child life in history. The ancients kept no record of the life of young children, chronic Rome furnished little information on the subject, the Greeks left no child further to enlighten. The students of original sources of history learns little about children in his researches, for is number and meagre in quantity are the literary remains that even refer to them. But little of the child life of our immediate ancestors is known, and there is but scant opportunity to make comparisons and note progress. The child of the Colonial days was "to be seen, not heard," and even that much to be seen. He occupied a very minor position in the home and in society. He was of no little importance as his child successor is of great importance to-day. It was regarded as rude, discourteous, and unwise to make him figure as worthy of any merit in his own eyes or those of an elder. Hence there was no time spent in studying his motives, thoughts, and actions.

The information given in the present volume has been patiently gleaned from many reliable historical sources, and is told in a graphic and charming manner. "There is something inexpressibly sad in the thought of the children who crossed the ocean with the Pilgrims and the fathers of Jamestown, New Amsterdam, and Boston, and the infancy of those born in the first years of Colonial life in this strange New World. It was hard for grown folk to live; conditions and surroundings offered even to strong men constant and many obstacles to the continuance of subsistence. How difficult then was it to rear children!" But child life was in harmony with its environments. From the moment the baby opened his eyes on the bleak world about him he had a Spartan struggle for existence. He had to be baptized in the meeting-house within a few days of birth, regardless of health or weather. On Jan. 22, 1634, Judge Sewall of Boston made the following entry in his diary: "A very extraordinary storm by reason of the falling and drifting snow. Few women could get to Meeting. A child named Alexander was baptized in the afternoon." Indians often suffered their little tormentors as do babies to-day, and the wonderful variety of cheats did not contribute the elements to which they were resigned. Their short troubles did end and brief, for many a beautiful grave was enlivened with one of the following names: Experience, Ann, Prudence, Endeavors, Comfort, Comfort, Thankful, Desire, or Temperance perhaps.

Arrived at the proper age the little folks were sent to school. But the school life was a marked contrast to that of our children. The school teachers to the smallest and most Cimmerian were frequently found in degrading circumstances. Many of them were redemptioners and regarded ourselves, while a large number were officiating to the use of liquor. Scotland furnished the best and largest number of teachers to the Colonies. "In an old field school kept by Master, section, pedagogue, and the most convicted man in three parishes," George Washington received the most of his education, as did many other children. Universal children spent but little time at play. It was ordered by the Magistrates that every children engaged in wasting time or not the schools in the other work of the same time, such as a fault, knit, or weave tape. The making of birch splinter brooms was the boys' best-paying work. They were paid 6 cents apiece for them. The whittling of these pens was another challenging task for a young penknife harvest. Running and fishing were carved on both as functional and pleasure. The girls were taught housework and "all sorts of feminity work, like sewing, spinning at wheel, embroidering, Turkey work for bedcloths(two new ways, fine new fashion pieces, darning and plain work" to the first half of the eighteenth century. But the children nevertheless had their pleasures, games, and pastimes. Many of the games so familiar to us all were favorites then—tag, with its numerous varieties, cat's cradle, cup-and-ball, flying cards were known and prohibited by the Puritan fathers.

Mrs. Earle has devoted much space to the accurate description of children's costumes of the period, and these may be studied with great satisfaction from the excellent illustrations given, taken from portraits by the best artists of that time, including Smibert, Seibert, and Copley, also a few by Pratt, Trumbull, and Stuart.

The book is one of historical interest and value. It is one of the author's best efforts, replete with new information and complete in description. The volume is beautifully illustrated with about 100 pictures, many of them from photographs here produced for the first time. "Child Life in Colonial Days" is one of the handsomest of recent publications, a charming book for old or young.

HALF TONE DESCRIPTIVE LIST ON APPLICATION.

TWO CHRISTMAS BOOKS.

TRINITY BELLS, by Amelia E. Barr

Sixteen full-page Illustrations by C. M. Relyea. Green cloth, with silver bells. 8vo, $1.50.

"The name is happily chosen for this romantic story of life in New York City during the period preceding the war with the Mediterranean corsairs, for the bells of Old Trinity ring out an accompaniment to the changing fortunes of the lovable little Dutch heroine. There is a charm in Mrs. Barr's work that goes directly to the reader's heart, while her skill in the delineation of character is no less effective in its appeal to the mind."—THE BOOK-BUYER.

"AMELIA E. BARR'S 'TRINITY BELLS' is an interesting tale of New York, with plenty of local color. The story has a fine Christmas flavor, and the clever illustrations add materially to the value of the volume as a gift book."—N. Y. EVENING SUN.

"The charming little Dutch maiden who is the heroine of the tale will make an irresistible appeal to all who love a good, clean, wholesome story, that old and young may read with enjoyment."—DETROIT FREE PRESS.

LITTLE LEATHER BREECHES, by Francis P. Wightman.

THE NOVELTY OF THE SEASON.

Forty-eight full-page colored illustrations and cover by the author. Quarto, $1.50.
LITTLE LEATHER BREECHES is absolutely unique.
FOLK-LORE SONGS, NEGRO RHYMES, OMENS AND LEGENDS

"Nothing has appeared that is more full of genuine humor than 'Little Leather Breeches.' The rhymes and verses, the curious legends and omens, are so fresh, so full of humor, that they afford a feast to the lover of good nonsense. The pictures are exquisitely printed in colors and as full of spirit and originality as the verses."—LITERARY NEWS.

"'LITTLE LEATHER BREECHES' is a bit of rollicking fun. Exceedingly funny and grotesque illustrations, reproduced in colors. The novelty of the book and the value of its contents make the book attractive."—THE BOOK-BUYER.

NEW FICTION.

Zangwill's Ghetto Tragedies Again.*

"If reading" [illegible] is a debtor to that of I. Zangwill as the author of "The Bachelors' Club," and of his other humorous productions. It is difficult even to think of him as the author of "The King of the Schnorrers," so completely has the sense of tragedy taken possession of him. But there is really no great change in his manner of looking at life. "Ghetto Tragedies," written in 1893, and "Ghetto Comedies," written ten years later, are both stories of symbols and visions and religious emotions; both dignified by a keen appreciation of beauty in character, both marred by touches of wanton vulgarity, both rendered entirely unconvincing by the thread of lurid exaggeration with which the fabric of Mr. Zangwill's work is almost invariably overcast. Certainly no one can deny the strength in grasping a truth or his dramatic sense of contrast between reality and desire, but neither can we deny the tarnish on the surface of his style. He is rarely content to let pathos prove itself, he seldom lets a figure stand before us as it is, without excitedly drawing our attention to its peculiarities, he is lavishly prodigal where he should be infinitely reticent, no secret emotion is too precious for his gesticulating methods. To realize these defects we have only to think of him as the exponent of some race entirely familiar to us whose intimate associations have no mystery for us, and whose characteristics may be observed by us under every variety of circumstance. We should not then be grasping for the dividing line between qualities inherent in the people described and the superficial picturesqueness of dress with different traditions from our own and a consequently different aspect. As it is, we cannot feel entirely secure that our enlarged view of the Ghetto is not occasionally crossed by some mirage of Mr. Zangwill's imagination, and we instinctively reserve our judgment until some more laborious, more deliberate, and possibly less voracious writer has convinced us.

But if we can make up our minds to enjoy Mr. Zangwill's stories for their merits without questioning too closely the exactitude of his method, we shall find much to stir us in these accounts of a world in which beauty and squalor, high ideals and low ones, respect for law and for domestic relations, superstition, and enlightenment exist side by side as in our own world, but more closely pressed together, and more vividly seen against a simpler background.

In the story that gives to the collection its name the author seems to us to touch his high water mark. It reveals in its narrow range of characters nearly all of the attributes that have made the Jewish race from time immemorial bring forth illustrious sons. The shoemaker's wife, illiterate and vaguely superstitious, displays in her child's behalf the ingenuity of Michal, wife of David, and the intensity of Rachel. Her devotion is shown along profoundly simple lines. The boy is blind, he must be made to see; he is dying, and he must live. The world and its potentates shrink into insignificance in the face of these facts. The doctors are without encouragement, but an Irish charwoman tells her of the Pope and of miracles, and since the words have hope in them she clings to them, and finds her way with the child to Rome, the place of Raphael, whose name by a strangely comforting coincidence signifies "God's healing." Out of these scanty materials Mr. Zangwill has made a little history that no one having read can possibly forget. He sets against the ignorance of the mother the strain of genius in the son throwing into precocious scholarship before he reaches his thirteenth year. This contrast is marked by the details of their pathetic journey across the Continent, the boy reiterating inquiries prompted by his memories of many books, the mother answering from a darkness more dense than his physical blindness.

On the journey to Paris he mastered how to describe France. In vain she think, her untrained vision and poor vocabulary could give him no new elements to weave into a mental picture. "There were trees and many-limbed houses and churches. And again trees. What kind of trees?" Cream of Brain was in despair. France was then only like England; white cliffs without, trees and houses within. He demanded the latter at least.

"Yes, I see a great water," his mother admitted at last.

"That's it!" It rises in the Cote d'or, flows north-north-west, then west and south-west into the English Channel. It's more than twice as large as the Thames. Perhaps you'll see the tributaries flowing into it—the little rivers, the Oise, the Marne, the Yonne."

"No wonder the angels envy me him," thought Zilkah proudly.

With an unerring instinct for the fantastic wherever it occurs, Mr. Zangwill has found in the temperament of this mother, untouched by the multitudinous associations of France and Rome, an element of poetry beside which the boy's learning is utterly-eating. Her passion for symbolism finds food in every passing allusion and event. She learns the Hebrew benediction—"Blessed art Thou, O Lord our God, who openest the eyes of the blind"—to use it as a talisman, "a compromise with the God who had failed her." In her secret communings with herself we catch pitiful glimpses of a mist that flies like a homing pigeon across the confusion of intellectual beliefs to the sense of a Power that can heal, and in the rapid tragedy of her adventure there is not a single false note.

If Mr. Zangwill were always as fine as in these three productions there would be no difficulty in understanding his attraction for a large public. But his work as a whole has the fault so plainly perceptible in almost every individual production of the author—the confusion of the true and the false, the genuine and the counterfeit. From the two pastels of a Jewish girl, he suggests that nobody possessing any true appreciation of beauty could possibly contemplate the picture of the latter without disgust. If he showed his power and insight, his shallowness and lack of taste would be far less perturbing.

This Other Fellow is from nine years of age to seventy-five, and we find him of both sexes and of many classes, in widely separated localities of our own country, on an ocean steamer, in Paris, and in Venice. For the other figure in the list of characters other fellows described in eleven short stories of unequal merit, but all told with that artistry and charm that Mr. Hopkinson Smith would not know how to get rid of if he tried.

The good citizens of Troy, N. Y., satirized in "a water-logged town," i. e., Venice, and his optimistic painter with the "pigeon-winged hat—one of those hats that looked as if the pigeon had alighted on it and exploded," are simply delicious. So, also, a very different fashion, is another American tourist, P. Waverworth Shaw Todd, Esquire, while for pathos—well, don't try to read aloud "The Boy in the Cloth Cap" and don't make his acquaintance even in solitude without several extra pocket handkerchiefs. "Bob's Trump" and "Dick Heads, Convict," are almost equally disastrous to one's self-control, though the latter has as many humorous bits that we read it

> All life' o' smile mout' the lips,
> An' teary mout' the lashes.

There is such an air of sincerity about these stories that we accept them as facts; we are sure they really happened, and we feel the author to be great in having so an ignorant of reports. Surely some one lent a helping hand to that convict. Surely Bob did not give up the search for his young until he found him and made restitution. And, most surely of all, Mr. Hopkinson Smith's audience did not stop to hear the belated lecture, but saw the story of big dogs was concluded rushed pell-mell up the canvas, to adopt that little fellow in the yarn stockings and the cloth cap. Who cares upon the screw a large? We hand it back to the author. Like Miss Rose Darrie, we "want to know."

One story, unlike these tender sympathetic in every truth, "a brutal assault upon the feelings." It is not fair to invite the reader to a charming Southern luncheon with its mingled fragrance of roses and old wine, its dainty women and chivalrous men, and then to bring him up against a tragedy, not only harrowing to the soul, but filling it with impotent rage. We vaguely remember to have heard that the South was a little "grouchy" over Col. Carter of Cartersville, and it was a little uncertain whether the author would be received with open arms when he came to lecture in Richmond. If the fears reside "According to Law," we think there is no manner of doubt as to the kind of arms with which it will receive Mr. Hopkinson Smith the next time he visits it. The story is evidently intended to illustrate the difference between the kindly relationship of the old South to the old negro and the utter severance from those who have grown to man's estate since the civil war. These rare questions, however, are too complex and too delicate to be handled in the light touch and go of a short story. If the incident of "According to Law" be fictitious, it had no right to be written. We are inclined to believe it impossible, if not in the bare fact, certainly in the setting in which the author places it. It should never be forgotten that everywhere, regardless of latitude, it is the coarse fault, and not the cultured and refined, who are contemporaneous of an inferior race, and who lightly take human life. Even if Mr. Smith can prove that his hard picture is a faithful portrayal, we are sure he has not grasped the fact in all its bearings. There is always the other side as well as the other fellow.

Upon the whole, however, these stories not only sustain their author's reputation as a writer of humor, of pathos, and of rare artistic quality and charm, but they give proof of his steady improvement and a growing insight into the subtlety and tender sympathy with all sorts and conditions of men.

By Joel Chandler Harris.*

Mr. Harris can suffer from no comparison save with the preceding he has set for himself. "Plantation Pageants" is only less charming than "Uncle Remus" and "Aunt Minervy Ann." We think the author makes a mistake in erasing the perfect realism of the plantation tales with a sort of Arcadian-Watteauish business, such as Mr. Harris's naughty babies and the children understanding of the language of the "creatures." Nothing could be better than the opening chapter, "After the War." The description of the fat hand, all the negro characteristics, and Aunt Minervy Ann's two stanzas of our old friends, Brer Rabbit and Brer Fox. Like the children, we have not yet "done got our fill o' dem kitchen tales." As Aunt Minervy Ann says of herself, we "don't git tired wid 'em, kase de yearers am, all in dey delight, dey takes brother Sudie 'mong dey fine ones."

Young folks of every age will delight in "Plantation Pageants." A small circle of eight years sitting up to bed with drowsy yawning with excitement, as he listens to the narrative, avers that Mr. Harris has done nothing better, and closes his eyelids, remarking to the present humble pen: "Speak good of that book."

Like all of Mr. Harris's tales, "Plantation Pageants" is more than a delightful story. It contains not a little of the material from which, by and by, the true history of the great civil war and the dark days of reconstruction will be written.

Bret Harte's New Tales.*

Has anybody ever observed a queer habit of many of our best-known tellers of tales? When they have become thoroughly identified with a certain region, steeped, so to speak, in local color, they take up their abode in an atmosphere as different as possible from that of their early triumphs; and yet—here comes the marvel of it—their imagination seems to belong to the scenes and people they have left far behind. Mr. Page has a sumptuous Washington home, but his "astral body" continues to dwell on the old Virginia plantation; Mrs. Ruth McEnery Stuart has gone to cosmopolitan New York to write of her negroes; Mr. Cable's creoles flourish in New England air, and Mr. Bret Harte, from the culture and charm of his London environment, harks back always to the West as he knew it in his youth. Do our writers, in very truth, leave their country "for their country's good," that they may write of it all the better for having it outside of them, for getting it into proper perspective? Or, when they depart, do they go in quest of new material, of fresh types, and then find that the imagination is not a palimpsest, that early impressions are written too indelibly to be erased for those of later years? Only the authors themselves can answer.

At any rate, here is another volume of Mr. Bret Harte's tales, all Western, of course interesting and artistic, and, by no means, of course, all ending happily. "Thanks be!" as Mr. Dooley would say.

Something in the opening story, "Mr. Jack Hamlin's Mediation," reminds one of Mrs. Deland's more satisfactory "Good for the Soul," and the comparison is to Mrs. Deland's advantage. In another tale Mr. Bret Harte falls into an unaccountably universal error. He says: "He had created her—a beautiful Frankenstein." Now, in Mrs. Shelley's story, so often alluded to, so seldom read, Frankenstein was the creator, not the created. Since he seems to have become a familiar of literature, it would be well to put him in his right place.

Upon the whole, Mr. Bret Harte's large public—and who is not of it?—will find in this volume the pleasure his work never fails to give. They must not inquire too curiously into probabilities, but must yield themselves to the spell of the writer, and they will have their reward.

Questions and Answers.

"M. B. L.," Newtown, Conn.: "I am very glad to be able to supply the missing line in the song of 'The Rosebush,' asked for in your paper by Mrs. G. Bailey, 119 Prospect Place, Brooklyn. The second line of the third verse reads thus:

'Soft sigh the leaves in the evening air.'"

"B.," Albany, N. Y.: "It was stated in THE SATURDAY REVIEW that the first edition of Whitman's 'Leaves of Grass' appeared in Brooklyn in 1855. I have a copy which I thought a first edition, dated Brooklyn, 1856."

The 1856 edition is the second, with thirty-two poems; that of 1855 is the first, with twelve poems. There are two issues of this second edition, the earliest of which is dated "New York, 1856." Owing to criticism, says Foley, the New York publishers withdrew from its publication and the author issued it in Brooklyn in the same year. Two copies of this issue fetched, in 1897, $16.25 and $13, respectively.

Miss Kittie L. Edgerly, New York City: "Will you kindly inform me in THE SATURDAY REVIEW what books to read treating of the life of Bonnie Prince Charlie?"

"Life and Times of Prince Charles Edward Stuart, 1720-88," by A. C. Ewald, London, 1882; "The Countess of Albany," by Vernon Lee, London, 1884; "Jacobite Memoirs of the Rebellion, 1745," by Bishop Forbes, edited by Robert Chambers, 1834; "Life of Flora Macdonald and Her Adventures with Prince Charles," by A. Macgregor, Inverness, 1882; "History of the Macdonalds and Lords of the Isles," by A. Mackenzie, Inverness, 1881; "Tales of a Grandfather," by Sir Walter Scott, and most general histories of Scotland.

H. Meinecke, 32 Woodlawn Avenue, Jersey City, N. J.: "Please tell me where Robert J. Burdette now lives, and give me a list of his works."

Mr. Burdette lives in Bryn Mawr, Penn. His works comprise "The Rise and Fall of the Mustache and Other 'Hawk-Eyetems,'" Burlington, Iowa, 1877; "Hawkeyes," New York, Carleton, 1879; "William Penn," (American Worthies Series,) New York, Holt & Co., 1882; "Innach Garden and Other Comic Sketches," New York, 1886; "Modern Temple and Templars: Life of the Rev. R. H. Conwell," Silver, Burdett & Co., Boston, 1894; "Chimes from a Jester's Book: Stories and Sketches," Indianapolis, Bowen-Merrill Company, 1897, $1.25.

Thomas L. Boston, New Rochelle, N. Y.: "Where can I secure Cowper's poems? I have asked in several New York stores without success."

"Selections from the Poetical Works of William Cowper," published by Ginn & Co., 7 Tremont Place, Boston, at $1, is an excellent edition.

Jesse J. Goldberg, 320 Broadway, New York City: "May I inquire if there is any value attached to newspapers containing full accounts and descriptions of all battles and chief events of the Spanish-American war? I have the papers printed during this time."

Files of papers recording historic events are usually not valuable until many years have elapsed since the time of issue. Even then they are chiefly useful as libraries and DAY REVIEW's readers may be interested in our correspondent's papers.

"H. L. B.," New York City: "Where were the first editions of Holmes's 'Autocrat of the Breakfast Table' and Stowe's 'Tear in the Hebrides' published? Have they any especial value? Are the first editions of Prescott, Mrs. Stowe, and Bayard Taylor of value? If so, which ones? Are any of the American editions of Irving or Stevenson of value? What is the value of Thomas Jefferson's 'Notes on the State of Virginia,' Philadelphia, 1788, and of the first collected edition of Goldsmith's works, of York, London, 1780?"

"The Autocrat of the Breakfast Table" was first published in book form in 1858, and Boswell's "Tour" in 1785. The "Autocrat" is worth about $3.50, the latter the same sum. First editions of Prescott and Bayard Taylor are worth $1 or $2 each at auction. Mrs. Stowe's "Mayflower" (her first book) is worth, perhaps, $5, while "Uncle Tom's Cabin," first edition, is rare and valuable, (copies sold last season for $14, $20, and $28.) Her other works have no value. The first editions of Irving's "American Notes" and "Out of India" bring a few dollars each. Stevenson's "Amateur Emigrant," Chicago, 1895, is a first edition, and brought last season $3.25. A copy of Jefferson's "Virginia," Philadelphia, 1788, fetched a few months ago $3.25. Goldsmith's "Works," London, 1780, is worth a little more than this.

"E. S. D.," New York City: "In the history of drama has the successful novel been a successful play when produced upon the stage, omitting only those novels in which dramatic incident was present exclusively to current dramatization?"

It depends upon what our correspondent calls "dramatic incident." "The Three Musketeers" and "Under the Red Robe" are examples of the successfully dramatized novels containing dramatic incident. "Trilby" and "Uncle Tom's Cabin" also successful upon the stage do not contain dramatic incident according to "The Three Musketeers" standard, though many dramatic episodes may be found in them.

The Boston Journal: "A young reader," asks for some kind reader of THE SATURDAY REVIEW of THE NEW YORK TIMES the name of Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner." The young lady is "willing to pay" to find the name. Sitting on albatross. It is a most interesting bird, which, according to the student, does a mile in a rush and there makes no stop. This bird has two stomachs—one served the sole object of food, and the other the use to which the bird endowed. The albatross allowed Greeks upon its dwelling, and shares every person of any other nationality. It is not good eating, however cruelly it may be cooked."

"C. M. B.," Kalamazoo College, Kalamazoo, Mich.: "Will you kindly give me the names of books, and prices of the same, relating to the Philippine question and to the physical condition of expansion?"

Most of the books named below discuss also to a certain extent the question of expansion: "Our Country: Its Possible Future and Its Present Crisis," by Rev. J. Strong, D. D., Baker & Taylor Co., $1.25; "Political History of America's New Possessions," by Henry Rowland, Democratic Publishing Company; "Manila and the Philippines," by Stoddard, J. Thompson & Co., $1.50; "The Philippine Islands," by J. S. Foreman, Continental Publishing Company, $6.50; "The Philippines and Our Duty to Them," by Rev. Wm. Barrows, D. D., Houghton, Mifflin & Co., $1.25; "The Philippines and Our Duty to Their People," by Dean C. Worcester, the Macmillan Company, $1; "The Philippines and Round About," by O. J. Youngchusband, the Macmillan Company, $2.50; "The Story of the Philippines," by A. K. Finan, Frederick A. Stokes Company, $1; "Yesterdays in the Philippines," by J. R. Stevens, Charles Scribner's Sons, $1.50; "The Philippine Islands," by J. Foreman; imported by Brentano's; "History and Conquest of the Philippines," by A. Marsh, Wheaton, $1.50; "Military Notes on the Philippines," collected by the United States War Department, in course; "An American Cruiser in the East," by J. D. Ford, (Lieutenant, United States Navy,) A. S. Barnes & Co., $2.50.

INDIA AND BURMA.

Mr. Shoemaker's Volume Treating Also of Manila.

The author of the books of descriptive travel, "Islands of the Southern Seas," the "Sealed Provinces of the Czar," and "Palaces and Prisons of Mary, Queen of Scots," Mr. M. M. Shoemaker of Cincinnati, has allowed his restless feet and inquiring mind to carry him still further afield on a tour through Southern India and Burma, with a side trip to our new possessions in the Philippines, and a new book under the attractive title of "Quaint Corners of Ancient Empires," is the result.

The author needs no introduction to a large class of readers who have followed him through his previous journeys and who have learned to like what can best be termed his restless Americanism and his somewhat staccato method of giving his impressions of places and peoples. When his first books appeared they gave the impression of a rather amateurish writer endeavoring to form a style, but continued writing evidences that Mr. Shoemaker's style was already formed when he first began to write. It is natural to the man, and one learns to like it and to be unconsciously influenced by it to see strange places and peoples with that vividness with which a good opera glass brings the stage near. Mr. Shoemaker is not verbose, if he is at times a little irrelevant. He sketches in broad lines and with heavy washing, but when one lays down a book of his travels one feels its strength and has a general retrospect that is instructive and entertaining to recall.

In his descriptions in the present work of visits to the old Indian temples of Rameswaram, Madura, the Palace of the Rajah and the Pagoda at Tanjore, the Great Pagoda of Burma, the Golden Palace of Mandalay, and the many other temples of that famous city, not forgetting "the old Moulmein pagoda, lookin' eastward to the sea," which Kipling has made famous the world over; the Queen's golden monastery and the Temple of the "seven hundred and fifty pagodas," in the same city; the temples of the dead City of Pagahn, the Ananda pagoda, and lastly the great "Schway Dagohn" of Rangoon; the author personally conducts us with dramatic and artistic touches and descriptions through the beautiful and wonderful halls, corridors, and arches of these temples and shrines, the age of many of which even antiquarians know not. The mind almost fails to grasp the countless millions of treasure and the human lives that went to make up these great Brahmin and Buddhist piles. Perhaps the student of architecture and of history is already familiar through other writings with the Indian temples, but he will find it no labor lost to visit them again with Mr. Shoemaker and see them through his quickly perceptive and keen American eyes. To the temples and pagodas of that lesser known land of Burma the author has brought the same powers of description and presents their beauty and extent in almost a new light. Most interesting is his chapter on the dead City of Pagahn, the ancient capital of old Burma, whose name was formerly Mien. Marco Polo, who died in 1325, describes the city as very ancient at that period, and in 1272 the army of the great Khan came down upon Pagahn and the Prince of Mien went forth to meet him in battle with sixty thousand horsemen and soldiers and two thousand elephants, each carrying towers of timbers with seventeen warriors in every tower. But the Khan, with twelve thousand well mounted men, routed this great host and captured the vast city with its countless houses, endless avenues of shrines, stately temples, and majestic statues of Buddha, while in the midst rose two vast towers which Marco Polo describes as being, the one of gold, the other of silver, precious metals being laid upon the stone of which the towers were built, to the depth of a finger. Some historians place the foundation of Paghan as far back as A. D. 32, but it is 700 years since Pagahn ceased to live.

Mr. Shoemaker gives a glowing description of the great "Schway Dagohn Payah" of Rangoon, the most sacred and most remarkable shrine in all the Buddhist world—"the most sacred, because it is the only payah known to the Buddhists which contains not only the sacred hair of Shin Gautama, but relics (a drinking cup, a robe, and a staff) of the three Buddhas who preceded him. Therefore to this spot come countless pilgrims from every quarter of the world to which this faith has penetrated." Says the author:

To the traveler approaching from the sea the pagoda is a vision of dazzling brilliancy and is visible long before the low-lying shores and distant mountains have evolved themselves from the waste of waters. If the approach is in the early morning, when the sun is not yet risen, his eyes will gaze into a mist, vivid, gray and colorless, but with the first rays of approaching light a vision as of something celestial will be sharply silhouetted against the darkness, something which has fallen from the walls of heaven and now flouts a golden glory for the delight and astonishment of man. As the light increases this brilliancy becomes almost too dazzling for mortals to gaze upon. Finally the mists grow thinner and thinner, and then sail away, leaving the structure resting upon a mound of delicate green, that folds downward and away across the valley where stands the City of Rangoon, where the Irrawaddy forces its way to the ocean. Of its age there is no authentic record. Buddhists place the date of its erection at 588 B. C., but "Yoe" thinks the site must have been sacred for cycles before that. * * * At least we have the certainty that we see a very substantial as it stood half a score hundred years ago, and perhaps even more than that, for many religious cause have undoubtedly been added. It is an absolute fact that it is kept in perfect condition, and twice within the last century it has been completely regilded.

Mr. Shoemaker spent last Christmas in Manila, and seems to have made a careful study of conditions there. He is evidently a little too apt to be influenced by the opinions of casual acquaintances, particularly English officers, but his underlying good judgment and common sense come to the surface, and several times after recording conversations he makes a comment which shows that he himself saw the lack of logic of the speakers. Then, why detail these stories? He gives us really little that is new regarding the Philippines. He seems to have devoted most of his attention to the important subject of the friars in the Philippines. He admits that the dark record of their misdeeds and their baneful influence has not been pleasant writing. From what he tells us and what we have learned from other sources the reader will probably agree with his conclusions that as "the United States is responsible for what goes on in these islands and certainly if the actions of these friars are conducted, if silence is allowed to drop its mantle upon them, they will take heart and continue in their old lines—they have never known any other—with the conclusion on the part of the people that the Americans are no better or wiser than the Spaniards, and that one bad master has been exchanged for another. Instead thereof they must be convinced that our courts and laws are for the protection of both friars and people, and that justice and punishment will be meted out to both. I do not consider that these friars have anything in common with the enlightened Catholics of Europe and America. They are of the Dark Ages, and the account of their actions will thoroughly astonish the members of that great Church to other lands—actions so terrible that they have completely wiped from the memory of the natives all recollections of any good they (the friars) may have accomplished, driving the people into taking vengeance even upon the churches and the graves of the dead. These friars are the power with which we shall have the greatest struggle, because they have the most to lose through an enlightened form of government, and this struggle will be all the more deadly because they will work in secret, attack in the dark." The author also says: "Have we a Dreyfus case to send out there? Surely, when the American people, both Catholic and Protestant, especially the former, thoroughly understand the matter, they will arise and, taking arms against this sea of troubles, end them, both in the Philippines and in Porto Rico, from whence, I am told, like reports come. Then the daily press will no longer be afraid to publish," as the editor of a great American journal told me to save the case, facts about occurrences in the lands over which waves our National banner."

Other conclusions of Mr. Shoemaker as to the Filipinos are as follows: "Had England found the Maoris of New Zealand such a race as any of them, her story to-day would have been far different in that island, and her only huge wrong have been extermination. She has had no success with the Maoris of Australia, who are fast dying out. Her conquest of India was over races that could scarcely be considered barbarous, and that were far from cowardly. We may call them heathen, but races that produce the Taj Mahal, the mosques of Delhi, and of Agra, the temple of Tanjore and Rameswaram, cannot be called even barbarous. Those mountain tribes are savages like our own, and worse, and can compare with our Indian prophet has not been much to be proud of. The Tagalos, who claim to be the patriots and with whom we are at war are but one race among many. They are about up to the average Malay races in stature, but are rather inferior as to intellect. Certainly they are not to be compared nowadays to the Maoris of New Zealand."

As to Aguinaldo, he says:

Aguinaldo is a pot-bellied Tagalo of about twenty-six years of age, medium in stature with short, thick black hair worn pompadour. Some consider him shifty and shrewd, but it is generally believed that he has his price, though it would be a large one. It is also claimed that he is owned in all directions by the different parties, all of which have their own schemes to work out, and any one of which will sell out the others. They have already scattered themselves at the expense of the pesos and board thereof. Of course they counted large to return them to Spain if we held the islands. The people would give us but little trouble but these self-styled patriots, self-appointed saviors, will be content with but one condition of affairs. Plain that the American Government shall engage a million of warships around the islands to keep off all outside interference. Second that the entire management of the islands be placed in the hands of this gang of mere cupidity, all others that enable them to carry out the methods they have learned from these creatures of Spanish breeding. They also particularly the power to coin money for themselves. As is always the case they would be more intolerant of the people from whose ranks they have so lately risen, than ever the Spaniards. What character of men they are will be more fully understood when it is known that Aguinaldo in the proclamation of his constitution announced that his Government would "because the Chinese tongue of gluttony." To the uninitiated this sounds innocent enough, yet through such "pleasantry" came the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah.

The work closes with a charming description of Cebu and the Bay of Manila and a glowing peroration.

An interesting and convenient book for people who live in the suburbs and who are fond of birds has just been issued by the Macmillan Company. It is entitled "Our Native Birds: How to Protect Them and Attract Them to Our Homes," by D. Lange. The little volume is illustrated. Among the pictures are some showing how the birds may be defended against cats during the nesting season, and at other times.

*QUAINT CORNERS OF ANCIENT EMPIRES. Southern India, Burma, and Manila. By Michael Meyers Shoemaker. 12mo. New York and London: G. P. Putnam's Sons.

NOTES AND NEWS.

Items Gathered During This Week's Tour of the Publishing Houses.

I.—NEW YORK.

The first edition of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's "The De Willoughby Claim" was oversold before the day of publication and the book is now rapidly passing to its third edition at Charles Scribner's Sons. Few writers have achieved, as has Mrs. Burnett, repeated successes in different fields of fiction. Two of her novels, "That Lass o' Lowrie's," published in 1877, and "A Lady of Quality," published in 1896, have each sold about 100,000 copies, while "Little Lord Fauntleroy" has sold over 200,000 copies.

The Macmillan Company will publish at an early date a uniform edition of Mr. James Lane Allen's works. This house has acquired the publisher's rights to all of Mr. Allen's books, including those hitherto published by Harper & Brothers.

"Richard Carvel" has now reached its 215th thousand.

"David Harum" is at present selling in its 360th thousand. A large increase of sales is reported in the smaller cities and towns in the West. In addition to the fact that an Australian edition of the book is shortly to appear, it may be mentioned that the publishers have received another request, this time from Berlin, to put the story into German.

One of the significant signs of the times is the fact that Ernest Seton-Thompson's "Wild Animals I Have Known," published last year by Charles Scribner's Sons, is now selling better than ever before. The book has now reached its 25th thousand.

Mr. H. L. Elmendorf, Superintendent of the Buffalo Public Library, has just prepared a brochure containing a graded list of books that are proper for class-room libraries of public schools, to which is added a list of books suggested for school reference libraries. In every case with the title of the book are given the name of the publisher and the price of the volume. Nine grades are covered in this way, about 5,000 volumes being suggested. An author-title index at the end refers to the place where the book may be found. In his preface Mr. Elmendorf writes that "the library will be very glad of suggestions from teachers both as to changes in the list and the addition of new books."

J. F. Taylor & Co. have just published "Little Leather Breeches," being a collection of folk-lore songs, negro rhymes, street vendors' cries, &c., gathered from various parts of the South, arranged and illustrated by Francis P. Wightman. Although children will certainly be amused both by the rhymes and pictures, the book will have a deeper meaning for persons interested in the folk-lore of the Southern States. In the Southern nursery rhymes, that also have place in the book, may be found the origin of many of the tales told by Uncle Remus.

Even while one can now buy a dollar-and-fifty-cent book for $1.25, $1.15, or 90 cents, every one cannot read and buy all the books. A little book store on Rector Street has established a circulating library system, where one can take and read any dollar-and-fifty-cent book on the day it is published for 25 cents. One of the clerks says the shop can hardly fill all its orders.

Seekers after rare editions in fine bindings down town will find in the stock of Isaac Mendoza, at 17 Ann Street, many beautiful copies of standard authors suitable for presentation to friends who are book lovers.

Among the fiction features of the January Harper will be a story by Seumas MacManus called "The Station in Nancy Maguire's," and one by Stephen Crane, entitled "Shame." Virginia Frazer Boyle will also contribute a darky devil tale called "Asmodeus in the Quarters," Owen Wister will have "Twenty Minutes for Refreshments," and Frederic Remington "A Failure of Justice."

"The Walk Up Town," by Jesse Lynch Williams, will make its appearance in the January Scribner. In the same number Eliot Gregory will write on "The Poetic Cabarets of Paris." A descriptive Canadian scene, entitled "The Coming of the Snow," is promised from the pen of Frederic Ireland, while "The Situation in the Philippines" will be the subject of an authoritative article by Frederick Palmer. It will be recalled that in this number will begin Mr. Roosevelt's "Oliver Cromwell," the first installment of which will deal with "The Times and the Man."

This season has been particularly distinguished by large editions of certain novels, records of which have been given from time to time in these columns. Many persons may be interested to study the cause and effect of these literary phenomena. The Macmillan Company is publishing two books on the subject which may help one in making research. They are W. L. Cross's "Development of the English Novel" and C. T. Winchester's "Some Principles of Literary Criticism." It appears that novel readers are not only ready to be moved by certain pieces of fiction, but they desire to know as well why they are so moved, for both these books have gone into second editions shortly after publication. This argues well for the American mind. Incidentally, it shows its effect by promoting a more intelligent appreciation on the part of the general reading public.

A new story from the pen of John Oliver Hobbes, entitled "Robert Orange," will shortly appear as a serial in a prominent magazine in this country. It is said to be a sequel to "The School for Saints," by the same author.

The H. B. Claflin Company has prepared for the season of 1899 and 1900 a list of books, and this catalogue is an exceedingly handsome one, exhaustive of its kind, including innumerable publications, foreign and domestic. The Claflin Company "will furnish any book issued," and at the lowest rate. With its facilities this firm is prepared to supply public and private libraries. To better understand the variety of books presented by the catalogue, there is an index of eighteen pages, a single number often indicating an extended series of books. Romances are countless, but there are the standard novels in all editions, and histories, biographies, and travels. Beginning with "The Abbé Constantin," the final number is "The Zodiac Calendar." The Claflin Company, to meet the demand, has made the largest single purchase yet on record, having bought an entire edition of Rudyard Kipling; that is, 20,000 sets of 15 volumes each. Printed on fine paper and finely illustrated, the catalogue is a representative feature of the book business in the United States.

"An Hour's Promise," by Annie Eliot Trumbull, formerly published by Cassell & Co., was recently added to A. S. Barnes & Co.'s list of this author's books. Miss Trumbull's "Mistress Content Craddock," published by A. S. Barnes & Co., is now selling in its second edition.

Under the title of "The Thornton Prints" the New Amsterdam Book Company has begun the publication of a series of reproductions in platinum photographs of the masterpieces of modern art. The first group includes reproductions of the famous modern paintings exhibited at the World's Fair, together with some selections from the masterpieces in the National Gallery, London.

Leon Mead's "The Bow-Legged Ghost," published by The Warner Company, is rapidly growing in favor. Its sales have now passed the fiftieth thousand mark.

Charm in Old Books.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I like the flavor of your articles on old books. There is something in the subject that makes the articles always attractive, whether they touch upon the binding, the paper, the printing, or the illustrations—the physical and decorative features of such books. Still more interesting are they when they touch upon the authors and the literary contents of them. And, do you know, that any one who has from time to time turned to those old books, and who has not allowed his reading to slip from his memory, will often, when picking up some current literary production, become greatly entertained, although not exactly as intended by the popular author of it? As a sample, let me refer to the November Century and to an article in it entitled "The Wisdom of Dark Pathrick," by Seumas McManus. It relates to Pathrick's verdict awarding the rattle of sixty-five bad sovereigns as compensation for the smell of sixty-five pounds' worth of bad dinners. The story is told with abundant local scenery and a fine Irish brogue. Now, the amusement your reader of old books gets from this story will come rather from his recollection of a similar story told by Rabelais some four hundred and fifty years ago. Sayney John, the fool and citizen of Paris, rendered a verdict in a similar case that "the porter who ate his bread at the smoke of the roast meat hath civilly paid the cook with the sound of his money." The story will be found in Chapter 57, Book III., of Rabelais, and is well worthy of publication.

THE WEEK IN ART.

Herman Schaus is showing in his Fifth Avenue gallery three recently imported Barbizon pictures, a small Diaz, a marine by Dupré, and a large Rousseau, which are perhaps the most important examples and the richest in quality of any that have been shown here in some time. The Diaz is a characteristic little scene on the borders of the forest of Fontainebleau, with a pool in the middle distance, a sunny day with strong effect of reflected light, and very joyous in atmosphere. The Dupré marine is less sombre than usual, with a gray sea warmed by a setting sun, whose rays fall on the reddish sails of a fishing boat. The picture in addition to its color has unusual life and movement. The Rousseau, a large rectangular canvas, is a sunset through woods, with a cold rushing stream in the foreground, and a characteristic figure seated on a boulder in a blue blouse and a red hat dimly discerned in the dusky light on the stream's left bank. The time is that of the last twilight, and already the sombre shades of night have gathered in the foreground, and the cold evening chill rises from the brawling stream, but the fires of sunset still glow in the dark woodland to evidence that day has only just departed. In atmosphere, strength, and breadth of handling, and rich, deep, color quality, this canvas shows Rousseau at his best.

M. Raffaelli will close to-day his exhibition of paintings and etchings at the Durand-Ruel galleries. The collection will then be sent to the St. Botolph Club in Boston. The painting of Madison Square and the Dewey Arch by M. Raffaelli was placed on view at the galleries on Tuesday. It bears evidence of haste, but has all the artist's best characteristics, and is a very satisfactory representation of the location and the scene.

Charles H. Davis has an exhibition of thirty-five of his paintings in the art gallery of the Pratt Institute, Brooklyn, which well represent him and which are worth a journey on the part of New York art lovers to see. The canvases shown include all of Mr. Davis's best work of recent years. There are few modern landscape painters in whose work one feels the strong personal sympathy with nature that Mr. Davis's canvases display. He is still the happiest when he depicts the early evening and fields and clouds of calm Spring and Summer days.

Mr. J. Dunbar Wright, who for more than twenty years has been a devoted student of photography, returned a few months ago from a year's tour to Japan, Egypt, and Continental Europe in search of subjects for his camera. He was fortunate enough to secure many pictures in Japan of places and scenes out of the ordinary run of travelers, and there, desiring to present what he saw in true local tone, he studied the laying on of color as practiced in Japan under the tuition of K. Tamamura. Mr. Wright is now showing at the rooms of the Camera Club, 3 West Twenty-eighth Street, until Dec. 16, some 128 of these scenes in foreign lands, together with 22 portrait studies, and not only students and lovers of photography but art lovers in general should endeavor to visit and inspect this delightful, interesting, and instructive little exhibition. Mr. Wright is particularly happy in his outdoor photographs, and in those taken in Japan and Egypt he gets a rare clearness and sharpness of outline with at the same time satisfactory tone gradations. His Japanese colored pictures are also good, the color being laid on very delicately and greatly enhancing their interest. Especially good are Nos. 77, 78, 87, 88, 93, 101, 121, 123, 142, and 143. Of the Egyptian pictures the best are No. 53, "The Nile Near Cairo"; No. 57, "A Portrait of the Princess Schevoka," a rarely handsome woman; No. 62, "Arabian Boy," and No. 63, "Ruins Along the Nile." Of the other photographs shown, perhaps the best are No. 48, "Gendarmes at Races in Rome"; No. 47, "Natural Posers, Rome"; No. 24, "A Slave," and No. 35, "Hard Aground, Indian River, Fla." Mr. Wright, like most photographers before him, has not been successful in trying to depict colored boys swimming around a ship. No. 40 looks like a cardboard floor with small black heads sticking through it. The portrait studies are so good, particularly the speaking likeness of pretty Mrs. Clement C. M., that Mr. Wright ought to devote himself more to this branch of photography.

Word has just been received from Paris of the marked success in that city of a rising New York architect, Mr. William G. Tachau, in the recent entrance competition at the Ecole des Beaux Arts. Though a native of Kentucky, Mr. Tachau pursued his art studies in New York, being a graduate in architecture of Columbia University, and some creditable specimens of his work may be found in this city. During the past year and a half he had been conducting his studies in Paris, riding occasional tours through rural France, Italy, and Switzerland. The Atelier competition at the Beaux Arts has just ended, and, excepting a native Frenchman, Mr. Tachau took the 4th or 5th on contestants, his record being the most noteworthy for some years among foreigners at that famous institution. Those interested in high-class architecture in our country will follow with interest Mr. Tachau's further progress in his art.

There is a good display of old English prints, with some color work, by S. R. Edwards, now on exhibition at the Wunderlich Gallery.

Mrs. Clio Hunsker held a reception on Thursday afternoon, at which she gave an exhibition of several of her recent sculptures, at her studio, in the Studio Building, 51 West Twelfth Street.

At the invitation of the Municipal Art Society of Baltimore a number of artists and architects from all parts of the country will attend a conference at the Johns Hopkins University, which will open on Dec. 13. At the opening, on Dec. 13, Edward H. Blashfield of this city will speak on mural decorations, and on Dec. 14, at 4 P. M., there will be a conference in the McCoy Hall for the discussion of various subjects relating to the artistic development of cities, &c. A dinner will be given at the Maryland Club to the visitors on the evening of the same day.

Arthur Hoeber, the well-known art writer and landscape artist, who, after taking, as it were, a vacation from the easel for a year or two, returned last Summer to his first love and devoted himself to plein air painting, chiefly at East Hampton, L. I., has now on exhibition at the Tooth Galleries seventeen landscapes, the work of the past Summer. Mr. Hoeber is a painter of much sympathy. He delights most in the depicting of brown marshes or green meadows, crossed or cut by streams, and stretching away under soft skies to distant horizons. It is difficult to select any of the smaller canvases for particular notice above their fellows. All are good in their way, show a thorough knowledge of technique, and, above all, as already said, that feeling for and sympathy with nature which no landscapist who hopes to succeed can be without. If any adverse criticism could be against any of Mr. Hoeber's present landscapes, it might be said that his skies at times are a little hard, and that his greens have not always that softness which they should possess to save them from giving the canvas a painty effect. But these are minor faults, and are soon forgotten in the general charm of his work. Of the larger canvases, a "Tidewater Stream," with its stretching green meadows and misty gray sky, flushed here and there with rose, and its sense of largeness and excellent distance; the "September Moon," very tender in feeling and good in atmosphere, and "Autumn," a well-balanced composition, which in subject, treatment, and color recalls McEntee at his best, are the most striking. It is to be hoped that Mr. Hoeber will find time to devote himself more to his art, for the present display shows not only sufficient fulfillment, but enough promise to make his friends—and they are many—wish to see more of his work.

Herman G. Herkomer, a pupil of his cousin, Hubert Herkomer, and who last Winter acquired some vogue here as a portrait painter, has now some ten of his portraits on view at the Boussod-Valladon Galleries, 303 Fifth Avenue. The portraits, which are those of men, women, and children, and which range from the little boy, Barton French, to the venerable professor, Hubert Herkomer, show the artist's versatility and facility. His work is, however, very uneven, and, while he draws well and his color is soft and his treatment refined, his work, on the whole, gives the impression of a man who has not yet quite struck his proper metier, and who may still make failures before he finally achieves success. It must be said at the outset that his portraits of men are far superior to his portraits of women. These last, with the exception of that of Mrs. Maund, which has a strong suggestion of Gainsborough, and a charming decorative background, are stiff, and, while good in expression, have a certain woodenness, while that of Mrs. Plunkett Greene is "painty." By far and away the best of the portraits shown is that of Prof. Hubert Herkomer, the artist's father—a bust portrait, which shows a splendid-looking venerable old man reading a book, with his head resting on his hand. The effect of light and shade, of color and expression, and the rendering of the snowy beard and hair of the old gentleman, who might sit for Moses or Isaiah, are so fine as to make it difficult to realize that the other portraits are by the same hand. It is a really remarkable piece of work. The second in merit is the portrait of Prof. John Herkomer, a three-quarter length, and a virile piece of work, directly painted. That of Lorimer Worden in his Rough Rider costume has an easy pose, and is a good likeness, while the seated portrait of young Henry Talbot, son of Lord Edmund Talbot, with its effective and cleverly carried out color scheme of reds and browns, must also be commended. The portrait of Mrs. Speyer is a good likeness, but the pose is stiff and the smile forced and unnatural. The portrait of Walter Damrosch is good in color and well drawn, but not a satisfactory likeness.

The Wernicke collection of antiques having been arranged in groups by artists specially familiar with each at the former residence are now on view at 8 West Thirty-third Street, opposite the Waldorf. Mr. W. O. B. Clifford, the executor of the estate, has given notice that the disposition of these antiques will not be by the usual auction sale, but that they will be sold privately at cost as entered by the late Mr. Wernicke at the time of purchase abroad. The appraisers' report placed the value of the collection at something over one-quarter of a million dollars. The division of old silver and Sheffield plate it particularly extensive, including some of the work of the period of George IV., when the hand beater's art was in its zenith, and includes the silver-mounted leather drinking set of Cromwell, the Protector. Other interesting pieces in the collection are the massive centrepiece made by Thomire for Napoleon and the state couch of the mad King Ludwig.

ART MATTERS ABROAD.

A strange story comes from Dresden with regard to some "revelations" recently made there by an art historian named Dr. Ludwig Jelinek, who asserts that the celebrated Sistine Madonna of the Dresden Gallery is not the original picture painted by Raphael, but a copy of the original, which Jelinek declares to be either in Rome or at Placenza. Dr. Jelinek, who was led some time ago by a minute examination of the Dresden picture to doubt its authenticity, has now discovered a chronicle written by a monk named Felice Passero, stating that the altar over the tomb of St. Sixtus, from which the Dresden Madonna came, fell into ruins, and that the canvas of the picture was torn and damaged by falling with it. The picture was afterward mended as best might be. The picture which thus fell was not, according to the chronicler, the original Raphael, but a copy. Strange to say, the Dresden Madonna bears signs of the mending referred to in the chronicle. These "revelations" are repudiated by Dr Wörmann, director of the Dresden Gallery, but they have, nevertheless, frightened him so much that a few days since he started for Italy in order to find out whether the original is really to be found at Placenza or in Rome. If the story proves to be well founded, Italy will find herself in the possession of one invaluable picture the more, and all the directors of galleries in Europe will be seized with anxiety concerning the authenticity of their treasures.

Consul General Mason of Berlin, under date of Sept. 1, 1899, sends a report giving a description of an association organized in Berlin some years ago for the purpose of applying a new process of colored photogravure to the reproduction of the masterpieces of the royal galleries of Europe. The educational character of the work, Mr. Mason thinks, makes it worthy of notice. The report reads in substance:

It will doubtless interest the friends of aesthetic culture in America to know that a society in Berlin known as the "Vereinigung der Künstfreunde für die amtlichen Publicationen der Königlichen National Galerien," (Union of Friends of Art for the Official Publication of the Royal National Galleries,) which is organized under a charter issued by the Prussian Ministry of Worship and Education, is about to send a delegate to our country for the purpose of establishing a branch office in the United States. As its name implies, the society is the vehicle for distributing among the educational and religious institutions of Germany and the people in general, fac simile copies in colors of the great masterpieces and famous paintings in the royal galleries in Europe, thus planting the seeds of art education in the minds of the rising generation, and fostering among the intelligent classes a cultivated taste for wholesome art. As particular stress has been laid by the most eminent authorities in American art education upon the fact that, much as our own art culture has improved within the last twenty years, the improvement in refined aesthetic taste has not kept pace with it, unless in exceptional individuals, and that it has been of necessity limited more or less to the wealthier classes, the establishment of a branch of the Art Patrons' Society of the Royal National Galleries in the United States seems to deserve the earnest attention of our art educators at home.

The popularity which the society enjoys here and the success which has crowned its efforts must be accredited to the artistic standard of its productions, which rise far above the meaningless black and white prints, cheap chromos, photogravures, &c., that flood the German art market. This superiority is due, in the main, to the peculiar process owned and employed by the society in its reproductions, a process which, in due course, it intends to transplant to the United States. It differs in its method from any heretofore employed, inasmuch as it enables the reproducing artists not only to create true fac similes of the original in every outline, by means of photography and steel etching, but also to produce the depth of coloring and the peculiarities of manner of each master by a special employment of the colors called heliotint, thus reproducing the characteristic handiwork of the artists.

The process, although an intricate and costly one, has not been patented, but strict secrecy is kept as to the manipulations of the plates in some of the stages through which they have to pass. After the original paintings have been photographed, for which purpose special cameras have been built and negative plates of particular sensitiveness are prepared, the photographic productions are transferred to steel plates, the surfaces of which, by some peculiar treatment, have been prepared to receive the impressions from the negatives. The outline work is thus obtained from the steel with an exactitude and clearness never before known. In the meantime the colors, as true to the original painting in the distribution of light and shade as manipulation of the brushes of eminent artists can make them, have been reproduced on the photographic copy first obtained, and the complex "color tableau" thus created is transferred to as many lithographic stones as there are colors represented in the picture, from which impressions are taken on presses worked by hand, as it has been found that presses worked by machinery cannot do the work with the minuteness and cleanliness necessary to effect perfect reproductions.

The methods employed by the society for the distribution of its productions among the educational and religious institutions of the country and the people at large are somewhat unique. It obtained at the start a list of patrons, who, in consideration of certain annual contributions, caused the society to distribute a number of the works among the educational institutions of the country. This list of patrons gradually grew, headed by the Emperor and Empress of Germany, who are followed by many of the members of other royal and princely families in Europe, until it has reached an aggregate membership of more than 16,000. These patrons gradually introduced the society's productions into the homes of subaltern officers, teachers, civic employes, and people in the humbler walks of life, who, however, before becoming entitled to the privilege of receiving such art productions, had to sign the society's roll of membership and thus become active agents in the missionary work of spreading culture in art.

Keeping its educational tendencies continually in mind, the society has always exercised the greatest care in the choice of subjects for reproduction. It has made selections from the great classical and modern religious painters, Rafael, Murillo, Guido Reni, and Paolo Veronese being among the former, and Hoffmann, Plockhorst, Gerhardi, and others among the latter. It has also endeavored to foster the love of home and country by giving reproductions from famous masters which represent scenes from history, and it will adhere to a like policy in the conduct of its American branch. Each year, a number of subjects from the history of the United States, these subjects to be chosen by an American advisory board, will be selected for reproduction, the originals to be painted by American artists. (Leutze's famous canvas "Washington Crossing the Delaware" is already on the stocks in the society's ateliers to open the American series.) These American historical paintings will be placed on exhibition both in the United States and in Europe, and gold medals will be awarded by the society to those American artists whose works are chosen for reproduction. American landscapes and marine views will also be included in this line, and it is proposed in time to erect a suitable building in one of the principal cities of the Union, which is to serve the purposes of an artistic workshop for the American branch of the society.

Ulysses; Or, The De Rougemont of Troy.

By A. H. MILNE. Profusely illustrated in two colors by the author. Cr, 4to, decorated cover, $1.25.

An audacious treatment of the wanderings of Ulysses with equally irreverent full page illustrations in black and red by the author. The poet relates how

"The news came down to Ithaca
That there was war with Troy,
So would Ulysses kindly come
And leave his wife and boy?
Ulysses thanked them warmly, but
Regretted he was off his nut.

However, "Ulysses had to go," and his adventures are told in the manner of which the above verse is a specimen and illustrated in most mirth-provoking anachronistic fashion.

Something about New Books.

AMONG the many varieties of shoes advertised nowadays, why do you buy one particular kind in preference to all others? It is not haphazard choice, but careful judgment and individual taste. Sherlock Holmes could tell the character of a person by looking at his shoes.

Discrimination in book-buying is still more important, just as the clothing of the mind means more than the clothing of the body.

"Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed whole, and some few to be chewed and digested." That was Lord Bacon's way of putting it. At holiday time it is not amiss to indulge the taste. Literary bon bons are in order. But we want them also pure and wholesome. Let us help you to select a few such book dainties.

Here is a thrilling story by Julian Hawthorne, in which the strange mental condition called "double consciousness" is the basis. But the secret chamber will—

"Archibald Malmaison."

JULIAN HAWTHORNE is the author (this is his best book).

FREELAND A. CARTER, the artist, has drawn 15 pictures.

The book is bound in cloth and decorated with black, green, and gold. The price is only $1.25, and, our word for it, the book is capital for a holiday gift.

See How "Archibald Malmaison" Interests Eminent Medical Experts both as a story and as a study.

WILLIAM A. HAMMOND, M. D., Surgeon General (Retired) of United States Army; Professor in New York and Baltimore Medical Colleges of Diseases of the Mind and Nervous System, Oct. 10, 1899: "I regard 'Archibald Malmaison' as one of the most original novels in our language, and, at the same time, one of the most interesting and forceful. It is based on the curious condition of 'double consciousness,' many striking examples of which have come under my personal observation. . . . 'Archibald Malmaison' is entirely in accord with the knowledge we possess of these remarkable phenomena."

The Newspapers Praise the Book Without stint as a Masterpiece of Fiction.

THE TRIBUNE, New York: "'Archibald Malmaison' is an enchanting piece of fiction. Its great charm lies in its terse, dramatic treatment of a fascinating theme."

NEW YORK HERALD: "From an artistic standpoint, 'Archibald Malmaison' must be considered infinitely superior to any of his previous works. The reader's heart comes into direct contact with the pulsating life of the character dealt with. It is a weird, mysterious tale."

Here is a Book that Ought to be Placed in the Hands of Every Boy and Girl on Christmas Day. It is Full of Inspiration to Heroism—the Inspiration of Example.

"True Stories of Heroic Lives."

The book contains thirty-nine true stories of courage and devotion, gathered from all quarters of the world, told, for the most part, by personal acquaintances of the heroes or eye-witnesses of the deeds of valor. These are stories of soldiers and sailors; of explorers and missionaries; of statesmen and scientists; of reformers, philanthropists, students, nurses, and mechanics."

The book is bound in cloth and decorated with green, red, and gold. There are numerous pictures. The price is $1.00. A splendid book for any teacher to give to a class of boys or girls.

If Our Say So Is Not Enough, Read the Following:

CUMBERLAND PRESBYTERIAN, Nashville, Tenn.: "There is a very great charm about such stories as fill this book, and their value in inspiring noble aims is inestimable."

LEWISTON JOURNAL: "There is no home in our land where such stories will not carry strength and ennobling inspiration."

BOSTON TIMES: "Most of the deeds told about are of thrilling dramatic interest, and the book will be welcome in whatever hands it falls."

This dainty book will help you to understand and enjoy the grand operas.

Whether you ever hear the great operas or not, this book will reveal to you their meaning and beauty, and make you acquainted with the famous singers.

"Stars of the Opera."

MABEL WAGNALLS is the Author.

The book contains explanatory and descriptive sketches of twelve of the leading operas, interpreting the music and its relation to the plot, and introducing the reader, through a series of graphic personal conversations, to the great singers, who tell of their early studies and difficulties, their first successes, their methods of work, and many interesting incidents in their careers.

The book is daintily printed on laid paper with deckle edges, bound in cloth, decorated with black, purple, and gold. It contains sixteen beautiful plate portraits of the singers. The price is $1.50. A tasteful gift book for any lover of music. For sale also at leading music stores.

Here Are a Few Opinions to Reinforce What We Have Said Above:

ST. LOUIS GLOBE-DEMOCRAT: "Being a trained and thorough musician, Miss Wagnalls writes with authority and with an artistic understanding and appreciation. A reading of her book before listening to an opera makes the performance a great deal more enjoyable, and reading it afterward brings to the mind many delightful recollections. The chapters devoted to the human side of the artists are full of charm, and cause the reader to feel that he almost has a personal acquaintance with these stars of the opera."

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION: "Every one who loves music will enjoy the rich contents of this dainty little volume."

AIME DUPONT, the celebrated photographic artist, writes: "I am simply astonished at the beauty of the portrait reproductions. They are the finest I have ever seen from any of these photographs."

This Book May Be Called a Package of Literary Bon Bons for Indulgence in Odd Moments.

"One of Those Coincidences."

There are ten other Stories in the volume. Julian Hawthorne, Leo Tolstoy, Florence M. Kingsley are among the authors.

This attractive collection of short stories will please readers who seek literary entertainment for brief moments. It does not require hours of uninterrupted attention for its fullest enjoyment. It can be taken up at any time, like a box of bon bons, a choice morsel of fiction extracted for the delectation of the moment, and then be laid aside for another time. But, unlike the bon bons, the untasted tidbits of fiction will not grow stale from waiting. They are there, as good as ever, ready to satisfy a moment's desire.

The book is bound in cloth, decorated with black, red, and gold. Several artists have contributed pictures. Price, $1.00. Just the book for holiday recreation.

THE STANDARD-UNION, Brooklyn, N. Y.: "A collection of very readable short stories, which will appeal to varied tastes, and which can be taken up and enjoyed whenever the fortunate possessor has half an hour to spare. The reader can safely pick out any tale at random and be certain of an intellectual feast."

"LES MISERABLES."

Ready to Sell His Copy and Otherwise Harken to Mr. Newberry.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

How easily our delusions, cherished it may be for years, can be dispelled when a master mind reveals the fact to us that we have yielded a blind obedience to error and shown an unqualified willingness to "exhaust the vocabulary of praise" upon "solemn rubbish" which, in our mental weakness, we have magnified into literary excellence! The two-column article of Henry A. Newberry, published in your last issue, is to me a magical revelation, and it places what I had long believed to be Victor Hugo's greatest prose creation in its true light. I trust many others who have shared my delusion have had the scales removed from their eyes and that they will no longer regard "Les Miserables" with "the force and fervor of a religious creed." This "most ridiculous farrago of nonsense and bombast ever put together" appeared in 1862, and since that time it has been read in numerous editions and many languages, and the press reviewers, critics, and millions of readers throughout the enlightened nations of earth, with easy gullibility, have been so nearly unanimous in pronouncing it one of the literary masterpieces of the ages that I was readily deceived by its "lurid rhetoric," and, following Pickwick's advice to Snodgrass, shouted with the larger mob.

I get much consolation from the fact that the insignificant event of June 18, 1815, has at last been freed from the glamour which for eighty-four years historians, poets, and novelists have been throwing about it, and that the feeble skirmish of Waterloo has been relegated to its proper place in history and stamped as an event only comparable in importance with that trial of pugilistic skill which took place in New Orleans a few years ago in twenty-one friendly rounds between those expert boxers, Corbett and Sullivan. Just think of Prof. Creasy including it among the fifteen decisive battles of the world, and of Hugo regarding it as an event of international interest! Read the "lurid rhetoric" he wastes upon a trifling occurrence which should have been described, if at all, in the same tame language one would employ in writing of a prizefight. But he was inspired by the "God of Bosh" all the time he was writing the "dreary pages" of this "literary nightmare."

Mr. Newberry should extend his censorship to many other works hitherto considered fine, that through him we may learn to separate the wheat from the tares, and not devote so much time to books which have no merit except the bindings. While I wait for more enlightenment, who will come and get my two volumes of "Les Miserables"?

An Honest Doubter to Whom a Debt Is Owed.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

The arraignment of Victor Hugo before the bar of opinion is timely. Timely, because it shows which way the course is still setting. The law that no mechanism is stronger than its weakest part may well apply to the mechanism of society. Genius always treads a century or two in advance of the average thinker. Mr. Henley and his ardent disciple, Mr. Newberry, show us how slowly we are advancing after all. We owe a debt to just such thinkers, as religion owes a debt to the honest doubter. I believe Mr. Newberry to be honest in his opinion, and not posing for effect. Brave certainly, as he well knows the deluge that awaits him. I am not come to cast a stone, but rather to acknowledge a debt.

For those who see the sublime ideal of life that opened out the darkened soul of Jean Valjean through the serene Christ humanity of the good Bishop, for those Victor Hugo has not lived in vain. Those who cannot see it are the laggards we must wait for. The machine of progress has a weak spot.

"Waterloo was not a battle. It was a change of front of the universe. A change from absolutism to individualism. The infinite that sweeps the tide of battles and events—the infinite of Victor Hugo—is not the far-off Providence that directs, but the God in man that cries aloud; that moves with unerring wisdom to the light." Yes—brute force is "up against it." Mr. Newberry is quite right. No slightest space too small for the infinite. If you who condemn and you who indorse opinion against genius will go into some of the streets of this city you will stand equally arraigned before the infinite. There are many doubtless whose eyes are already reading the message. But if you who have waited too long, as I have done, will go now into these streets—slums as they are called—you will find there your Fantines, your Thenardiers, Gavroches, offspring of the streets, joyously treading as he, toward revolutions; little tortured Cosettes and Jean Valjeans; yes, many of those great hearts struggling against destiny; Quasimodos and Gwynplaines, in body terrible outcome of man's inhumanity, in soul the prototype as was the lowly Nazarene.

Sympathy Once Gained Now Forfeited.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

With feelings of regret and surprise I read in your last SATURDAY REVIEW a blast from the bugle of Mr. Newberry, the Oakland sage, calling all to witness that Victor Hugo was nothing more than a dilettante chiseler on the palace of letters; that Victor Hugo was a bumptious ass, and that Victor Hugo should be treated as any pretender, and ruthlessly crushed under foot by the true devotees at the shrine of art. My regret was occasioned by the fact that I had had a feeling akin to sympathy with Mr. Newberry in his vigorous championship of the brilliant author of "Vice Versa"; my surprise by the fact that he should have lapsed into such a deplorable frame of mind in respect to one who, living, was justly put by his compatriots as their foremost exponent of romance, poetry, and the drama; one who, dead, is even now a national idol.

Without desiring to enter into personalities of any sort, I must say that I am very curious to know if Mr. Newberry read his Hugo in the original French, or by means of a translation, and, if the latter, whose was the translation? It is, I think, a universally accepted fact that no one can put into true form the thoughts of another man's brain, least of all when it is a question of expressing the other man's thoughts in a foreign language. I am now considering Victor Hugo as a novelist, not as a poet, for Mr. Newberry concedes that M. Hugo is a poet of the very first water. Which is very kind of Mr. Newberry, after he has done his best to tear our poor author to pieces.

It is, as Mr. Newberry says, but an easy fall from the sublime to the ridiculous, and, pray, what great writer has always avoided the fall? Great writers are men of genius, and men of genius are, as the world well knows, a little more likely than ordinary hard-headed mortals to lapse into ridiculous actions or words. It is no blemish in Hugo's make-up that he roared "Do everything" in the Paris café. Hugo himself wanted to do everything, and he did do a great many things well. Even Parisians do not make an idol of a fool. And the world knows what France thinks of Hugo.

A Story Incorrectly Told.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I have no doubt that many of your readers besides myself have been scornfully amused by Mr. Newberry's strange diatribe in your last SATURDAY REVIEW against what he calls "Victor Hugo's unearthly romance, 'Les Miserables.'" Without commenting upon your correspondent's private views further than to remark, as did the old Irish woman to the stranger who refused to buy of her lace, "The Lord have mercy upon your tastes," I would call attention to the yawning errors (or worse) that Mr. Newberry has made in his version of the incident which he selected to illustrate the character of Jean Valjean. Any one who has read "Les Miserables" will at once recognize the absolute falsity of Mr. Newberry's description of the meeting between Jean Valjean and Thenardier after the former had purchased Cosette's liberty. What are the facts? Thenardier, having received 1,500f. from Jean Valjean at the tavern, remains for some fifteen minutes in solitary admiration of his own master stroke of diplomacy. He then shows the money to his wife, who asks, as though in quiet contempt, "What's that?" Stung by the words, Thenardier sets out in pursuit of Jean Valjean and Cosette, overtakes them, (not, as Mr. Newberry will find out if he cares to read his book, "in the very heart of a lonely forest"—but this is a detail,) and, with a view to being further "corrupted," assumes an air of honesty and asks for the return of Cosette, offering hypocritically to give back the 1,500f. Then, being completely outgeneraled by Jean Valjean's production of Fantine's receipt and the crushing words that accompany it, he loses control of himself and boldly demands a thousand crowns as an additional payment for Cosette's liberty. In answer, Jean Valjean does not speak a word to the innkeeper. Turning to the child, he says, simply, "Come, Cosette," and they both walk away together.

Thenardier remains "motionless and nonplused" for a few moments, and then starts to follow the pair, which he does till, after a short time, Jean Valjean, out of patience, looks back at him "so forbiddingly that Thenardier judged it 'unprofitable' to go further. Thenardier went home." Such is Victor Hugo's account of the incident, and one might almost say that the whole character of the hero of "Les Miserables" is mirrored in it. Could anything be more misleading than Mr. Newberry's privately edited version? Is it intentionally false? We hope not. But false it is, and ab uno disce omnes.

N. LAWSON LEWIS.

New York City, Nov. 6, 1899.

Not Written to Provoke Laughter.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

There is no department of the admirable SATURDAY REVIEW that affords more entertainment—of a certain kind—than that devoted to "Letters to the Editor," when its readers are favored by a contributor with an olio of peppery terms for presuming to like some strong and favorably established work of a recognized master, the self-appointed arbiter warming to his subject with plentiful dashes of verbal tabasco sauce. Mr. Henry A. Newberry must have been in an effervescent state of mind when he wrote his comically inconsistent tirade against "Les Miserables" and its, in his opinion, idiotic readers—for has he not given us his valuable dictum that Hugo's masterpiece "ought to be called an indictment of its author's sanity"? What fools we mortals be that admire the work of one who was non compos mentis! What giant intellects must they have who amuse themselves and us—by couching their little pen-pointed lances dipped in gall as they descend upon us quiet browsers in some favorite literary field! E'en as the doughty Knight of La Mancha swooped down upon the feeding flock of Trapoban.

Mr. Henry A. Newberry (he has the Quixotic courage to sign his venomous abuse with his full name) informs us that the author of the book that causes his gorge to rise with such bitterness was utterly destitute of the sense of humor. But "Les Miserables" was not written as a joke book. One might as well complain of the lack of humor in the Lord's Prayer. Here is a specimen of the ridiculous hyperbole that characterizes the article: "The average school teacher, in particular, counts that day lost whose low-descending sun hasn't seen some shrinking schoolgirl pushed into the arms of that Moloch of dreariness, the reading of which entails such a strain on the endurance of its victims as to leave them wan and enfeebled for six months afterward." "An immense stupidity!" "I thank thee," Newberry, "for teaching me that phrase." But perhaps it is a sample of Mr. N.'s "humor." Anyway, it excites a smile.

Mr. Newberry justly calls "The Scarlet Letter" a masterpiece, yet the humor in it doesn't scintillate to any very great extent. In fact, one's eyes would have to be "a pair o' patent double million gas microscopes of hextra power" to discover it.

Mr. Newberry can find no fault if the "Hugobites" fulfill his anticipations in looking upon his ridiculous diatribe as "merely the opinion of an unknown, conceited iconoclast, pitting his crude impressions against the ripened judgment of the literary world." His distorted reflections, which he thinks describe the author of "Les Miserables," remind one of the Hibernian at a New York museum who suddenly found himself before a concave mirror, the reflection showing a very large head and a proportionately swollen body.

"Phat th' divvil's that?" said Pat. To which his spouse at his side replied: "Sure, ye gossoon, an' it be yerself, intirely."

Anstey Himself Outdone.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Very generous and optimistic editor: Hail the new American humorist! Newberry! He out-Insteys Anstey; he is side-splitting.

Within my memory nothing half so funny has appeared in Puck or Judge or Life as Mr. Newberry's two-column letter in last week's REVIEW. The editor of THE REVIEW is to be congratulated on his discovery of this new Artemus Ward.

It is evident that Mr. N. is a humorist of a high order, but why waste his sweetness on the desert air of a literary review when any enterprising evening paper would give him $5 per column for his stuff? The trouble is in a literary review people look for serious matter, and some obtuse and near-sighted readers may think this funny man really in earnest, and that he does mean to impugn the taste and judgment of the whole English speaking and reading world, (like Mrs. Partington sweeping back the sea with a broom,) and that Dr. Hillis, together with thousands of us who to-day are looking for light on the higher life, are all in error in setting up the grand self-sacrifice of Jean Valjean as a religious example. It is even to be expected that some of these misguided ones will take up the cudgels in defense of Victor Hugo's masterpiece and assert their admiration and love for this wonderful painting of the travail and triumph of a soul. Mr. Newberry is evidently young in the literary field, and a little advice from an old woman will do him no harm. We would recommend to him a less broad and sweeping arraignment at the start—a slightly less warriorlike attitude until his audience be educated up to his standard of humor, and advise a close study of the methods of Mr. Dooley—that archpriest of humor, who began in an unaggressive way five or six years ago, and now has the world at his feet to laugh, or sometimes to weep, as he wills.

But in the meantime a few discriminating ones will take the greatest delight in the roaring farce that Mr. Newberry perpetrates under the guise of a literary critic.

Watch Mr. Newberry! Give him time and lots of paper and pens and ink! Never ridicule or discourage a rising genius. Abase Les Miserables! Abase every thing but Anstey! Newberry, hoch!

A Book for the Stone Age.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

All persons of independent habit of thought will agree with Mr. Newberry that "Les Miserables" is a vastly overrated work and utterly unworthy of the vogue it has attained. Not to have read "Les Miserables," however, is "to argue yourself unknown," and thus it is that many people heroically wade through the dismalities of this literary slough, emerging physically exhausted and mentally debilitated. Their reward is the patronizing approval of the oblique-minded idolaters of Hugo. It is not only remarkable but almost incredible that so colossal an inanity should ever have been taken seriously by the English public; and the fact that it has been demonstrates that a large proportion of the same public is still in the stone age of literary appreciation. "Les Miserables" is a masterpiece of absurdity and the very quintessence of all that is preposterous.

Robert Barr's Glimpses of the East.*

Mr. Robert Barr is irrepressible. He will not look at the Orient in a serious manner. Now, why should he? Is it morally wrong to chaff Cheops? You may acquire information while you are laughing, and that is just the way, by comical appeals, that the author of the "Unchanging East" does the instructive business. For instance, he is positive that the best way of acquiring a knowledge of the Portuguese sea coast is to take a seat in a steamer chair on the deck of the ship and use a glass. He sees "somewhat inland * * * the great Convent of Mafra." Then you were informed how many rooms there are in the convent, and the exact number of windows. "I did not count the windows myself, nor did I visit the rooms, but there is no use in possessing an 'Encyclopaedia Britannica' if you do not use it, and then throw a glamour of learning over articles written about travel."

Mr. Barr is rather indifferent to the Spaniards as he saw them while looking at them through his spyglass. "They were mostly mounted on mules, the riders generally seated far astern on the animals. * * * The Spaniards were invariably occupied in either smoking a cigarette or rolling one." He notes swampy marshes, where esparta grass flourishes, and there are buildings and chimneys, "where the grass is prepared for the making of paper. Paper being the great source of Spanish currency, they do well to foster the growth of espartero."

The steamer passes Gibraltar, and Mr. Barr writes that in the school books of Spain it is never admitted that Gibraltar belongs to the British, and he adds:

I think it shows a beautiful disposition on the part of Britain to spend so much money in running tunnels through the rock of Gibraltar, and in building great docks, when it is known that at any moment Spain may come forward and say politely, "I'll trouble you for that bit of rock, if you please."

Moving along the coast of Africa, Mr. Barr writes:

The principal need of the northern coast of Africa, as viewed from the steamer deck, seems to be inhabitants. * * * As France has practically collared all this portion of the earth, it strikes an impartial observer that the sensible thing for that country to do would be to induce emigrants to settle upon these lands instead of fooling round the world interfering with other people's possessions. But France has recently resolved to acquire the leather medal for stupidity, and has become a troublesome neighbor, while as a coloniser she is beneath contempt.

Mr. Barr has his own ideas about colonial policy, and admires particularly English methods. The tourist is in Malta:

You may see for yourself how well matters are arranged in Malta. If you gave England the earth, which it were superfluous to do, because she has got most of it, she would put one of her own Governors at the head of every State, place her own Generals and chief officials in command of the armies and the departments, and then she would divide the swag of the smaller offices with those whom she would plously say Providence has set her to rule over.

French methods are entirely different. The French gobble up everything. "The foreigner or the native gets no show. The Frenchman even keeps out foreign trade, and in many French ports will not even allow a foreign vessel to enter." How, with great profundity, asks Mr. Barr, "if you want to loot a stranger, are you to manage if you keep him at arm's length?"

Mr. Barr visits all the ports on the Mediterranean wherever his steamer makes a landing. He leaves his ship and goes to Jerusalem, to Cairo, to Damascus, and many other places, and tells in an amusing manner of what he sees. In Jerusalem, at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, are the Turkish guards with their guns over their knees. They are present so as to quell "free fights."

About this Syrian coast, where there is often trouble and foreigners are likely to suffer, Mr. Barr writes:

The English-speaking race stand shoulder to shoulder together, in spite of any difference their respective countries may be having. An Englishman in trouble, and out of the range of his own consular service, never thinks of appealing to a Russian, French, or German Consul or Captain, but always to an American official, if he be within the radius of communication. In like manner, the American makes complaint to the English official.

"The Unchanging East" gives a quick view of the nearer Orient, and the sketches made of life there are excellent. There is no tediousness of description, and no beaten track to be followed. The two little volumes are typographical models and handsomely illustrated.

The Earliest Sonnet.

You ask a sonnet, lady, and behold!
The first line and the second are complete.
If equal luck I in the third should meet,
With one verse more the first quatrain is told.
St. James for Spain! the fifth verse is outrolled—
Now for the sixth. 'Twill be a gallant feat
If after all I manage to retreat
Safe with my life from this encounter bold.
Already, rounded well, each quatrain stands.
What say you, lady? Do I bravely speed?
Yet, ah! heaven knows the tercets me affright;
And, if this sonnet were but off my hands,
Another I should ne'er attempt indeed.
But now, thank God, my sonnet's finished quite.

—Diego, Hurtando de Mendoza. (1503-1575.) Translated by the Rev. Matthew Russell.

An Historic Frontier.*

The author, in dedicating this book to the "young people of the schools of Buffalo," many of whom on sundry pleasant occasions "have accompanied him" in rambles along the "old trails" of the region, indicates well the character of the volume. And yet it is not to be understood that it is a children's book, to the exclusion of the interest of grown folk or appeal to mature intelligence, nor that one cannot read it with pleasure who does not belong to Buffalo.

Viewed from a larger, and perhaps a juster, standpoint, this volume is a collection of a few of those border tales, here well told, that are full of an interest, romance, and excitement which the best fiction might well envy for their picturesque setting, which are the better for their truth, and which some day will pass into that wonderful history that the world calls "local tradition" in a proxy fear to believe so much. It happens, appropriately enough, since the region is so rich, that the tales all centre along the Niagara frontier between Lakes Erie and Ontario. There stood, and stands, Fort Niagara, which French, English, and Americans have kept a fortress for considerably more than 200 years; there stands the great natural wonder which no man could see without speaking of; across the mighty stream opposing nations have always gazed at one another, and around the great cataract was "the carry" of one of the most frequented routes of migration for the early pioneers. So the region is rich in history of varied kind; and the narrator, choosing his periods one, two, or nearly three centuries ago, has a rare dramatis personæ at his call. The missionary priest and hero, the French chevaliers, the British and patriot soldiers of the American Revolution, the Indian warriors and orators, the hardy pioneers, stalk through his pages, a motley and picturesque assembly.

The first trail which invites Mr. Severance's attention is the earliest, that of "The Cross Bearers." But a charm of his book is its novelty; and in the second chapter he gives an "extract from the hitherto unknown memoirs of the Chevalier de Tregay," at Fort Niagara in 1687, "the Year of Starvation." De Tregay was a real character, and most of the facts put in this pleasantly narrative form are elsewhere accessible, if one wants them in prosier form. "With Bolton at Fort Niagara" is almost wholly drawn from unpublished records, the originals of which are in the British Museum, and "What Befell David Ogden" is taken from scarcely better known sources. "A Fort Niagara Centennial Address" is incorporated, as giving a later glimpse of the old fort's life, and in the journal of an early Buffalo merchant, in the pretended personal narrative of a patriot exile who participated in the Canadian rebellion, and the string of anecdotes of "The Underground Railroad," other strange and interesting trails are started. The final chapter, "Niagara and the Poets," comprises a sad and curious collection, which, owing to its poor material, was well omitted.

Napoleon at Longwood. 1817.

Diary of Lieut. Clifford in The Cornhill.

I found Napoleon a very different man in appearance from what I had imagined he was, even shorter and more corpulent than I expected. His hair, which is dark, was cut short all round; his head is very large, and he has a full round face, but not so fat as it is generally represented; his whiskers are shaven off. I saw nothing extraordinary in any of his features except his eye, which is the best feature of his countenance, and seems to give all its expression; but the eyes really did not appear to me to be of that penetrating kind which are generally described. I did not conceive that his full face was at all like the portraits of him, but his profile struck me as being very like, and I think is generally well imitated. There is a sour look about his face which it does not seem an easy matter for him to get rid of. He honored me with a smile, but it was evident from his manner that he looked upon us as people who came more from curiosity to look at him than any respect or admiration of his character, or from whom he was likely to obtain much information—which first part was true enough. But by a little condescension on his part he might have purchased our good will. He looked, I thought, very sallow and even ill—but this is said always to be the case. I found no difficulty in looking him full in the face, nor did I find that he possessed that scrutinizing glance which is described to belong to his eyes. His tout-ensemble had more the appearance of a man devoted to study than the air of one who had devoted his life to military glory. His questions were not so quick as we had been led to expect; indeed, Dr. O'Meara informed us that toward Englishmen he had altered his manner, finding it was not the characteristic of the nation.

He was dressed in an old green coat with covered buttons, a white waistcoat, small clothes, and silk stockings, shoes, and buckles, and on his breast he wore an old shabby star. He received us as is his usual mode—standing with his hands in his breeches pockets, and a three-cornered cocked hat under his arm; the tri-colored cockade I did not observe—if any, it must have been hid by his arm.

Blackguards, robbers, murderers, whether they be Boers or Englishmen, Americans, Frenchmen, or Italians, all have about the same physiognomy. Mr. George Hansby Russell, in "Under the Sjambok," paints the Boer in the ugliest colors, and he lays on the black with an overheavy hand. The Sjambok is a whip made of rhinoceros hide, similar to a cowhide, and the Boer is presented on all occasions as cutting the natives to pieces with this whip.

George Leigh, who has traveled in the Transvaal, goes to Africa so as to find the daughter of a friend of his, and this search for Lucy Hanlon leads him into all kinds of adventures. Leigh is a "red neck," a "Rooi Nek," and every Boer he meets with tries either to poison him or to shoot him. Leigh has the happy faculty of always overhearing the plots laid to entrap him, and marvelous are his escapes from the Boers and lions. At last he manages to carry off Lucy, and she marries the man of her choice.

COACHING.

Fairman Rogers's Elaborate Manual.‡

Among the exhibits made at the recent New York Horse Show that of road coaches, and particularly the time competition in changing coaching horses, aroused the most enthusiastic plaudits from the spectators of the week and unquestionably elicited the most popular interest. The lesson taught by this incident was that despite the crowding out of the road coach, as a means of travel, by steam and now by electricity, coaching still retains, and in a wonderful degree, its sentimental interest. Small wonder is it then that when the public, to whom coaching is a lost art, and who only know of it through reading, pictures, and the occasional sight of some rich man tooling his break or coach, or through the annual coaching parades of London, Paris, Newport, Philadelphia, and New York, throng a building to see a coaching exhibition, the man of long purse, who is in addition a lover of horseflesh, can find keen interest in the old sport.

Of all the four-in-hand whips whom America has produced in this generation, there is none better known than Mr. Fairman Rogers of Philadelphia. During the early days of the New York Coaching Club he stood in the front rank of its whips with the late Hugo Fritsch, Cols. Jay and Kane, and Frederic Bronson, and, although Mr. Rogers has long been absent from the coaching parades of New York, Newport, and Philadelphia and has transferred his household gods, including his coach, from America to England, his hand has not lost its cunning, and there are few of the English whips who can surpass him when he handles the ribbons over his always well-chosen and well-groomed team on English roads.

It is to Mr. Rogers's long experience and study of the history of coaching and the many years which he has devoted to the sport that the coaching fraternity and that portion of the public which is interested in the subject owes a most complete, well-written, and interesting volume entitled "A Manual of Coaching," recently published by the J. B. Lippincott Company of Philadelphia. The first edition of this work, which is dedicated to the well-known American whip, William G. Tiffany, is limited to 1,500 copies—1,000 for this country and 500 for England. It is a work which can be studied with advantage, not only by coach owners and four-in-hand drivers, but by the student of history, for the author, in addition to a thorough technical description of the coach and its accessories, its varieties, weight, and draught, and of the details and arrangements of harness and of driving, has given a complete history of the development of the coach in England and America until the introduction of steam. He also describes the revival of public coaching in both the Old and New Worlds, with a full story of the achievements since the time of this revival in road coaching here and abroad, coaching club trips, &c. A valuable feature of the book are the plates, which include some reproductions of very old ones, notably that of the London and Oxford coach from a painting by Cordery in 1798; a rare phototype of two etchings from a political pamphlet of 1768, showing coaches of that period; a phototype of a well-known print of Hogarth's, "The Inn Yard," of 1747, and a phototype of an etching by Rowlandson of 1793, showing a coach with two extra horses ridden by a postilion.

Of the modern plates the best are those of Thomas Eakin's well-known painting "A May Morning in the Park"; of "A Swiss Diligence on the Julier Pass," and of "A French Malle Poste" of the period of 1830. There are in addition numerous drawings and reproductions of photographs of American road coaches, park drags, and wood engravings of harness, the position of the hands, and the parts of the coach.

The author has, of course, drawn liberally from the many early English works on coaching, and acknowledges his debt while he refers the reader who may wish to study the subject at length to those well known works, Thrupp's "History of Coaches," Stratton's "The World of Wheels," and Adams's "English Pleasure Carriages."

The average reader will prefer, however, to follow Mr. Rogers's own individual and intelligent condensation and review of the history of the development of the coach in earlier times and in our day of the sport of coaching. He tells us that

It is sometimes supposed that the American coach was invented especially for use on the early and rough American roads, but this is evidently the European vehicle of the latter part of the eighteenth century, arrested in its development, because the conditions of the roads in those parts of the United States where coaches were used, resembled the conditions existing at that time in Europe.

Passing from England to America, it is very gratifying to note that the author takes up the crusade which for some years has been waged in THE NEW YORK TIMES against the incorrect use of the word "tally-ho," to describe a four-in-hand coach. Mr. Rogers says: "Tally-ho is entirely incorrect and should not be used. It originated thus: When, in 1876, Col. De Lancey Kane first put on his road coach from the Brunswick Hotel, New York, to Pelham, he named it the 'Tally-ho.' This was in accordance with the old English custom of giving names to coaches, just as, for many years, engines were named on railroads. 'Tally-ho,' 'Tantivy,' 'Lightning,' 'Meteor,' 'Defiance,' 'Quicksilver,' 'Independent,' were favorite names, and were used in advertising the coaches and in speaking of them on the road. Some newspapers in writing about the Pelham coach called it the 'Tally-ho,' and others, less well informed, called it a four-horse coach 'tally-ho.' Many mild protests were made, without avail, by coaching men, against such an incorrect expression, and finally an American dictionary, the Century, published in 1891, enshrined and perpetuated the error as follows:

"'Tally-ho, (tal-i-ho) [tally-ho, interj.] 1. A cry of 'Tally-ho.' See the interjection. 2. A four-in-hand pleasure coach; probably so called from the horn blown on it.

"'The mail still announces itself by the merry notes of the horn; the hedge cutter or the rick thatcher might still know the exact hour by the unfailing yet otherwise meteoric apparition of the pea-green Tally-ho or the yellow Independent.—George Eliot, "Felix Holt."'

"Webster's Dictionary (1892) gives the same erroneous definition. Worcester's last edition is correct, and gives only the proper meaning of the word. After having been for so long a time thus popularly used, the expression will probably survive, but the coaching fraternity, at least, should avoid it."

The chapters on American coaches and coaching will be found full of interest, even by the non-coaching reader, while those on driving, the position of the hands on the reins, &c., can be commended to the study not only of four-in-hand whips, but to all persons aspiring to drive correctly. The chapter on the proper horses for a coach or drag are also instructive and interesting, while Mr. Rogers gives valuable points on such details as the men, their duties, and their dress, which, if they could be studied, particularly by coach owners and drivers in the Western cities, might possibly prevent some very absurd and, at times, laughable mistakes. The dress of drivers and owners is also described.

This brief account of the more salient points and reference to the most interesting chapters of Mr. Rogers's elaborate and carefully compiled work may suffice to draw the attention of the many lovers of coaching and the many thousands whose purses do not allow them to participate in the sport, which is now one essentially for millionaires, to the work. In reading its pages there will come to them some of the feeling of older times and older manners, which is so well voiced by Austin Dobson in his lines:

With slower pen men used to write,
In Anne's or in George's day;
. . . . . .
But now—electric light hath dazed our sight,
We may not write—ah would we might
With slower pen.

‡A MANUAL OF COACHING. By Fairman Rogers. 8vo. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott Company.

As It Looks Outside.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

While reading lately a book on military tactics, to oblige a friend, I was impressed by the many illustrations of its principles to be found in this Letter Box. In more senses than one our editor ably conducts THE SATURDAY REVIEW, and whatever his tastes he doesn't always sit beside the Lamb.

First came the Cynic, brandishing his steel. Good weapons his, sharp, cold, and without filigree, but he bore the tremendous disadvantage of fighting upon lower ground, especially when fired upon from the church and mountain.

Next came the anti-Kiplingites, with banner "West of Suez." This was a fine body of Norsemen, as gracious and attractive in many ways that one regretted to find them not quite familiar with the ground. Their orders were to ride straight for the leader, but they only carried off poor Tommy Atkins.

After them came an army of famous men marshaled by a gentleman from Philadelphia. He took up a good position and gave good attack. His mistake lay in underestimating the foe. Not only are new recruits joining the regular army every day, but further, every man, woman, and child in all the country around is ready, at the slightest provocation and with no preparation, to "lend a hand"; as every editor knows in that far land of fair romance the cry is still "my country, right or wrong, God bless her!" Moreover, wherever a humorist stands or a magic teller of tales, around him gather a guard of the sick, the suffering, the weary, and depressed. Against their shield of blessing what missiles can prevail?

Last of all came an army from the Far West, where they had managed nevertheless "to raise a thirst" for grog. Commander in Chief from Oakland made a sally conspicuous for reckless daring. What did he attempt to do? Why, everything! Right into the midst of the enemy's camp he rode, scattering ammunition in all directions. His largest regiment was sent in pursuit of Capt. Horn, while a smaller force tried to intercept Diana at the Crossways, only to encounter the egoist whose very name is invincible. Others tried to run down what they thought a mere "Pudden Head," but it proved to be a Yankee at the Court of King Arthur, which is a combination not to conjure with. Retreat was inevitable, yet would not Oakland wholly abandon the field. "A thing, the world itself to win, my Cid could not have done!" He retired to his tent and called for pen and ink. Because he was a great General? No. Because he was a good lawyer? Yes. "It is well," he mused, "to prove one's case." Then he thought of Henley and Tourgenieff, and having precedent knew he was safe.

The next day he rode forth again. It was a brilliant sortie—well planned, well executed. Even the walls of the huge old fortress trembled under his storm of ridicule, while cheers resounded from the battlements of his foes. We hope he will come again an' stay. A. Z. S.

Zangwill's Masterpiece.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Complying with the request of one of your correspondents, who is an enthusiastic admirer of Zangwill's masterpiece, I take the liberty of using your valued columns as means of responding to what appears to me an excellent review to that wonderfully natural pen picture of Jewish life in the Ghetto.

The portrayal of the marvelous variety of Jewish characters, the description of orthodox ceremonials and their significance, the powerful influence of a loving and indulgent parent over an otherwise headstrong daughter, tend to convey to the non-Jewish world a new and comprehensive idea of a misunderstood people.

It is regretted that the loftier characters of the book are set apart from the others as great exceptions to the "average run of Jews." Hannah was fascinated by the polished David Brandon, who (due to his refinement and culture) was thought to have come from some "out-of-the-way" place. David, on the other hand, was drawn to Hannah because she was so different from the other girls of the Ghetto. Reb Shemuel was honored and revered, because of his exceptional wisdom and goodness.

Beyond these, however, we have a Malka, the veritable shrew; Mrs. Belcovitch, an imaginary invalid, who complains of her mismatched legs; Shoshy, a shy, harmless fool; Moses Ansell, who prefers prayer instead of work; Sam Levine, a boisterous commercial traveler. With these life-like characters to entertain us, Mr. Zangwill carries us through to the end of a wonderful story.

The decision of Hannah in remaining with her parents was not a "triumph of Jewish law," as has been persistently reiterated. Hannah was never religious. Her resolution was prompted by her keen appreciation of her father's sense of justice and duty. Her association of the Vigdol with her father recalled to her her childhood days and reminded her of his benediction containing the wish that she "may become as Sarah, Rebecca, Leah, and Rachel."

Curious About an Advertisement.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Of all the journals, magazines, and papers that come to my home I find THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW by far the most interesting, and most instructive, and I think it is only right to say so to you. That of last Saturday, I have found especially interesting. I wonder who wrote that advertisement for Doubleday & McClure about their book, "Bob, Son of Battle"! It is very refreshing. I get so tired of these people who are always advertising "Publishers' price, so much! Our price, so much!" I suppose they do fool a lot of people, but I should think they would disgust more. I hope they will read the advertisement mentioned and profit by it.

I was glad also to read "L. K.'s" letter about Francis Parkman. In certain circles Parkman is "accepted" and "above discussion"; not so with the general reading public. There you will find him less known than almost any other American writer. So much the worse for the general reading public!

I hope you will act on the suggestion of "T. W. C." and give us an "Index Expurgatorius." It will be beneficial to a multitude of us who do not know as much as we ought. I find I must differ with him as to the word "catch." I think I do "catch a car"! Not, as in my younger days, I used to catch a ball, but just as I used to catch a boy, when playing "catch"! I seldom "overtake" a car now; I prefer to have the car "overtake" me! Neither do I think that "reach" or "get to" expresses the act of taking or getting on a car. But what a lot of things we do "catch"! We catch cold; we catch the smallpox! We "catch a licking"! We "catch on" to a joke! We "catch" a wife or a husband, and a lot more things!

A READING MAN.

Brooklyn, Nov. 28, 1899.

Agrees with Morgan Robertson.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

I have read with much interest and pleasure Mr. Morgan Robertson's letter in your issue of Nov. 18, concerning the treatment of sailors on American ships. Like Mr. Robertson, I, too, have waited some twenty years for "the power and opportunity to speak on this subject." The power I fear will ever be wanting, but the opportunity, thanks to the brilliant group of nautical writers, which includes Mr. Robertson and Mr. Butler, has arrived for all who desire that the truth should be known, and their name is legion.

Mr. Robertson's three propositions are undeniable, but he would be a rash man who would assert that the practices complained of are entirely confined to American ships. It is my experience that the so-called "Bluenose," or British North American ship, is in many cases quite as much a "floating hell" as any Yankee; for on board both "belaying-pin soup" is the leading feature of the day's menu, and many are the young lives that have been irretrievably ruined by the brutality they have encountered on such vessels. There can be no question that the life on board an English merchantman is as different to that on the average American as can well be imagined, for, while the laws governing the mercantile marine of both nations are almost identical, in one case they are rigidly enforced, in the other—well, the less said about it the better! The question has often been asked why so few native seamen are to be found in deep-water American ships. The reason is not far to seek; the masters and mates of these vessels do not care to carry them, for they know that no American-born seaman would submit for one moment to the treatment it is their pleasure to mete out to their crews.

This is not perhaps a subject that should be aired in a literary review, but I feel that some confirmation of Mr. Robertson's statements from an outside source may serve to make them more conclusive.

A MERCHANT SEAMAN.

New York, Nov. 24, 1899.

Bibliography in a Western Bookshop.

We have heard a great many boasts made about Western books and authors, and about Western publishers and bookmaking in general. We have even been told that before very long the West would do all that the East was doing, and, moreover, would do it much better. Of course we do not believe this. Still, from time to time we have been obliged to note several startling things in the literary line that have come out of the West. But we have made no comparisons. Nor do we now, with a most extraordinary specimen of literary achievement before our eyes. We had heard of The Burrows Brothers Company of Cleveland. We knew that they sold books. And we naturally supposed that they made their customers acquainted with their wares by means of some sort of catalogue or list. What this list or catalogue might be we did not know. We know now, for a copy has been sent to us. It is an extraordinary surprise.

The Burrows Brothers Company announce their books to the reading public through a brochure of over 400 pages, printed on a fine imitation of English hand-made paper, into which the plates sink with all the distinctness and softness of old hand-made type. A rubricated title page bears the inscription, "A Catalogue of the Best Books in Every Department of Literature." The table of contents informs the book-lover of the division of literature where he may find the books of which he is in search. Then comes the classified list of the general divisions, "Gift and Holiday Books," "Fiction," "Collective Biography," "Individual Biography," "Reference Books," "Travel," &c. Some idea of the elaborate and exhaustive scheme of the "Departments of Literature" may be gathered from the fact that under the heading "Religious Works" there are no less than eighteen subdivisions. Thus classified, the books may be found described in the department of literature to which they belong, both under the title or the author's name. The descriptions are quite full; in fact, fuller than those presented in the catalogues of libraries, public or private, that we know anything about. At the end of the classified lists is an index referring back to the page where any book or author may be found. The extent and value of the index may be judged, and an estimate may be made concerning the character of the "items," when it is said that the index contains over 12,000 names of authors and books, the latter being briefly dwelt upon in the main part of the catalogue, in such a way, the preface states, "as will guide the peruser to a better knowledge of the books than would be afforded by the mere mention of the title and author's name."

We suppose that The Burrows Brothers Company convey intelligence to their customers in this way because they find it convenient to do so. But, without pursuing this side of the question further, of one thing we are certain—the catalogue has a distinct bibliographical value that is not often met with in publications of its class.

The following is an extract from a letter of Count Tolstoy, written Nov. 3, 1899, at Yasnaia Poliana, to "E. H. C." who had sent him a copy of "Plain Talk in Psalm and Parable," recently published by Small, Maynard & Co.: "I like the book very, very much. Some of the pieces—the choice is difficult, because all are very good—will have translated into Russian and published. There is nothing more new and interesting than the most common subjects, looked at from a Christian point of view, and that is what you are doing in your book, and doing well, clear and concisely."

This school life is portrayed with rare skill, and the conversations are all piquant and natural. A sparkling humor pervades the book, and the sterling good sense taught throughout will be gratefully appreciated by all mothers looking for the best reading for their daughters.

CAMPING ON THE ST. LAWRENCE
Or on the Trail of the Early Discoverers. By EVERETT T. TOMLINSON. Illustrated. Cloth, 412 pages, $1.50.

WE FOUR GIRLS
By MARY G. DARLING. Illustrated. 12mo, cloth, $1.25.
A bright, healthy story of a Summer vacation enjoyed by four girls in the country, where they were sent for study and recreation. The story has plenty of natural incidents; and a mild romance, in which they are all interested, and of which their teacher is the principal person, gives interest to the tale.

After a recent three years' residence in England, during which period the author was permitted to become closely acquainted with the English at their homes and to study thoroughly their country and its institutions, she has presented this new volume to the public. While many of the events recorded are familiar to most people, she considered it "worth while to gather together their salient features and their most interesting details, and to present them in this condensed form for future reference." The period between the opening of Parliament in August, 1805, and the celebration of the Queen's diamond jubilee in 1897, was a peculiarly interesting one in English history. In that time the Conservative Party returned to power with such a majority as it had not had for two generations; after twenty years of parley Ashantee was reduced, and Prince Henry of Battenberg's life sacrificed as a result; after half a century of controversy a settlement of the Venezuela boundaries was arranged; then the Transvaal was entered by Dr. Jameson, and his arrest and trial followed. The jubilee year was marked by the great State ceremonials, a powerful reminder of the people's veneration for the Queen and the vast extent and wealth of her empire.

The volume contains twenty-six chapters upon nearly as many subjects. Each chapter is complete in itself, and the volume is delightfully interesting in whatever part the reader takes it up. The description of the author's visit to Sir Frederick, afterward Lord, Leighton at Arab House, in Holland Park Road, is very entertainingly written. He gave her the impression of a man light-hearted and full of fun, charmingly at ease, and with the faculty of making his guests at ease. His hair and beard were white and his fine eyes still bright, notwithstanding his years and poor health, while his features were nearly as classical as those he loved to paint. Sir Frederick exhibited to his guest his beautiful Moorish court, the walls of which were of blue and white tiles, every one selected by the artist himself, a collection which had required years for its completion. There was a fountain in a black marble basin in the centre of the court and carved Moorish grilles before the windows, with cushioned divans under them. It was like a bit of Aladdin's palace set down in London.

One chapter is devoted to Carlyle and his former home. The latter, No. 5 Cheyne Row, has been purchased for about $8,000 by a subscription fund to which, as usual, Americans were liberal subscribers, and turned over to Trustees for its keeping. The house is now open to the public. It is one more evidence of the irony of destiny that the privacy and seclusion which were maintained always by Carlyle have been at last invaded, and the house from which the intruding Philistine was ever barred during his lifetime should have finally become a museum which any one may visit upon payment of a shilling. The collection of Carlyle relics displayed, however, is very limited. An old bathtub, a few utensils, a dilapidated silk hat, a photograph of the author, some pencil sketches, and the desk upon which most of his works were written, compose the bulk of the collection. The desk is a plain deal one, varnished, with sloping lid.

Some Americans believe the English girl to be dull and awkward—a mistaken impression. She is, however, shy and silent until spoken to. She is kept in the background by her elders and consequently does not age so quickly as our American daughters. But if once drawn into conversation we find our English friend highly intelligent, well read, and able to criticise and compare with surprising accuracy and judgment. She is taught the useful and practical household arts; sewing and mending, also the finer branches of needlework; to cook and to keep accounts. This last is considered very essential, and to this training is undoubtedly traced the origin of the English business woman. Carelessness, inaccuracy, or ignorance in the matter of expenditure is regarded with great disapprobation. The young girls are usually skilled in all manner of out-of-door sports.

The book closes with an extended and graphic description of the Diamond Jubilee, so recent that its details are familiar to all, and hence need not here be repeated.

Aside from the interest of general and important political events which we have in the volume, it proves conclusively how impossible it is for us to judge our foreign neighbors unless we know them beside their own hearth and under their own roof, or their country and its institutions with any accuracy unless we study them, without prejudice, upon the soil where they were rooted. We took up the book in doubt as to its real merit, (there are so many handbooks and "bits of travel" on England,) but we laid it down with genuine satisfaction, having learned much from it that as mere travelers and sightseers we never could have known.

A Book of the Opera.*

Said M. de Voltaire, "That which is too silly (sot) to be spoken is sung," but Voltaire was not musical, as was his rival, Jean Jacques Rousseau. Unquestionably there was a want for just such a nice volume as Mr. Charles Annesley has arranged, which he calls "The Standard Opera Glass." In it is to be found the detailed plots of 123 celebrated operas. At the very least, this work ought to do away with that uncomfortable feeling of "the book of the opera" which disturbs the admirers of music during operatic performances.

Taking Mr. Annesley's book as it begins with "Aida," "Abu Hassan," and concludes with Herold's "Zampa," "Certainly the French manufacturers of libretti were clever, and Scribe wrote many smart ones. "Le Domino Noir" is a charming comedy. "Fra Diavolo" has its merits, and in the dramatic way so has "Les Huguenots." "La Figlia del Regimento," by St. George and Bayard, ad pted itself precisely to Donizetti music. There are two famous operas of Mozart's, "Don Juan" and "Le Nozze di Figaro," the text by Lorenzo Da Ponte. Mr. Annesley writes that "the text written by Mozart's friend is far above the level of ordinary opera texts."

What may we say of the Wagner texts? Admirably adapted are they to his musical potentialities, and that is sufficient praise. But to overlaud Wagner in a literary sense, or to insist that if he had not been a grand musician he would have been the first dramatic author of his day, is to show narrowness of judgment.

"The Standard Opera Glass" is useful in many ways, for it contains biographical notices with dates of performances of operas past and present, and so Mr. Charles Annesley's volume will be found of great advantage to all who love music.

Calendars—Literary and Artistic.

The calendars for 1900 presented by various publishing houses show in many cases a distinct improvement over those of last year, in literary as well as in artistic qualities. The tendency of the times has made them assume an importance which goes far beyond their original usefulness as mere recorders of dates.

"The Richard Mansfield Calendar," published by D. Appleton & Co., has on its cover a drawing in two colors representing Mr. Mansfield in the rôle of Cyrano de Bergerac. Between the covers are pages containing half-tone pictures of the actor in his various leading parts, together with pertinent quotations from the plays mentioned, in facsimiles of Mr. Mansfield's handwriting. On alternate pages are pen-and-ink drawings suggestive of the actor in his most memorable scenes.

"The Kipling Kalendar for 1900," published by the Doubleday & McClure Company, is a somewhat imposing work of art. The calendar proper is merely a pad consisting of 365 slips of paper, each containing a brief passage from the author's works more or less appropriate to the day. The mount to the calendar is a bas-relief in brass-foil designed by the author's father, Mr. Lockwood Kipling. It is a profile likeness of Mr. Kipling, Jr., flanked by two elephant heads, with a figure of Mowgli and his jungle companions below.

Frederick A. Stokes Company are publishing several beautiful calendars this year. Among those in color are "The Zogbaum Calendar," "A Calendar of American Wild Flowers," by Mrs. Ella Rowan, "A Calendar of the American Indians," by Maud Humphrey, and an amusing series of children "playing" at the great personages of the Spanish-American War. In photogravure calendars there is one of famous sculpture, one of religious paintings, and one of famous portraits. In calendars with half tone, Frederick A. Stokes Company offer "The Recessional Calendar," with large illustrations of Mr. Kipling's famous poem, accompanied with the complete text; "The de Thulstrup Calendar," with pictures of open-air sports and amusements indulged in by polite society; "Shakespeare Calendar," with twelve notable scenes from the master's plays as drawn by Frank M. Gregory. This house also presents several calendars made up with pen-and-ink drawings: "The Heustis Calendar," with twelve pictures of society by Louise L. Heustis; a "Football Calendar," by Paul P. Gould, showing actual scenes of the great American university sport, drawn by a well-known football player; and "The Calumet Calendar," with Indian pictures by E. W. Deming.

R. H. Russell presents this season several calendars in color. Among them are "The Bird Calendar," containing twelve designs by H. H. Bennett; "The Revolutionary Calendar," twelve drawings by Ernest Peixotto; "The Picaninny Calendar," drawn by E. W. Kemble, and "The Zodiac Calendar," designed by Chester Loomis. There are also four calendars by Frederic Remington, "The Soldier," "Indian," "Frontier," and "Cowboy" calendars. An "Animal Calendar," by Frank Verbeck, twelve animals in a new striking treatment of black and white, and "The Cupid Calendar," designed by J. Campbell Phillips, are also included. Mr. Russell is publishing new editions of "The Golf Calendar," drawn by Edward Penfield, and supplemented by several new designs for 1900; E. W. Kemble's "Coon Calendar," "The Chinese Children's" and "The Sports and Seasons" calendars.

M. F. Mansfield & Wessels have just issued an "Omar Khayyam Calendar," which is artistic in design and represents the passing of the year through appropriate quotations from the Persian poet's verses.

Color Work in "Truth."

"Truth," a monthly publication, has many distinguishing qualities. It follows with special attention the movement, literary, artistic, or social, of the American world of to-day, but is by no means forgetful of foreign matters. There is the text adapted to M. de Thulstrup's illustrations, showing the Centaurs or Amazons of our parks or the fine houses of men or women of wealth of 1899, with the costumes of our forefathers, or the fashionable residences of the last century, say of 1783. American artists find special treatment in Truth. It is in the character of its illustrations where Truth occupies a conspicuous position. It leads in the colored prints, and in addition to those found in its regular issues it offers every month a supplementary one, and sometimes more than one. For its more important illustrations in color Truth uses a particular paper, which very much enhances the quality of the print. Lavish with its pictures, the covers of Truth are always carefully executed in color, and are reproductions of the work of our best artists.

DICKENS.

Interesting Facts Gathered by a Collector.

The hobby forms that appeal to various enthusiasts are many. With one it is postage stamps, with another coins. Book plates, ivory carvings, fans, pipes, old bricks, glass bottles, (sometimes broken,) and a long and expanding line of other objects are shrines before which a devoted homage is willingly paid by those carried captive by the particular objects or series of objects that, in individual cases, rise and become transcendent. With Mr. E. S. Williamson of Toronto, Ontario, it has been a solace and an amusement for some six years or more to gather Dickensiana. The result has been the accumulation of a fairly comprehensive collection of books and other material relating to Dickens. A brochure brought out through the Bryant Press, Toronto, by Mr. Williamson affords lovers of Charles Dickens an opportunity to know what has been the achievement of one of their number, and excites envy, if not covetousness, on the part of those who have not the treasures that Mr. Williamson has. The booklet contains some curious things not to be found elsewhere, and, in this respect especially, differs from most of the books which only repeat some other books, more or less. Many illustrations are decorative features of the Williamson volume, among which are the Elwell sculptured memorial of Dickens exhibited at the World's Fair, a reproduction of a curious title page of an American "Pickwick," signed by Sam Weller and published in Philadelphia in 1838, a fac-simile page of "David Copperfield," as revised by Dickens himself; the homes of Dickens, arranged in their proper sequence, the "Old Curiosity Shop," and the empty chair at Gadshill Place.

An interesting chapter sets forth briefly the history of Francis Jeffrey Dickens, the third son of the novelist. He was born in 1844 and went to Canada shortly after the death of his father, on June 8, 1870. After remaining some time in Toronto, he went to the Canadian Northwest, enjoying to the full the shooting, fishing, and other sport to be found there. Young Dickens made friends among the officers of the mounted police, and, becoming infatuated with their adventurous life in the open, their hazardous duties and freedom from convention, secured an appointment as one of the force of Inspectors.

In 1885, during the Northwest rebellion, it was reported in England that Inspector Dickens had been killed by the Indians in an attack upon Fort Pitt, of which he had charge. This was, however, incorrect, as he held his position on the force until March 1, 1886, when he was invalided from the service. He subsequently died at Moline, Ill., on June 11, 1886.

The first gold watch owned by Charles Dickens was in the possession of Francis Jeffrey Dickens, and was brought by him to Canada. Before going West he became acquainted with F. M. Midford of Toronto, which acquaintance afterward developed into a warm friendship. On his return to Toronto, some years later, it came about one day (so the story goes) that, being in want of money, Dickens said he must sell the watch. Mr. Midford at once declared his readiness to furnish the funds needed and his unwillingness to see such a relic pass into the hands of strangers. "It was my father's first gold watch," said Dickens, "and I'd much rather see it yours, Midford, than a stranger's." It passed thus into Midford's hands, and after his death, at Toronto, in 1891, it became the property of A. G. Midford, a prominent New York business man, in whose hands it still remains, and by whom it is naturally greatly prized.

Charles Dickens once attempted to keep a diary, which attempt did not, however, meet with the success attained by Samuel Pepys. The diary was begun on New Year's Day, 1838, but was abruptly discontinued on the 15th of January following with the entry: "Here ends this brief attempt at a diary. I grow sad at the checking off of days, and can't do it. Keepers of diaries, like poets, must be born, not made."

Mr. Williamson's brochure contains sixty pages of matter, printed on Strathmore deckle-edge paper, with wide margins, and the edition is limited to 250 numbered copies. It is truly a dainty volume, and one that a book lover will enjoy typographically as well as from the standpoint of included text.

A New Venture in Magazines.

Foreign observers are not slow to notice the absence from American publications in the serial form of the quarterly and monthly reviews which find an audience in England and Germany. These publications perform two very distinct services to the community. On the one hand they gather up ephemeral topics and sift the grain from the chaff. Thus a reader of the daily newspaper receives so many contrary impressions, owing to the hurry with which the purveyors for the press are forced to work, that on very important matters his mind remains confused. A review like the Revue des Deux Mondes in France and certain monthlies and fortnightlies in England, whose names will readily occur to the reader, take the place between the daily press and the published book which nothing else can fill. Such magazines are the natural places for the broaching of serious subjects which can hardly be treated at sufficient length in the columns of a daily paper, subjects to which the weeklies, whether attached to a daily or independent of a newspaper, cannot give space.

There was a time when we had monthlies of this stamp, but the extraordinary growth of the daily paper in our chief cities seems quest in the evil way seems to have made the proprietors of the serious monthlies so uneasy that one by one they gave up publishing reviews of the kind, finding it more profitable to issue in the form of a monthly short articles by the men of the day who have gained fame or notoriety in any line of life, articles which are neither better nor worse than those appearing in daily journals. As a matter of fact, these reviews publish interviews without calling them interviews, being very often the hasty opinion of some citizen whom circumstances have elevated for a moment into public notice.

It was inevitable that monthly "journalism"—for that is what it is—of this sort should run its course and that some one should perceive that a broad and most important field, that of a real monthly review, lies unoccupied. The person who seems to have grasped this fact is Frederick A. Richardson of Burlington, Vt., a college graduate and student of sociology, who possesses not only the will but the means to make the venture. Mr. Richardson will issue through the Macmillan Company of New York and Macmillan & Co. of London a monthly publication without illustrations, called The International Review. The first number will appear in January with the following articles:

1. "Later Evolution of French Criticism," by Edouard Rod.
2. "Influence of the Sun upon the Formation of the Earth's Surface," by Prof. Henry Shaler.
3. "Recent Advances in Physical Science," by Prof. John Trowbridge.
4. "The Theatrical Syndicate," by Norman Hapgood.
5. "Organization Among American Artists," by Charles de Kay.

Mr. Richardson entitles his review "A Monthly Magazine of Contemporary Thought," and his purpose is to cover the field in the largest sense. He wishes to touch not only upon philosophy and psychology, upon literature and the fine arts, but upon comparative religion, sociology, and history. Physics, biology, and medicine will be attended to as well as geology, geography, and philology. It appears that he will not hamper himself by strict adherence to these subjects only, for the sub-title of his review, "A Magazine of Contemporary Thought," leaves him free to publish essays of the most varied interest. He has already collected a staff of writers on the departments above mentioned and laid out the schedule for the first six months of his magazine. His purpose is to furnish from five to ten articles each month which are to be serious essays.

The plan as advertised by the Macmillan Company suggests The North American Review as it used to be before the late Allen Thorndike Rice took it in hand. It is good news for students and thinkers, who do not ask that their mental food shall be administered to them in a state of intellectual hash, to find that some one has recognized the need of such an organ and intends to fill the gap left by the old quarterlies and monthly reviews. There is room for such a publication in this country, and it needed only some one with the brains and energy backed by sufficient means to carry it out successfully. Unless every sign fails, Mr. Richardson is about to found a publication of permanent value which will do honor to American thought.

Attempts That Are Elephantine.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

In the issue of Nov. 11 of THE SATURDAY REVIEW there appears a letter signed "Iconoclast," in which he sets forth his views of that eminent author, Prof. Brander Matthews. Well may he sign himself "Iconoclast," although he might write himself down by another title which would as well fit his sentiments, for his expressions are such as to give the reader the opinion that he is lacking not only in artistic perception, but in common, every-day wits.

His elephantine attempt at witticism in dealing with Mr. Matthews's title of professor is as utterly without foundation as it is absolutely lacking in wit. But that any one should stoop to notice it is as absurd as is its conception. I doubt if it brought the semblance of a smile to one out of the thousands of readers of THE SATURDAY REVIEW.

But to return to Mr. Matthews's writings. His short sketches which appear from month to month in Harper's are literary gems, in spite of our dear "Iconoclast's" inability to see it. They are word pictures of every-day life such as we, one and all of us, see, but which we are unable to depict with even a semblance of the master hand of Mr. Matthews. He writes of the great thoroughfares of our greater metropolis; of the tall skeletonlike buildings which tower over us and enshroud us in shadow by day, and which are silhouetted against the sky at night; ghostlike, yet formidable, monuments of the life of man, of toil and poverty, of indolence and riches; marked by the wear and tear of humanity in its daily struggle, and embodying the success of those whose money has helped to rear these gigantic structures.

Who has not toiled along a busy thoroughfare and seen the rattling elevated train whizzing past over his head, and who, looking up, noticed the trail of steam turned to a glorious gold from the light of the roaring fire being fed, to carry a part of the populace to its destination, and not thought that the first idea of such a color scheme, wrought from the necessity of traffic and trade, and in reality a bit of nature's artistic handiwork, was not suggested by one of Mr. Matthews's bits of prose?

There is no writer, to my mind, in this decade who has so truthfully depicted the world as it is, and humanity in all its foibles, good and bad, as Brander Matthews. He is an idealist in that he idealizes the happenings of every-day life and crystallizes them into literature to be read by an unthinking people and to bring them to a realization of the beauty to be derived from a curl of steam rising from the top of a "sky-scraper" and tinged with silver or gold by the rays of the sinking sun as it drops in all its golden glory behind the wall of haze from the smoke and toil of the busy city. He is a realist, as he makes all this a reality to the thoughtless readers of his books. His vignettes and sketches are pen pictures inimitable for their truth and beauty and a boon to all thinking people, even though they be beyond the ken of such as our "Iconoclast" seems, by his own confession, to be.

Perhaps, though he is not familiar with Mr. Matthews's longer stories, the one, for instance, just from the press entitled "A Confident To-Morrow." There my friend, the "Iconoclast," will find the alpha and omega. The "story" and the "plot," I think, are within his grasp, although one so seemingly devoid of all literary perception may need help even in that to find the gist of the tale.

Yet I venture to say he will not have to fall back on his paper knife to "split the leaves" in order to find out what it is all about.

GRACE DWIGHT POTTER.

Syracuse, N. Y., Nov. 12, 1899.

Another Word.

To The New York Times Saturday Review:

Your correspondent of Nov. 11 does not understand the uses of a writer like Prof. Brander Matthews. He complains in a simple-minded way because the latter's stories have no plots or ideas or things like that that the editors overrate them and the reader is disappointed in them. At the same time he admits that their style is all that one could wish. Now, there are two classes of persons to whom the writings of Prof. Brander Matthews strongly appeal. First, there are those who are genuinely fond of the mild and much diluted forms of literature which, instead of suddenly stimulating, impart a gradual and hardly perceptible activity to minds averse to any form of violent exercise. The writings of Prof. Brander Matthews have nothing in them to jolt or jar the placid reader. They do not roughly interrupt his thoughts. Women can hear a story of his read aloud without dropping a stitch in their fancy-work, and many of them can even plan the next day's dinner at the same time. He is a soothing, restful, inobtrusive influence. He is a true family writer. Never a word of his that could annoy, depress, startle, or evoke any unruly emotion. It is the chicken broth of literature, absolutely wholesome, no matter how weak you may be. If his pages are uneventful, they are unsullied; if they do not thrill, they at least comfort. Why complain of him? Must people be thinking all the time? Why should there not be writers for those who do not care to use their minds?

The popularity of a man like Brander Matthews is a good sign. It indicates a wide and deep foundation of simple, healthy tastes. This class of readers is the backbone of the Republic. Their enthusiasm for the simple moral conveyed in transparent English, their delight in the innocent little story which brings in the very lamp-post which they themselves have seen may be primitive, but it argues an unspoiled mind. There is nothing morbid or decadent about readers like these. Your blasé correspondent must not sneer at them. They are the rude, hardy, simple folk whose descendants will inherit from them strong constitutions and sturdy consciences which a higher degree of culture will not impair. C. M. F.

Ancient and Modern Lace.*

Some idea of the high appreciation in which old lace is now held can be gained when it is remembered that Queen Victoria has a collection valued at something like $400,000; the lace property of the Princess of Wales is worth not less than $250,000, while the collection in the hands of Pope Leo XIII. approximates $1,000,000 in value. Many portraits of Queen Elizabeth indicate clearly her fondness for lace and splendid ruffs. George Washington wore lace collars and cravats, as did also some of the other Presidents, as well as Benjamin Franklin, Robert L. Livingston, and many others of our early leaders. The ancient Court dresses and costumes, in which lace was a most important part, were often prodigal in value, and some courtiers are said to have worn laces at Court functions the money value of which ranged between $300,000 and $400,000.

Into the consideration of such a subject the present book plunges. Lace, as we now understand it, in spite of its obscure origin, belongs, like music, essentially to modern times, and, taking into account its extreme fragility, it may perhaps safely be said that no lace now existing has an age in excess of 300 years, and that but little of such fine or open lace as can be used for articles of dress or dress garniture is more than 200 years old.

There are, as the title of the present book indicates, two great classes of hand-made lace—first, and most highly esteemed, lace made with the needle, that is, needle-point lace, and second, lace made on a pillow with bobbins; that is, pillow lace. The chief centres of needle lacemaking were Venice, Brussels, and Alançon. Pillow laces of some sort were, on the other hand, at some time or other, made all over Europe, but nowhere else did they attain to such beauty as in Flanders, where, according to some, the art was invented. The history of lace and embroidery reflects to a certain extent the course of human history, upon which it is often a flickering sidelight, just as the illuminated initials, borders, and miniatures are the artist illuminators' recorded commentary on the manuscript books of the Middle Ages.

The earlier laces were largely devoted to the adornment of sacerdotal vestments and oth objects of ecclesiastical use, to which they were particularly well adapted, and into the patterns of the period were introduced many symbolical and Scriptural subjects then greatly in favor. Subsequent to the fourteenth century, the use of lace was less restricted and it entered into royal and popular favor that grew in magnitude until it approached, if it did not pass, the Dutch love of tulips that finally became so ruinous. It appears during the seventeenth century as a detailed garniture of the boots then worn.

Michael Angelo, Raphael, Holbein, Guido, Vandyke, and other famous artists, not only countenanced point lace by introducing it into their finest works, but found time to turn aside from their painting art to produce designs for the improvement of lace manufacture. The pattern books of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries that have been preserved to us show some marvelous designs that are thus exceedingly interesting.

The account given by A. M. S. of the legendary origin of "Rose Point" (called by her "Coraline Point") differs somewhat from Mrs. Bury-Palliser's account in her "History of Lace," but both stories have many points of similarity. The bobbins used by some English and other pillow lace makers possess a romantic history of their own. For many generations they were, and doubtless still are, carefully handed down from mother to daughter. Frequently they are of carved wood, although old bobbins are often found made of bone instead of wood (whence, perhaps, arose the term "bone lace.") They are sometimes very curiously decorated; indeed, they seem to have been often used as love tokens between the young people of the day. They are sometimes stained with red or other colors. Rings of metal are fastened to them at intervals, or brass wire is wound around them, and "gingles," or bunches of colored beads, are hung from the end strung on a loop of wire, which are at times utilitarian as well as decorative, in increasing the tension of the thread by adding to the weight of the bobbin. Mottoes of various kinds are often burned or cut into a bobbin, as, and again it is the name of the giver, as "Dear Joseph," which is so inscribed, and sometimes the girl's name, as "Sarah," appears. Not only the bobbins, but the variously shaped pillows also, were the subject of much pride and pleasure, and even the pins were not infrequently objects of ornamentation. Machine-made lace has in recent years very largely supplanted the old-time hand-made products, and yet, in spite of the mechanical superiority of machine lace, its never-failing regularity and perfection of finish, it must, by reason of its very perfection, lack the impression of life which the very faults and irregularities of human handiwork can alone produce. We are so made, according to A. M. S., that the imperfect even pleases us more than the perfect, if it tells us that human beings have expended time and zeal in their efforts after perfection.

"Love me or Leave me a Lone for ever."

The letter press of the book is, generally speaking, very good, but the inverted printing of several of the illustrations somewhat mars the appearance of the book in detail.

A few of the laces described in the book may be seen at the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

BohemianLife in Paris.

Paris has well been called the gay city, and the Parisian artists and students are a most important element of the city's gayety. They lend to Paris a certain picturesqueness that no other city enjoys. The students are the pets of Paris, and the Latin Quarter, in which they are dominant, is world famous. They have their hopes and fears, and underneath the careless life they seem to lead is often a hidden one of hard work, of aspiration and a burning desire to excel, mingled with a contention against the most pinching poverty and cruel self-denial over which it would seem impossible to prevail. An insight has been given in the present volume into the life of the students and other bohemians of Paris by one of their number. The cafés, cabarets, and dance halls, as described and illustrated, have an artistic charm and a novelty that wholesome, well-balanced minds will enjoy, notwithstanding a disregard of the conventions that prevail there. The real life of the art student is pictured for us from arrival in Paris to his introduction and initiation into the Ecole des Beaux Arts or other atelier. There is no attempt to soften the events that go to make up the studio experience of the student, but we see it as it is, with all its light and shade, happiness and disappointment. "Studying art in Paris" means a great deal more than would appear to those who hear what to them is only this empty phrase, and the present book makes the words full of significance, both wide and deep. Paris itself is unique, but Bohemian Paris is superlatively unique and spectacular. The writer has certainly caught the spirit of his described subject and painted a most excellent as well as instructive portrait.

"The Degeneration of Dorothy."

Oyez! Oyez! I, the undersigned, being of sound mind and free will, do hereby beg to protest. It is certainly time, I fancy, to voice the demurrer against the extraordinary lengths to which the present-day novelist goes in the invention of plots, which, in the face of them, are obviously and purely and simply a sop to the "something new" loving spirit of the age.

"The Degeneration of Dorothy" is a special and glowing instance of this bizarre straining after effect. The author modestly bases his theme upon transfusion of blood and its consequent effect upon character. Imagine a transfusion necessarily implying a transformation! The idea is at once altogether far-fetched and quite beyond ordinary consideration. But that is not the worst of it. It is in the manner in which the subject is treated that mainly lies the insult to one's intelligence. Not satisfied with starting off with such a preposterous plot, Mr. Kinsella must, perforce, set down and, with a sublime belief in his theory and a wonderfully serene seriousness, proceed to depict its effect, step by step and stage by stage, through a series of bewildering and melodramatic incidents with an apparent logical realism and a grave consideration of cause and effect that would be deserving of a more worthy cause. This is especially evidenced where, in reference to a peculiar jumble of dreams the author, in a footnote, gravely quotes the London Society of Psychical Research.

Laying his scene in the twelfth century or some other benighted period might be tolerable, but the author does "rap it in" by locating the action of the story in the very present period of every-day (modern) life. [illegible] ing smarting of a four-horse power mustard plaster.

Is this literature? I should say decidedly not! Then what in Heaven's name is it, and what is the use of this "the stuff of which (pipe) dreams are made"?

Feeling that I have been led by the nose by the wily author through an improbable series of cunningly contrived incidents, and to no avail at all in the line of mental improvement, I beg to protest against this tendency in our latter-day literature. This novel is advertised as appealing to the "honest reader," and as I make bold to consider myself in that category, I ask that you kindly publish this protest from

AN HONEST READER.

Chicago, Nov. 19, 1899.

"Children of the Ghetto."

A letter appeared in last week's issue of THE REVIEW, headed "Children of the Ghetto," from Irene Carter, who asks: "Is there any feeling but honor in our hearts for the old man, (Reb Shemuel,) who by his decision obeyed his law, his God, even though it tore out his own and even his daughter's heart?" There is certainly in my heart another feeling than honor. Any man that opposes, in the name of religion, an abstract, utterly irrational, pre-Christian law to the pure, holy, human, and sane instincts of a woman's heart is a fanatic. Torquemada had what he called his "idea of duty"—it was to forcibly save souls from hell by bodily tortures. Reb Shemuel is a modern survivor of this inquisitor. He tortures spiritually because the rack is proscribed. Religion! That is the sublimest religion of all that teaches eternal constancy in love. Reb Shemuel is a man who believes in the letter, and the letter killeth, while the spirit saveth. I should have felt like shouting for joy had the lovers in "The Children of the Ghetto" thrown the glove of revolt in Reb's face, rushed into each other's arms, and thence shaken the dust of the Ghetto forever from their heels, and lived their lives according to the dictates of their hearts. Honor indeed! Honor to those who do their duty; and to do one's duty is simply to do what is right; and to do what is right is to live according to the highest in you and the highest in conformity with what Irene Carter's [illegible]

CRITICISM OF THE BRITISH GENERALS

The Public Impatient at the Slow Progress Made.

EUROPE'S HATRED MADE PLAIN

Australian Federation May Not Come for Some Time.

The Late Sir Henry Tate—An Absurd Scheme to Raise Money for Sufferers from the War.

Special to The New York Times.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—A week of gnawing anxiety has drawn to its close without bringing relief in the shape of decisive war news. We are getting heartily sick of the daily hash of victories, Boer bayonetings, treacheries, surprises, lootings, and so forth, and the mind of the public is centred on two coming events, the relief of Ladysmith and Kimberley.

Why has Lord Methuen been kept for nearly a fortnight apparently within striking distance of the Diamond City? What delays the chariot wheels of the commander in chief in Natal? We are beginning to distrust our Generals. Methuen is called a bragging fellow, and has come in for a considerable amount of sly mockery over his telegram about the Modder River fight being "one of the hardest battles in the annals of the British Empire." The sarcastic correspondent of one of the newspapers dryly pointed out that Methuen lost little more than 7 per cent of his force, against between 27 and nearly 50 per cent. killed and wounded in some of the great battles of the Peninsular war.

We have begun, therefore, to cry out for a new General in Chief, but this is only unreasoning impatience. The difficulties, as I have told you more than once, in the way of a rapid advance are greater than people here have the slightest conception of, and I am disposed rather to credit both the Generals in command of the forces now in touch with the enemy with unusual prudence in delaying their forward movements until they can hope to undertake them with the minimum danger of defeat. Lord Methuen's rashness consisted in rushing so far north of the Orange River with insufficient provision for supporting troops to protect his base. The danger arising from his impetuosity should by this time have been remedied.

THE DEFENSE OF MAFEKING.

While great events are waited for, the public appetite for sensational news has been in some small measure gratified by the stories of the heroic defense of Mafeking and the brilliant work of the army marching through Rhodesia to its relief. All are nice and showy for a variety theatre, but there has been no incident in this unfortunate strife really less deserving of commendation from any point of view than the said heroic defense of Mafeking. Col. Baden-Powell does no good there to anybody. The Boers never had any serious intention of striking northward into Rhodesia, and all we can say about the business is that the gallant Colonel in command is a member of a family celebrated for its ingenuity and perseverance in advertising its own talents. They are clever men and capital trumpeters.

BRITAIN AND DELAGOA BAY.

German critics are again discussing the possibility of an invasion of the Transvaal by way of Delagoa Bay, and some of them insist that this is the only route to follow if we expect to end the war soon. Whether there is malice behind this suggestion or not, I cannot dogmatically assert, but it is probable that were we to be tempted to break down the neutrality of Portugal and change our base to Lourenço Marques, we should set Europe by the ears, and presently find ourselves attacked at some weak point by one or other of our many enemies.

Surely we shall presently have sufficient troops in South Africa to be able to overcome those sturdy farmers without taking any step calculated to upset the frail structure of European peace. With the troops now on the way added to those already landed the Under Secretary for War informed an admiring audience the other night, we shall have about 106,000 men in the field, without counting the 1,500 or 2,000 already captured by the burghers. This calculation, I believe, does not include the seventh division, now being scrambled together from all the odds and ends of reservists, cavalry regiments, militia and yeomen, the War Office can lay its hands upon. We have denuded this country of troops, and ought to have more than 120,000 men in the field a few weeks hence, including the drafts from the Indian, Australian, Canadian, Cape, and Natal volunteers. If that force be not sufficient to accomplish the purpose, woe betide us, for we are at the end of our resources in men, and not even the most complacent jingo would contemplate with equanimity the importation of native Indian troops into the strife.

CHAMBERLAIN A SCAPEGOAT.

The Continent is still pounding away at Mr. Chamberlain's speeches, and, reading the deliverances of foreign newspapers of all shades, one can only reach the conclusion that he is the most hated and despised statesman of our time. I am disposed to regard all this denunciation and fury as having in it somthing of pretense. It is not Mr. Chamberlain specially that these nations hate; it is Great Britain, and his impudent words and foolish theatrical display of likes and dislikes have merely served to provide an opportunity for our enemies to tell us what they think about us.

For example, we can henceforth have no delusion about the feeling with which our attack upon the two little republics of South Africa is regarded abroad, and as little about the sentiments enterained toward our imperial masterfulness in all parts of the world. Europe would strike at us, every nation in it, if it could, and the exhibition now being given to us of its temper and sentiments may well increase the anxiety with which we watch events at the seat of war.

Yet even here a touch of sweet irony comes, as when the French Government gave orders that the sale of German caricatures insulting Queen Victoria must not be permitted in Paris.

I wish one could get more cheerful and entertaining subjects to write about, but it is at present nearly impossible to throw the war nightmare off.

THE BAGDAD RAILWAY SCHEME.

Something akin to amusement, however, may be found in the anger of Russia about that Bagdad railway which I mentioned last week. If the readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES will take a map and trace the route to be followed by the projected line, from its connection with the present Anatolian Railway, which is in German hands, all the way to the mouth of the Euphrates, it will be seen that the completion of such a road would destroy the liberty of Russia to strike unawares at Constantinople from Asia Minor when it pleases her to do so. Her position along the southern littoral of the Black Sea would be turned or dangerously outflanked by this railway, which may be built some day, although not yet awhile, I imagine, and when built might in the distant future pay. But this is unquestionably extremely clever as a political stroke, in the game the European nations play to obtain each a more favorable standpoint than the other from which to claim its share of the "Sick Man's" heritage.

AUSTRALIAN AFFAIRS.

I do not suppose that Australian domestic affairs interest you very much, although the prospect of a large Federal State coming into being in the Southern Ocean, on lines somewhat akin to those upon which your own Union has been built, might have considerable political significance for you in the future. A little while ago it looked as if such a federation was about to be accomplished, at any rate so far as settlements in the Australian mainland were concerned.

I was never an enthusiast for the scheme, believing it to be premature, and that the economic conditions of the various settlements differed too widely for them to come to an understanding or equitable arrangement as a foundation for permanent fusion. Recent topsyturvies among the Ministries of New South Wales and Victoria and elsewhere give support to this view, and I am more than ever disposed to think that some considerable period must elapse before we see a Federal Parliament established in the Federal capital yet to be selected, and over the selection of which heart burnings and quarrels are likely to arise. It is just as well that there should be no haste.

SOLICITOR COMMITS SUICIDE.

A fortnight ago I informed you of the disastrous failure of an important firm of solicitors, and now mention the sequel, the facts having become public here. The partner in the firm, Cartmell Harrison by name, who seems to have done all the mischief, committed suicide a week ago, and the estate is now being wound up in bankruptcy. I gave the liabilities roughly as £300,000, but they will probably be about £400,000, and the creditors can scarcely expect to receive more than a few pence in the pound.

It is a shocking business, and an example of the free and easy manner in which English clients leave their means in the hands of agents. Noblemen's and gentlemen's minds are far too often imbued with a contempt for a knowledge of business, which makes them an easy prey for those whom they allow to manage their affairs unquestioned.

SIR HENRY TATE'S CHARITIES.

Sir Henry Tate, the greatest sugar refiner of this country, has just passed away. His career, or rather that of his firm, for he was in nowise personally distinguished, has been one of really astounding success when we remember the manner in which European bounty-fed sugar has struck the British refining industry with paralysis, or worse. So wealthy was he that for years past large sums of money had been devoted by him to public purposes, and many libraries in London and elsewhere were built by him for the use of the public.

Sir Henry's most conspicuous gift to the nation, however, is the remarkable art gallery erected at his expense on the site of the old Millbank Prison, eight additional rooms of which were opened only a few days before his death.

TO HELP WAR VICTIMS.

Among the many fantastic schemes being discussed to raise money for the British victims of the war, the wives and children of reservists, &c., none is perhaps so utterly mad as that put forward by the President of the Royal Academy and a bustling gentleman named Harry Quilter. It is no less than that 10,000 artists should unite and contribute each one picture in order to form, first, a joint exhibition, and then an equally monstrous auction or art union, the proceeds of which would go to the war fund. As an artist wittily observes, considering the financial position of most knights of the brush, the proposal recalls the story of the old woman who was so much touched by a missionary sermon that she immediately sold her washtub, gave the money to the Lord, and went upon the parish.

Among charitable efforts deserving of favorable notice, none gives more satisfaction than the activity of American ladies resident here in helping to collect funds for the war sufferers. Lady Randolph Churchill has been exceedingly active in organizing the American committee of ladies, and they have not only contributed largely to the successful fitting of the hospital ship Maine, but in other ways have given their time and money to the good cause.

Both Lady Randolph Churchill and the young Duchess of Marlborough are prominent members of this organization, and the good feeling it tends to promote among English people toward America may be of the highest value to both nations when friends in need come to be sought.

UNIVERSITY ASKS $3,000,000.

Northwestern's Needs for Buildings and Other Purposes.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—The faculty of Northwestern University met to-day and discussed the needs of the institution and the amount of money which will be necessary to meet them. Eight new buildings are wanted, among them a chapel, a gymnasium, a German building, and a school of technology. The last will be the most costly, for at present Northwestern has no such department. All of the buildings are to be placed on the Evanston campus, and if possible the law school is to be moved there.

The amount which will be asked exceeds $3,000,000, but just how much the faculty refused to say. A part of this sum will be used to establish professorships and scholarships.

BOARD TO AMEND CHARTER

Gov. Roosevelt Demands Power to Appoint a Commission.

SENATOR PLATT ACCEPTS PLAN

Agrees to Sanction Enabling Bill in the Legislature—Mayor's Term to be Shortened.

New York City's charter is to be amended, but not in the manner first suggested by the leaders of the Republican State organization. This decision was reached yesterday morning at the conference held between Gov. Roosevelt, Senator T. C. Platt, and Chairman Odell at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. The Governor urged that a bill be introduced early in the coming session of the Legislature to empower him to appoint a commission to revise the charter. The Governor told the Senator that he wanted a commission composed of residents of Greater New York; men whose characters were high, and whose knowledge of municipal government was thorough enough to insure a revision of the charter which would not bear the taint of partisanship.

The Governor said he did not want men on the proposed commission who were members of the Legislature, or who hold other public positions. He argued so strongly in favor of the plan that Senator Platt and Chairman Odell finally agreed to support a bill for this purpose. This means that the Cities Committee of the Assembly will not be permitted to frame the bills to amend the charter, as was originally intended by Mr. Platt. This plan was to draft the amendments in accordance with the report to be made by the Mazet committee, as the result of the recently abandoned investigation into the conduct of the local departments.

Gov. Roosevelt's plan is that suggested by the Chamber of Commerce, which at its last meeting passed a resolution advocating it.

It is not thought probable that the proposed Charter Commission will be able to make a report until 1901, although it might recommend to the next Legislature some measures which may be deemed urgent. If the commission fails to make any recommendations it is likely that the Republican organization will push a few bills to amend the charter in such cases as may be thought to admit of no delay. There will be no rush of charter amendment bills, however, according to Mr. Odell and those Assemblymen-elect who have been drafting such measures will have their trouble for their pains, if any of them persist in introducing bills in opposition to the programme the measures will not be permitted to come out of committee.

After yesterday's conference, which lasted nearly three hours, Gov. Roosevelt left the Fifth Avenue Hotel, while Senator Platt hurried to his down-town office. Neither would talk about the subjects which had been under discussion. The Governor contented himself with saying that many matters had been talked over, but excused himself from commenting on anything or saying what decisions had been reached. Chairman Odell was more communicative, and told of what had taken place, or as much of it as he wished.

"We agreed to the proposition to have the charter of New York City revised by a commission to be named by the Governor," said the Chairman.

"No report is expected to be made to the Legislature during the coming session, but the results of the work of the commission to be appointed will be submitted to the Legislature, which will meet in 1901, accompanied by such recommendations for legislation as the commission sees fit to make. Some minor changes in the charter may be made during the coming session, but only in cases of extreme urgency."

One thing in which Gov. Roosevelt and Senator Platt are understood to be in complete harmony is the shortening of the term of the Mayor of New York from four to two years. Odell said that there was no intention on the part of the Republican organization to interfere in any way with Mayor Van Wyck, and he will be permitted to serve out the term of four years, for which he was elected and which will not expire until the end of 1901.

Another matter which was discussed at length was the question of the appointment of a Superintendent of Insurance in February next, when the term of Louis F. Payn, the present Superintendent, will expire. Mr. Odell declared that no decision had been reached, but added that in view of no candidates for Mr. Payn's place. This subject has demanded much attention. The Superintendent of Insurance receives his appointment from the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and holds office for the term of three years and until his successor is appointed and has qualified. It has been freely stated that if Gov. Roosevelt refuses to reappoint Payn, his nomination of a successor to him would be the signal for a contest in the Senate over the confirmation of the nominee, and it has been said that not sufficient votes could be obtained to confirm the nommation.

Mr. Odell said that much time was spent in discussing the question of appointments. "The terms of a number of State officers and Commissioners will expire next year," said he, "and the Governor is anxious to appoint the best men possible to every place. Our talk was general, but we reached no decision except that it was determined to appoint County Judge James W. Houghton of Saratoga to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Justice John R. Putnam of the Supreme Court."

The Governor will soon be called upon to designate three or four Justices of the Supreme Court, to act as Associate Justices of the Court of Appeals, by virtue of an amendment to the Constitution adopted at the last general election. There are many names heard in connection with these designations, in fact almost every Justice on the Supreme bench has been talked of as a candidate for a place in the higher court. At yesterday's conference the merits of the various candidates were thoroughly gone over, but Mr. Odell said nothing had been decided.

Gov. Roosevelt went to the Century Club for luncheon in company with Capt. F. Norton Goddard and Jacob Riis. He saw several persons during the afternoon at the home of Douglas Robinson, where he is staying while in the city. He said he had intended to return to Albany to-day, but did not believe he would be able to leave here until to-morrow.

The decision of the Republican leaders to leave the question of charter amendments to a commission, was received with satisfaction by those members of the Chamber of Commerce who heard of it. Charles Stewart Smith, who introduced the resolution at Thursday's meeting, said:

"I am absolutely in favor of the commission idea and having it make its report to the Legislature of 1901. This work could not be properly done in less time than a year. The work should be done by residents of New York. As to how such a commission should be constituted I should say two first-class lawyers and five men thoroughly conversant with the mercantile, financial, and industrial needs and conditions in New York City."

Other members of the Chamber expressed themselves pleased with the proposed plan. They said that a commission, such as is proposed, would be able to handle the entire matter and that much trouble from individual bills would be avoided.

DIED OF SHOCK AT A DEATH.

Daughter of ex-Senator Winton Did Not Long Survive Her Sister.

HACKENSACK, N. J., Dec. 9.—Miss Laura Winton, daughter of ex-Senator Winton, died at the Winton residence here this afternoon as a result of shock, caused by the sudden death a fortnight ago of her sister, Mrs. Harry S. Oakley, a bride of two months. Mr. Winton is prostrated by his double loss.

Miss Winton was twenty-seven years old. She was a graduate of the High School and active in church circles. For three years she did special work on her father's paper, The Bergen County Democrat.

Mr. Winton's third daughter, Mrs. Robert Rennier, is dangerously ill.

ADMIRAL DEWEY A DUKE.

Rex, of the New Orleans Carnival, Confers the Title of Duke of Manila, and Sends an Invitation.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 9.—His Majesty Rex has conferred upon Admiral George Dewey and his wife a patent of nobility, making them Duke and Duchess of Manila, and has invited them to participate in the splendors of his carnival celebration next February. The invitation and the patent of nobility sent through Lord Bathurst, Lord High Chamberlain, were beautifully engraved on parchment and handsomely framed.

A reply has been received from the newly created Duke of Manila, acknowledging the honors conferred upon him, and stating that he will take pleasure in obeying the royal commands if occasion permits. Not only Rex, but the entire City of New Orleans will rejoice if the Duke finds himself able to be present during the carnival week.

The people of the South admire the hero of Manila, and will flock from all points to see him. His Majesty, appreciating this fact, knew that he could not confer nobility upon any one whom his people would be more delighted to honor, and that the Admiral's presence would alone make the coming carnival one of the most distinguished in history. The letter of Lord Bathurst was as follows:

"Capital City of New Orleans, 'Carnival Palaces,' Nov. 18, 1899.

"Admiral George Dewey, Washington:

"Greeting! The household of his Majesty the King of the Carnival, the Dukes of the realm, and the Krewe of Karnival Court desiring to contribute their royal courtesies to the distinguished American who has challenged the admiration of the world by achievements in the Far East, do therefore create and ordain Admiral George Dewey Duke of Manila, and evidence this behest by royal punt bearing the sign manual and seal of his Majesty, and do invest his grace with the decoration of St. Rex; all of which accompany these presents.

"It is their further pleasure that his Grace and the Duchess will visit the capital City of New Orleans during the approaching carnival, (Feb. 27, 1900,) to participate in its pleasures and view its brilliant pageants, while receiving the distinguished consideration of the citizens, which will be proudly extended to their honored guests.

"In presenting this it is with the hope that the hospitality of the Carnival City thus extended may be accepted.

"Accept profound consideration.

"LORD BATHURST.
"Lord High Chamberlain."

Admiral Dewey's reply is as follows:

"Office of the Admiral, 1747 Rhode Island Avenue, Washington, Dec. 1, 1899.

"Right Hon. Lord Bathurst, Lord High Chamberlain of His Majesty, Rex, King of the Carnival, New Orleans, La.:

"Admiral and Mrs. Dewey present their homage to his Majesty and thanks for the distinguished honor he has done them in bestowing upon them the titles of Duke and Duchess of Manila, also for the decorations of St. Rex sent the Admiral.

"The Duke and Duchess of Manila will have much pleasure in obeying the royal commands to visit the Capital City of New Orleans on Feb. 27, 1900, if circumstances permit."

SCHEME FOR VICE ADMIRALS.

Friends of Schley Opposed to His Accepting a Position Below That of Sampson.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The story that some of the friends of Rear Admiral Schley have been to the President to urge him to settle the Sampson-Schley controversy by making Sampson and Schley Vice Admirals, in that order, appears to meet with greater favor among the friends of Rear Admiral Sampson than it does with those of Rear Admiral Schley.

At present Schley stands two numbers ahead of Sampson, having reached that position in the usual order of promotion for services and by retirement of officers above him. He is receiving $7,500 a year sea pay, and will draw that amount until his retirement. If he were promoted, by resolution of the Senate or otherwise, to be Vice Admiral, it would be with the condition that Sampson should pass him and stand next to Dewey. The pay of Vice Admiral would be $11,000, according to the scheme of the Navy Personnel bill passed at the last session of Congress. It would be made to appear to those who have been interested in Schley, and who have maintained that he has done nothing to entitle him to be overridden by Sampson, that for the sake of gaining $3,500 a year pay he was willing to have Sampson advanced beyond him in the register of the navy.

There is believed to be objection on the part of Sampson's partisans to this course. Schley was promoted by the President to be Rear Admiral for gallant conduct in battle at Santiago, and after the incidents frequently referred to by his critics as depriving him of the right to be promoted for service. The Government, by the President, thus put itself in the position of condoning the errors which have been charged against him so vehemently. To strengthen that approval now by proposing still further advancement might, it is suggested by naval officers, be very comfortable from a money point of view to both Schley and Sampson, but it inevitably would suggest inconsistency with the recent statements by the Secretary of the Navy.

There would be no difficulty in advancing the two Rear Admirals in the order in which they now stand, and Rear Admiral Schley's friends suggest that if he be worthy to be made Vice Admiral at all he should be promoted ahead of Sampson.

SELECTION OF EXTRA JUDGES.

Questions Arising Over Strengthening the Court of Appeals.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 9.—The discussion over the designation of Supreme Court Justices to sit as Court of Appeals Judges to help the highest State court dispose of its accumulated business naturally turns to the fitness of the Justices likely to be selected by Gov. Roosevelt. There are those who believe that the oldest men in the Supreme Court should be taken, giving as a reason that their years and long service in the profession and on the bench peculiarly fit them for the positions.

In glancing over the members of the Supreme Court it is found that there are five Justices who will be retired by reason of their reaching the age limit of seventy before the expiration of the terms for which elected. In the Court of Appeals there is one Judge, Celora E. Martin, who will retire in 1904 after having served but nine years of the fourteen for which elected.

The Justices in the Supreme Court who will retire by age limit, should they live, are Charles H. Van Brunt, who was elected in 1897 and retires in 1905, and George P. Andrews, who was elected in 1897 and retires in 1905, both of the First District; William W. Goodrich of the Second District, elected in 1895 and retires in 1903; Charles C. Dwight, elected in 1892 and retires in 1900, and Edwin A. Nash, who was elected in 1895 and retires in 1906, both of the Seventh District.

Gov. Roosevelt, it is said, is considering several other matters in connection with his selection of Justices. One of these is what disposition can be made of Justices taken from the Appellate Division benches when their period of service with the highest court terminates. Supreme Court Justices will have to be designated to fill the vacancies on the Appellate Division benches, and the question that arises is whether the Justices from the Appellate Divisions who are designated for Court of Appeals work will go back to the Appellate Divisions or will become simply Circuit Supreme Court Justices.

Gov. Roosevelt has consulted with Attorney General Davies on this point, and the latter will probably render an opinion as to what can be done.

SHOT DOWN BEFORE 11,000

Thrilling Climax to the Six-Day Race at Madison Square Garden.

TWO MEN QUARREL OVER A BET

F. S. Slater of Rahway, N. J., the Victim, May Die—Willis Rosser, Medical Student, His Assailant.

As the eyes of the 11,000 persons who packed Madison Square Garden to witness the close of the six-day bicycle race last night were bent upon a number of motorcycles which were just starting in a side race, a shot was heard on the Twenty-seventh Street side of the building, and those nearest saw a young man with a revolver in his hand struggling in the arms of a burly fireman, while another, pale and with his hand clasped upon his left breast, sank back into the arms of several spectators near by.

Most of the great audience paid little attention to the shot at first, because they thought it had something to do with the race, just as another which had just been fired from the revolver of Starter Harvey. A chorus of screams and shouts, however, soon apprised them that something had happened.

Women fainted and men fought and struggled, some to get nearer to the scene and others to get away from it, while police fought their way through the crowd to reach the fireman and his prisoner, who was still battling and trying to turn his weapon so that he could fire again upon the wounded man.

His arms were tightly pinioned by the fireman, however, and the policemen soon were dragging him away to an ante-room, where he said he is Willis Rosser, nineteen years old, a medical student, living at 139 Lexington Avenue, and coming from Stevenson, Ala. His victim, who is Frederick S. Slater of 151 Main Street, Rahway, was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was said there was little hope of his recovery.

The fireman who fought with Rosser is Assistant Foreman John Howe of Engine 21. He is the only man who, so far as known, actually saw the shooting outside of the principals themselves, although there was a score standing almost within arm's length. Roundsman John Lake of the bicycle squad and Policeman Rappolt of the Leonard Street Station were the first to reach Rosser.

Once they were behind closed doors the victim of the shooting was brought in through the crowd. As Slater was confronted with the prisoner he tried to speak, but his voice failed him and he seemed to be retaining consciousness only by a supreme effort of his will.

One of the policemen handed him paper and pencil. He wrote, in characters firm at first, but rapidly becoming more and more tremulous, "This is the man who shot me."

"Write your name, write your name," said one of the policemen supporting him. The wounded man then put down "Fred. S. Slater, 151 Main Street, N. J." Then he sank back unconscious and was removed to the hospital. He had not written the name of any town, but later it was learned he was from Rahway.

Rosser was taken to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station, where he refused to make any statement in regard to the affair. He is a graduate of the Vanderbilt Medical College at Nashville, Tenn., and was taking a post-graduate course at a hospital in this city. He would have completed this course in about four weeks, and it was his intention then to return to Stevenson and begin the practice of medicine. He is about twenty-five years old.

There had been a short race between Banker, Putz, Eaton, and Slater, and the prisoner had made a bet at a ratio of 5 to 1. The stakes of $5 they had given to John Biglin as an actor, who sat between them. The men quarrelled over the bet, and the shooting followed. Biglin says his back was turned at the time the shot was fired, but Chief Devery, who was in the Garden, ordered him locked up in the station house as a witness. The Chief followed the policemen and prisoners to the station house and interrogated them there.

Biglin said that one of the men sat on the row behind him, and the other sat in front. They were strangers to him, he said, and so far as he could see, to each other. In his excitement he said he had forgotten which was the winner of the bet, and he still had the money.

James Hall, an usher of 830 Washington Street, Hoboken, says that just a minute or so before the shot was fired a man came to him and excitedly told him that there was a man sitting in one of the front rows just behind the boxes with a gun in his hand. Hall started in the direction of the man, but before he got there the shot was fired.

Fireman Howe pronounced Slater as being one of the "nerviest" men he ever saw. He said that Rosser held the revolver so close to his victim's body that the flesh set his waistcoat afire, and this was seen by others, but he made a desperate struggle to keep on his feet.

A physician, who gave his name as Dr. O. Gant, was sitting near the men for some time, and he said that early in the evening he saw Rosser draw a revolver from his pocket and show it to a neighboring spectator.

Rosser on the way to the station house muttered that he would commit suicide at the first opportunity. Chief Devery also heard the remark and ordered the policeman to keep a careful watch on him then, and when they reached the station all his effects with which he could possibly injure himself were taken from him at the order of Sergt. Welsing, who also ordered that a special guard be maintained at the door of his cell during the night.

Slater was recognized at the hospital as a bicycle rider of some note, having won a number of prizes at the sport. He revived somewhat and asked that his brother, Edward Slater, be sent for at Rahway, and a telegraphic message was at once sent to the address given.

Some confusion arose as the wounded man was taken from the Garden owing to the fact that a Presbyterian Hospital ambulance, on another mission, was passing at the time. The crowd called upon the driver to stop, but the police soon straightened the matter out and placed Slater in the Bellevue ambulance.

RAHWAY, N. J., Dec. 9.—Frederick S. Slater, who was shot in Madison Square Garden, New York, to-night, is well-known and popular here. He is twenty-three years of age and is engaged in the printing business with his brother Edward. They reside over their store with their sister. Frederick is single. He has been Assistant Fire Chief for some time.

Edward Slater late to-night received a telegram from New York saying his brother had been shot in Madison Square Garden, and he left here for New York shortly after midnight.

"MILLS HOTEL" FOR CHICAGO.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—John H. Bogue has issued the prospectus for Chicago's "Mills Hotel." It is proposed to erect an eleven-story fire-proof building on the general plan of the hotel in Bleecker Street, New York. There will be 1,120 sleeping rooms, ranging in size from 6 by 8 feet to 6 by 9 feet, and a few larger rooms to contain two beds. The prices to be charged will be from 20 cents to 30 cents a night, while a restaurant in the basement will sell good food at 15 cents a meal.

Mr. Bogue intends to form a stock company, with a capital of $400,000, to buy land and erect a building. The Northern Trust Company is designated to receive subscriptions.

MAY BUY DANISH WEST INDIES.

State Department Negotiating for Their Purchase at a Price of $3,000,000.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The Post tomorrow will say:

"The Danish Government has made another effort to sell the Danish West Indies to the United States. The proposition was laid before the State Department by a representative of the Danish Government, and the matter is now under consideration.

"The American Embassy in London is assisting in the negotiations. The price asked for the islands is $3,000,000."

CURRENCY LEGISLATION PLANS

House Bill Likely to be Sent to the Senate Unchanged and There Await a Conference.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The House Republicans, who are determined to push the Currency bill to passage notwithstanding the remonstrance of the opposition, assume that the Democratic objections to the bill are in part perfunctory, and that they would be urged on other grounds than those made if time were granted to enable the Democrats to examine the question in the light of the provisions of the House bill.

While the House and Senate measures differ, Senator Aldrich and Mr. Overstreet both assert that the outcome will be very satisfactory. They direct attention to the curious fact that those who prefer one bill to the other suggest the probability that the act that is to be the outcome of legislative consideration is likely to contain the best parts of each bill, and so be exempt from the current criticisms.

The Senate may oppose the House proposition to make all existing Government obligations payable in gold, and offer its suggestion for refunding in place of it. The Senate may be expected to modify, also, the proposition to make all obligations, public and private, payable in conformity with the gold standard, in view of the fact that such legislation might be contested in the courts if it seemed to impair contracts.

Another objection, which, it is intimated, the Senate may urge against the House bill is that it would enhance the value of bonds. At present the Government has some control over this matter, as it lies with the Secretary of the Treasury to create a demand for them. Bonds have advanced since Secretary Gage offered to take them up before they became due. Mr. Prince, a member of the Banking and Currency Committee of the last House, makes the suggestion that if the Secretary and the banks were to go into the market at the same time, with a request for $25,000,000 more of bonds, the benefit derived would be chiefly enjoyed by the speculators at the expense of the Government.

The probability is that the House will send its bill over to the Senate unchanged. The Senate will take up and pass its bill, ignoring the House bill until both are sent to conference upon the request of the Senate, possibly after a motion has been made to substitute the Senate bill for that of the House.

BLUE LAWS IN PHILADELPHIA.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—Money will be a useless commodity in Philadelphia on Sundays hereafter, if all the forces arrayed in favor of the old blue laws succeed in their crusade. Not a store will be open; not a newsboy visible. In short, the only opening for the coin of the citizens will be the church contribution boxes and the street cars, which will be permitted to run by law.

The police will be called upon to maintain quiet, but the real quietus to Sunday business will be given by the Philadelphia Sabbath Association unless the officials strike some serious snag in the way of public opinion.

The officers of the association have issued thousands of copies of a circular in which they say:

"We call your attention to the law of Pennsylvania forbidding worldly employment or business on the Lord's Day."

This law was passed in 1794, and provides that "if any person shall do or perform any worldly employment or business whatsoever on the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, (work of necessity and charity only excepted,) and be convicted thereof, every such person so offending shall for every such offense forfeit and pay $4, to be levied by distress; or, in case he or she shall refuse or neglect to pay the said sums, or goods and chattels cannot be found, he or she shall suffer six days' imprisonment in the house of correction of the proper county."

Mr. Mutchler, the Secretary of the association, was to-day asked to outline the plans of the society. He said:

"Many meetings are being held each week now by our society to secure funds to push the prosecution which will be begun after the date mentioned in our circular. It is the belief of our society that all Sunday business should be stopped.

"We mean to get after the cigar stores, the little grocery stores, the drug stores, excepting the sale of drugs upon prescriptions, the candy stores, the newsdealers, the paper boys, the milkmen who are found on the streets after 9 o'clock, the shippers, the express companies, the trolley roads, and all branches of business conducted in violation of the law.

"Our society has practically closed the barber's shops, but we have a list of offenders, and will renew prosecutions. We have been promised the aid of the police. The city has been divided into eighteen districts, and we have committees in each preparing to conduct prosecutions.

"The easiest tasks will be taken up first. We will not attempt the impossible. Surely we can close all stores, including the cigar and candy stores. Then the hawking of papers must cease. Just what will be decided upon in this case I am not sure, but a crusade against newsboys and news dealers seems feasible. The fine would be sufficient to destroy their ardor for Sunday papers, and the sale could be stopped in this way easier than by attacking the papers themselves.

"I am told there is great bustle in the freight yards and express offices on Sunday. This must stop. Our society feels that it has the public behind it."

Police Superintendent Quirk has ordered the police to begin their work of closing stores to-morrow without waiting to receive the complaints of the society. There promises to be a lively time, as the blue laws practically stamp Sunday cigars, papers, in the street, car rides, shaves, &c., as sinful.

Secretary Mutchler apparently realizes that there may be danger that the too close enforcement of the law may lead to its repeal, for he says:

"The society will feel its way along public sentiment carefully."

FRICK MAY RIVAL CARNEGIE.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—It is probable that another gigantic iron industry will be located near this city. H. C. Frick, who lately resigned the Chairmanship of the Carnegie Steel Company Directorate, is reported to be at the head of the enterprise, and should the deal go through he will become one of Carnegie's most formidable rivals.

In the Spring of 1898 200 acres of valuable lake front land were purchased at East Chicago by Mr. Frick, and at the time it was said that the land would be utilized for erecting a steel plant, the largest in the world, at a cost of $25,000,000. The enterprise also contemplated the dredging of a harbor 300 feet wide to enable the ore ships to carry their cargoes direct to the mills.

EXPLOSION KILLS SIXTY COAL MINERS

Gas Causes a Disaster in a Shaft Forty Miles from Tacoma.

THIRTY MEN ESCAPE DEATH

Work of Rescue and Recovering the Victims Still in Progress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—An explosion took place to-day in Shaft 7 of the Carbon Hill Mines, at Carbonado, forty miles east of Tacoma. About sixty miners lost their lives. The cause of the disaster is unknown, but it is supposed the miners working between the 300 and 600 foot levels broke into the old mine workings, which were filled with gas. The explosion followed as soon as this outpouring gas came in contact with the first miner's lamp.

The victims were among the best class of miners employed in this State. Most of the men were married and lived with their families in snug cottages at Carbonado, which stands on a hill 900 feet above the entrance to the mine workings.

It was almost noon when the dull report of the explosion was heard at Carbonado and in other parts of the mines. Some thought a larger blast than usual had been fired, but an instant later a great blue mass of smoke began pouring from the mine tunnel and shaft. It was realized then that a terrible catastrophe had taken place. The news spread quickly, and very soon weeping women and children were thronging the streets, bewailing the certain death of their husbands, fathers, and brothers.

Work was immediately suspended in the other shafts, and Superintendent Davies ordered all the men available to begin the work of rescue. This is now in progress. Twenty men worked their way out of the mine through timber shafts, and ten more were brought out in the same way badly stunned. This leaves nearly sixty who were nearer the scene of the explosion. These were killed either by the explosion or by fire-damp.

The Carbon Hill Mines are owned by the Pacific Improvement Company, an offshoot of the Southern Pacific Company. The output of 100 tons a day is shipped to Tacoma by rail, and thence to San Francisco, where it is used by locomotives and ferryboats at San Francisco and Oakland.

The mines are the second largest in the State, and have been in operation for nearly twenty years. Superintendent Davies is one of the most conservative mining operators in the West. Both he and the company have been careful to provide every facility for guarding against explosions.

It seems probable that the miners in Shaft No. 7 were nearer some old working than supposed. The men had always worked under strict orders to keep away from former workings, but lack of accidents in the past had made some of them reckless. This is the first big coal mine accident in this State since 1892, when forty-five men lost their lives in an explosion at Roslyn Mines.

A special train reached Carbonado from Tacoma this evening, bearing Gov. Rogers, Coroner Hoska, and Sheriff Mills, besides physicians and nurses wired for by the company to assist its regular staff in caring for any wounded miners who may be brought out of the mine to-night.

There is really little hope that any will be brought out alive. Everything indicates that every one in the bottom of shaft No. 7 was killed. Gov. Rogers has taken charge of the shaft pending an investigation.

At 8 o'clock to-night the fire-damp is being cleared out sufficiently to permit the timber gang

THE TRIAL OF MOLINEUX

Mr. Osborne Elated Over the Capture of Mamie Melando.

HOW IT WAS ACCOMPLISHED

What the Prosecution Has Brought Out —District Attorney Gardiner May Sum Up.

The prosecution in the Molineux case was jubilant yesterday over the arrest of Mamie Melando, the young woman, who, besides being forewoman in the prussian blue department of Hermann & Co.'s place in Newark where Molineux was employed as Superintendent, also kept the accused man's apartments in the factory in order. They are also jubilant over the admission made by Mr. Weeks at the close of the session on Friday that Molineux had written on egg-blue paper bearing the entwined crescents, and that he had used that paper in at least one instance in writing to a patent medicine firm for a remedy similar to that which it is alleged he wrote for in the names of Cornish and Barnet.

The letters signed by these two names are on the same kind of paper, and the prosecution claims that the admission was wrung from Mr. Weeks when he knew that the Melando woman was captured and he knew that she would swear that she bought that kind of paper for Molineux, for that is what the prosecution hints is the information it has obtained from the woman, who will be kept in the House of Detention until he is called for trial.

The defense claims that if Molineux wrote in his own name for one remedy and had the reply come to his office in Newark, there was no reason why he should write for other remedies under an assumed name. Again Molineux wrote for the Burns remedy in his natural hand, and it is likewise claimed that if he did this in one instance there was no reason why in other instances he should disguise his handwriting. The defense also disclaims any knowledge of the Cornish and Barnet letters, and will try to prove through its experts that the same hand that wrote them did not write the admitted letter to Burns.

It will be a long time before Mr. Weeks has a chance to present his side of the case, but he said on Friday that the absence of active would be the strongest contention of the defense. They will show that Molineux, while irritated that he was forced out of the Knickerbocker Athletic Club by Corbin, nevertheless at once became allied to another prominent athletic club and was on its Board of Governors, a position of honor.

It will be shown that from Molineux's own letters he was at the time of the sending of the poison and for some time before in a happy mood. He writes that he is about to marry and that the prospect is bright. Yet suddenly, it is alleged, he throws all this to the winds to poison a man whom he has not seen or held communication with for a year. Such contention, the defense will submit, does not seem to be within the bounds of reason.

Mr. Weeks's statement on Friday that he would at the proper time submit a sample of admitted handwriting identical with the Nelson address, has been taken to mean that he had something in reserve of which the prosecution has no knowledge. At the sessions this week Mr. Kinsley will continue his testimony, and this, with his cross-examination, is expected to last at least half the week.

Then Mr. Osborne will put on his chemists and pathological experts; then will come Cornish and the relatives of the dead woman, and then the army of handwriting experts which has been gathered from the four quarters of the United States. Then will come the long list of the witnesses for the defense, also including pathologists, chemists, and handwriting experts, and a few others about which Mr. Weeks maintains as much reticence as does Mr. Osborne concerning the identity of his witnesses who are not already known.

Mr. Osborne, who was jubilant concerning the capture of the Melando woman, admitted his detectives had worked much like the fakir who while he holds the attention of his audience has his confederates through the pockets of the spectators. When asked to explain this statement, that the Chief of Police of Jersey City had at his request sent detectives and policemen broadcast asking for Miss Melando. While this open search was being made, he said, two of Capt. McClusky's men got into the girl's good graces, and on the pretext of taking her where she would be safe brought her across the border.

District Attorney Gardiner announced yesterday that in all probability he would sum up the case for the State.

Molineux spent his usual quiet day in the tombs. He read a great deal from the newspapers concerning his trial while his attorneys remained in their offices working on the case.

TO HELP BROOKLYN'S POOR.

Hebrew Educational Society's Incorporation Papers Approved.

Justice Gaynor, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, yesterday, approved the articles of incorporation of the Hebrew Educational Society of Brooklyn. The purpose of the Society is to ameliorate the condition of the poor of Brooklyn, especially in the Brownsville section.

The stated objects of the organization are to intellectually and physically advance the condition of men and women, and to erect suitable buildings containing a library, reading, lecture, and class rooms, and a gymnasium. The Directors for the first year include Abraham Abraham, Jacob Tanner, Simon F. Rothschild, Michael Hart, the Rev. Leon Nelson, Ira Loo Bamberger, Mitchell May, Nathaniel H. Levi, and David J. Steinhardt.

PLYMOUTH CHURCH'S YEAR.

Reports of Officers Show a Flourishing Condition of Affairs.

The annual reports of the officers of Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, just rendered, show the affairs of the church to be in a flourishing condition. Clerk Frederick C. Havel reports the membership aggregates 1,885, of which 583 are men and 1,252 women. There have been 71 removals from the church during the year. The total Sunday-school membership, which includes the memberships of the Sunday schools of Pilgrim and Mayflower Missions, is 1,490. The report of Treasurer S. V. White shows the church receipts for the year have amounted to $37,476. The special collections during the year have amounted to $25.

The annual election of officers of the church will take place next Friday.

H. CLAFLIN COMPANY DINNER.

Musical and Dramatic Entertainment Follows It at Sherry's.

The second annual dinner of the H. B. Claflin Company was held last night at Sherry's. President John Claflin presided. Brief responses to toasts were made by the heads of several departments. One hundred and ten covers were laid, and a musical and dramatic performance was given from a small stage at the Fifth Avenue end of the banquet room after the dinner.

The heads of the house were seated at a large centre table surrounded by smaller tables, at which the employes and guests were seated. The programme contained, besides the menu, a brief sketch of the house and its founders, dating back to the time of Horace B. Claflin, at Milford, Mass., in 1841.

NOTICE AVERT THEATRE PANIC.

Passing of a Fire Engine Excites Murray Hill Audience.

Excitement almost approaching a panic was prompting a scramble for the doors occurred at the Murray Hill Theatre during the matinée performance yesterday. A woman in the audience fainted and was carried out to the lobby. Several persons left their seats and followed to see what was the matter. While the doors were open a fire engine went by, and its whistling and ringing were heard by the audience, who began to get uneasy and finally made a rush for the exits.

Lieutenant Tyler and Detective Walsh of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station, who were near the theatre, ran in. They succeeded in reassuring those who were attempting to leave the theatre. The audience resumed their places and the play continued.

UNITED TO FIGHT EXPANSION.

Producers Who Met at Omaha Have Formulated a Plan to Prevent Action in Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Dec. 9.—The organization of the League of Domestic Producers in Omaha this week by some of the largest industrial and agricultural interests of the republic, for the avowed purpose of opposing annexation of the Colonial possessions of the republic, has created a sensation in a commercial way. The President of the league is Henry T. Oxnard of New York City.

A committee composed of Herbert Myrick, Chairman; Henry T. Oxnard, James and P. Cooke, representing the beet sugar industry; Henry McCall of the Cane Growers' Association of New Orleans; F. B. Moodie of Florida, President of the National Cigar Leaf Tobacco Growers' Association; G. W. Perkins, President of the American Cigar Makers' Union; H. S. Frye of Connecticut, President New England Tobacco Growers' Association, and Samuel Gompers, President American Federation of Labor, were appointed to form a permanent organization. A meeting of the committee will be held in Washington City during the present month.

This statement of the objects and demands of the new organization was prepared and officially approved by the beet sugar, cane sugar, tobacco, and other interests represented at the meeting:

The purpose of this coalition is to provide a medium through which the various interests in the production, manufacture and sale of domestic sugar, cigar leaf tobacco, cigars, fruits, vegetables, rice, &c., produced within the United States, may co-operate for their mutual benefit. It is demanded:

First—That the United States Senate defeat the pending treaties of reciprocity with the West Indies, whereby sugar from these islands is to be admitted into the United States at a reduction in the tariff rate.

Second—We oppose the recommendation that Cuban sugar be admitted at a like reduction in duty. We also oppose the recommendation that Porto Rican produce be admitted to the market duty free.

Third—That all sugar, tobacco, and other produce which compete with the products of American farmers and manufacturers continue to pay full rate of duties, irrespective of whether such sugar and other produce comes from Porto Rico, Cuba, the Philippines, or other parts of the world.

Fourth—That thus the labor and capital invested in domestic, agricultural, and allied manufacturing industries may have a fair chance against the coolie labor and monopolists of the tropics.

Fifth—Agriculture and labor having borne the brunt of protection for these many years have earned the right to be themselves equally treated now that they have to face a crisis, and nothing less will satisfy them.

The following resolutions were introduced:

Whereas, The consumption of sugar in the United States now approximates 5,000,000,000 pounds, being large in bulk and per capita than any other nation, of which enormous consumption less than 600,000,000 pounds, or about 10 per cent., are produced from sugar cane and beets within the borders of the United States; and

Whereas, The experiments of the Government made under the direction of the Department of Agriculture and the actual production of sugar from beets at the factories located in twelve States here represented clearly evidence that this country is capable of producing under fair safeguards of the industry all the sugar consumed by its people; and

Whereas, The production affords a diversified industry of the greatest importance, and is a special boon of value to the farmers of this country; and

Whereas, The importation of cane sugar from tropical islands, under principles of reciprocity, or with free or greatly reduced duties awarded because they are insular dependencies of the United States, would bring into competition a product raised by coolies and debased labor that would be ruinous to the American farmer and to the production of sugar in the United States; therefore, be it

Resolved, That the present tariff duties are essential, not only to the increase of this valuable industry, but to its very existence, and if modified in any particular there should be no action either by change of law or from reciprocity, that shall increase the importation of crude sugar, which affords no profit or income to the farmer, but is simply material to be refined and marketed.

Resolved, That the agriculture and labor have borne the brunt of protection for many years, it is only fair and just that now that the chance has been held forth for development in the line of sugar production and vasts sums invested in twelve States of the Union, the industry thus fostered and the capital thus invested should not be injured, either by reciprocity treaties or granting the importation of sugar and other products, which compete with the output of the American farmer at reduced rates or free of duty from Puerto Rico, Cuba, or the Philippines.

The association elected these officers: Henry T. Oxnard, New York, President; Julius Stroh, Detroit, Treasurer; R. M. Allen, Ames, Neb., Secretary. It was also decided that a Vice President be chosen from each State in which are located beet sugar factories by the factories of such State.

Every beet sugar manufacturing company in the United States was elected a member of the association, and the Secretary was instructed to notify them of the action.

The Executive Committee, composed of the President, Treasurer, and Secretary, are to direct the affairs of the association until the next annual meeting of the association, which will be held at the Cadillac Hotel, Detroit, Monday, Dec. 3, 1900. The committee was instructed to use all efforts and means agreed upon and every energy possible to carry into effect the resolutions adopted by the association.

"A LAWYER CANNOT BE HONEST."

E. V. Brewster Makes the Statement in a Reply to Congressman Driggs.

Eugene V. Brewster, the leader of the Brooklyn silverites, caused the legal fraternity of that borough much pain and embarrassment yesterday by this frank public avowal: "I don't pretend to be honest. No man is, and a lawyer cannot be."

Mr. Brewster is a lawyer himself. His sentiments anent the honesty of the legal craft in particular and men in general were expressed in connection with the controversy he is having with Congressman Driggs as to the latter's attitude with relation to the currency question. On Friday Mr. Brewster publicly declared Congressman Driggs had promised him to vote for silver, and had now "bolted the principles of his party." Mr. Brewster also claimed that Congressmen May and Fitzgerald had given him similar promises, and had also "bolted." All three of the Congressmen named promptly denied that they had promised Mr. Brewster anything. These denials drew forth another statement from Mr. Brewster yesterday. He named witnesses to Mr. Driggs's alleged promise.

"Either Mr. Driggs or I," declared Mr. Brewster, "is guilty of a deliberate, premeditated, unwarranted, unnecessary, selfish, reckless falsehood. I have been accused of many things in my brief career, but never of being a hypocrite. I don't pretend to be honest—no man is, and a lawyer cannot be—but I do say that if a man should give out the statement that I gave out yesterday affecting a Congressman, and there should be no truth in it, he should be severely dealt with."

Barney Fagan a Bankrupt.

Barney Fagan, an actor residing at 311 East Nineteenth Street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $6,847 and no assets. Some of the debts date back to 1886. Among the creditors are Forbes & Co., Boston, $1,500, for printing in 1886; L. J. Kehlan, $1,000, money loaned; Emile Bulyer, Louisville, $750, money laoned; S. S. Folsom, Boston, $500, costumes; Eaves Costuming Company, $500; Gumperts & Jermopolo, St. Louis, $600, judgment for breach of contract; Hughey Dougherty, $200, for services; Benjamin Doblin, $226, hats and canes; J. P. Wessman, $225, clothing, and M. & A. Phillips, $100, clothing.

TYPEWRITER AND THE EYE

It Aids the Vision and the Oculist Likewise.

THE CONTRADICTION EXPLAINED

New York Practitioner Gives Instances Where the Machine Is Invaluable to Many Classes of Workers.

The typewriter is probably one of the greatest of recent benefits to humanity. It is used now almost entirely for correspondence in business houses, large and small, by professional men in professional documents, and for their own personal use, and it is being introduced into editorial rooms for the benefit of both the writers and the compositors. There is a general opinion among experts in diseases of the eye that the eye is much relieved by the emancipation from ordinary handwriting. Fully twenty years ago a man writing in England upon the care of the eyes recommended it and an oculist of to-day has only favorable words for it, though he believes it to be a good friend to his business, a contradiction which he logically explains.

The fourth volume published this year of an authoritative American work upon diseases of the eye, however, gives all the small space it devotes to the subject to the ill-effects of the use of the typewriter.

"Prescott, the historian, invented appliances by which writing could be done with little assistance from the vision," wrote Robert Brudenell Carter, ophthalmic surgeon at St. George's Hospital, London, in the English work referred to, published in 1880, "Dr. Thursfield, Medical Officer of Health, Shrewsbury, produced a frame which enabled him to write without using his eyes, and another contrivance of more general value and applicability is the American typewriter. I myself do a great deal of writing at home, both for publication and in correspondence, and this machine has for the last four years superseded the pen almost entirely with me, so that I now use it for no other purpose than to correct proofs, by interlineation, to sign my name, and to address letters. Even when learning the use of the instrument, when the letters have to be looked for one by one, until the fingers become sufficiently familiar with their several positions and touch them instinctively, the characters are so large that there is no appreciable strain upon the vision, and when dexterity is attained the eyes can scarcely be said to be used at all.

"My own eyes have never occasioned me any discomfort, and my own use of the typewriter rests upon quite different grounds, but yet my experience enables me to recommend it very strongly to persons who having to write much are made conscious by the exercise that they have eyes. For the short-sighted it is especially valuable, because there can never be any disposition to stoop over it, so that a great share to them in writing is altogether set aside.

"Next to the advantages of writing are those of reading. The author who wishes to look over his manuscript is almost as much helped as the one who wishes to reproduce it, and the labor of seeing if in every stage of the process is either abolished or reduced to a minimum. I have worked the machine for eight consecutive hours without more than ten minutes' interruption and without my hands being conscious of fatigue. No systematic writer should be without it unless he is one of those curiously constituted creatures to whom the caprice of nature has denied the gift of mechanical aptitude, even in the most rudimentary form. Those who possess two left hands, whose fingers are all thumbs, had better, perhaps, leave the typewriter alone, but for others it is a great relief for weary hands and eyes."

The American work whose only mention of the typewriter is in a few lines in this fourth volume heads them, "The Typewriter as a Cause of Asthenopia."

"In causes of eye strain," it says, "(generally of primary esophoric and lotus exophoric types) now becoming increasingly frequent in poorly nourished and improperly cared for women of neurasthenic type, is the incessant labor imposed on ordinarily unused eye muscles during the study of the typewriter, in watching the keyboard of the machine before the necessary manual movements have become sufficiently automatic not to require any fixity of gaze upon the variously placed characters."

A very small amount of attention to give to a subject which must have so large a bearing upon the eyes of many people with the now general use of the typewriter.

"I cannot see," says a Greater New York oculist, "how learning the keys of the typewriter could be a strain upon the eyes. The general position can be learned in half an hour, or at most in a few days, so that no effort would be required in finding them, and that would not cause eye strain. At the same time I might say that the typewriter has been a help to my business, and I have a number of people who use the machine under my care. But I do not think their eyes are injured by the use of the typewriter, though defects of vision may have been brought to notice by its use.

"There are a great many more people wearing glasses now than there were thirty or forty years ago. There are many young people, and old people—who knowing this was not the case in their day—wonder why it is that there is so much more trouble with the eyes. There is probably no more trouble with the eyes than there was; but defects of vision are brought to notice now because there are so many more things to call attention to them, and the defects are then remedied as soon as they are discovered.

"Let me go into a large school and examine the eyes of the scholars or take, say, 1,500 people anywhere and test their eyes, and it is not probable that out of that number there would be more than fifty who did not theoretically require glasses—that is to say, who did not have some irregularity of the eyeball. That does not mean that the eye is diseased, but there is some slight deformity with which the individual was born. This affects the focus of the eye, and if glasses were worn they would correct this defect.

"The eye is nothing more or less than a camera." The doctor took up the separable model of an eye made of crystal and porcelain or something of that nature, about the size of a hand camera.

"If you know anything about a camera," he went on, "you can see the similarity. Here we have the diaphragm which is the iris, in front, with a round hole in the centre, only in the eye we have the curved crystal covering, which we do not have over the camera. The round hole is the pupil. You hear people speak of injuring the pupil of the eye, but you can't injure the pupil because that is the simple hole. Back of it is the crystalline lens of the eye, which corresponds to the lens of the camera and which focuses the light upon the sensitive plate at the back, which in the eye is the retina. Now if that lens is not perfectly formed the focus will not be right. Say, for instance, that the back of it is flattened, then the muscles encircling the eye which are used for focusing near-by objects have to be brought into play for other things. They contract the crystalline lens until there is a temporary bulge at the back to obtain the effect of the natural curve. If the muscles have to do much of this they are overworked. If glasses are worn they supply what is necessary to produce the correct focus without a strain to any part of the eye.

"Now, as I have said, there is a large proportion of people who have some irregularity of the eyeball, some slight deformity, and when there is anything that calls for the use of the eye this defect is discovered, when if the eye were but little used it would not be discovered for many years, if at all. When I was a boy they did not have blackboards in the schools as they do now. Now many of the lessons are written upon these boards and the children are required to read them across the room, and a defect in vision is discovered and they put on glasses to correct the defect, though the eye is by no means diseased. It is for this reason that children are now wearing glasses where the children of a generation or so ago did not. Of course, with older people there are defects of vision from age.

"It is in this way, I say, that the typewriter is good for my business and at the same time it is not injurious to the eyes. A large proportion of the people who use the typewriter copy with it. It would be better for them if the manuscript or short hand notes they are to copy were placed before them, but usually it is at the side and they have to constantly change the focus of the eyes from the keyboard of the machine to the manuscript. They have some defect of the eyes which they have not discovered, and in using the typewriter the additional labor of focusing the eyes calls the muscles into undue use and the result is trouble caused primarily by the defect which has always been in the eye, but it is necessary now to have the focus aided artificially and the people who use the typewriter put on glasses.

"For the people who compose on the machine the typewriter is a great help. I have a clergyman among my patients who was not able to write a letter or a line of his sermons after having serious trouble with his eyes, but by taking up the typewriter he was able to do both with ease, and I recall several cases of that kind. Indirectly the easy position of the body which is taken in using the typewriter, which makes the work less tiresome, is a benefit to the eyes. The benefit of the machine to the compositors and those who read manuscript cannot be over estimated.

GOOD GOVERNMENT CLUB C.

Controller Coler and Prof. Goodnow Discuss at a Dinner State Control of the Police.

Good Government Club C gave a dinner last evening at the Hotel St. Denis with Controller Bird S. Coler and Prof. Frank J. Goodnow of Columbia University as the principal speakers. The subject of discussion was "State Control of the Police Force." John Jay Chapman, President of the club, presided. Among the guests were the Rev. John H. Elliott, Prof. Henry W. Hardon, Alfred Brooks Robinson, William Arrowsmith, and Assemblyman-elect Perez M. Stewart.

Prof. Goodnow began the discussion. He held that the State should exercise a reasonable control over the various localities as regards their respective police forces, because, as he said, there is a great deal of lawlessness in rural communities now necessarily neglected. Prof. Goodnow cited Massachusetts as a good example of a State that exercises considerable police control under the central government.

Controller Coler began by saying that he did not think he was the most competent man in the City Government to discuss State control of police, but as a broad proposition it would first be a good thing to consider just how much New York would gain by such a change.

"No matter," said he, "how wealthy New York may be, no matter how much of the general taxation she bears, no matter her relative importance as a community, we can never have sufficient representation from this city under the Constitution as it is now to secure proper protection for New York. Here we are with an up-State control absolutely provided by the State Constitution. This is a serious question, and constitutes, in my mind, a problem as to how far we ought to go. I believe, in general, without now considering a State constabulary, but considering more present conditions, that we should have a single Commissioner, that he should be appointed by the Mayor, and should be held absolutely responsible for the efficiency of the force." [Applause.]

Mr. Coler then switched off to a discussion of the various departments of the city, and then referred to Assemblyman-elect Stewart in this fashion: "One English King lost his head and another his crown in trying to establish partisan courts to try his enemies. The election of Mr. Stewart did more to break up partisan courts than anything that has ever been accomplished in this State." Mr. Coler's reference to Mr. Mazet's defeat provoked cheers and laughter.

Mr. Stewart was then called upon. "There is one thing about the Nineteenth District election," he said, "that other districts might profit by making a study of. It shows how independent candidates can be elected, and I firmly believe that if enough independent Assemblymen are sent to Albany they can control the balance of power."

SILVER ISSUE LOSING GROUND.

Attitude of Representative Sibley Confuses His Former Followers.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Putting private Democratic opinion and public Democratic utterance together, it is becoming very plain here that the silver question has lost some of its hold upon that party. One of the most pronounced and outspoken advocates of free silver coinage a few years ago was Representative Sibley of Pennsylvania. He has not yet made any declaration in Congress to justify the report that he has abandoned the free silver idea for campaign uses, or that he has come out for the gold standard, the only remark on the subject that has been quoted being his assertion, at a dinner given by Representative Newlands on Thursday evening, that "the Democratic Party has no choice of metals." He also said that silver was being crowded out of its place by the great production of gold, which promised to be still further increased.

When he is ready to announce his conviction as to what should be the next Democratic declaration, he says he will do so. The truest silver men, who display sensitiveness to an unfavorable political atmosphere, speak of Mr. Sibley's utterances as ambiguous. As Mr. Sibley has always been considered one of the most brainy advocates of the free coinage of silver, and so closely in line with other silver men as to entitle him to a nomination for Vice President, his avoidance of the question is confusing some of his former followers.

PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION BID

Fund of $100,000 to be Offered to the Republican Committee.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—With the campaign fund of $100,000 assured, the Citizens' Republican National Convention Association is turning its attention to the preliminary work which is to be done at Washington in connection with the efforts to bring to Philadelphia the next Republican National Convention. It is the intention to have a committee open headquarters at the Arlington and remain there until the National Committee meets next Friday. The members of the committee will do active missionary work among the National Committeemen who are there and among such statesmen as can exert influence upon the choice of the convention city.

When the National Committee meets there will be present a committee of 100, representing all the various interests which desire to have the next convention in this city. The committee will be prepared to offer the $100,000 as a campaign fund.

BOTH KILLED IN A DUEL.

Two Well-Known Arkansas Men Fight at Greenville, Miss.

GREENVILLE, Miss., Dec. 9.—A duel was fought here to-day which resulted in the instant death of J. C. Connerly, a lawyer of Lake Village, Ark., and Alfred B. Duncan, General Manager of the Red Leaf Plantation and stores, who lived near Sunnyside, Ark.

The tragedy is said to have been the result of a business misunderstanding. Both men were prominent in the district in which they resided. Connerly received six bullets in different parts of his body, while Duncan was struck but once, with a load of buckshot, in the left breast.

LOST SIX HOURS AND $30,000.

Citizens by Trickery Prevented the Earning of a Bonus.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Dec 9.—Six miles of railroad in Bayfield County were completed on the morning of Dec. 14, six hours too late to entitle its promoters, among whom is ex-Senator D. M. Sabin of Minnesota, to $30,000 in bonds that had been voted by the people.

The completion of the contract was delayed because the people prevented it.

When the Bayfield and Washburn Road was built from Washburn to Iron River the company received $200,000 in bonds, and it was to get $30,000 more if the six miles necessary to connect the road with Bayfield were done by Nov. 30. Several weeks before that time the company started to do this stretch of track, and as the final day drew near and the people saw that the bonds were going to be called for, they began to take an interest in the matter.

They got out among the workmen and succeeded in getting several gangs to quit. Then another gang refused to accept checks for pay and held up the work while the officers for the road toiled to town and got cash. On the last day jugs of whisky were smuggled in to cheer the workmen, and the result was that the road was finished six hours late. On that ground the bonds will be fought.

Mr. Stern Entertains Gov. Roosevelt.

Gov. Roosevelt was entertained at dinner last evening by Louis Stern at his residence, 998 Fifth Avenue. Among the guests invited to meet the Governor were Senator Thomas C. Platt, Gen. Butterfield, Justice W. E. Werner, M. S. Isaacs, Judge J. A. Blanchard, Gen. H. E. Tremain, Col. C. F. Homer, ex-Justice William N. Cohen, Edward Lauterbach, S. H. Stern, B. B. Odell, Jr., Frank Tilford, R. E. A. Dorr, Louis Adler, and Morris Phillips. The dinner was very elaborate. The table decorations were American Beauty roses and ferns.

Mrs. E. J. Cook May Recover.

MACON, Ga., Dec. 9.—Mrs. E. J. Cook, aunt of Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was seriously injured last Saturday in a runaway accident, is improving. The physicians now have hopes of her recovery.

REV. DR. G. T. PURVIS CALLED.

Members of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church Wait on Him—Mr. Rowland Denies Knowledge of It.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 9.—The Rev. Dr. George T. Purvis, Professor of the New Testament Exegesis in the Theological Seminary and the university's preacher, has received a call to the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York. A committee of eight representing the Fifth Avenue Church called upon Dr. Purvis this afternoon and extended an invitation to him to become pastor of the New York church.

The seminary students held a mass meeting regarding the matter, and a committee was appointed to draw up resolutions expressing to Dr. Purvis their great appreciation of his services, both as a pastor and professor, and expressing their sincere hope that he may be led to remain with them. The resolutions were presented to Dr. Purvis to-night, and he was much moved by them. A committee of the seminary faculty met to-night and discussed the question with him, urging him to remain here. He has made no decision as yet.

When seen to-night Dr. Purvis said he did not care to say anything on the matter at present. He is the university students' most popular preacher, and in all probability they will appeal to him on Monday to continue his labors here.

H. Edwards Rowland, Chairman of the Pulpit Supply Committee of the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, appeared very much astonished when questioned last night concerning the trip of a committee of eight to Princeton to offer the vacant pulpit to the Rev. Dr George T. Purvis, and he declared that he had no knowledge of any such visit or of any such offer. "No committee could offer the pulpit to anybody without a meeting of the congregation being first held to authorize such action," he said. "The newspapers are continually inventing such stories about our church."

"Have any negotiations which might have given a basis for the telegram been entered into with Dr. Purvis?" Mr. Rowland was asked.

"Dr. Purvis's name has been mentioned in connection with the pastorate for the past year and a half, and, for that matter, for the past ten years by a certain newspaper. This may have given rise to the report."

"But has Dr. Purvis been approached on the matter at all by the pulpit supply committee?" was insisted.

To this Mr. Rowland would not [illegible] an unequivocal reply in the negative. "What I have said is a sufficient answer to the report," he declared.

IN WINTER QUARTERS.

Lively Times in the Central Park Duck Pond Near Seventy-ninth Street.

Something like two hundred ducks, geese, and swans are now herded together for the Winter in the little pond near the Seventy-ninth Street entrance to Central Park. Ducks are the most numerous and swans the least so in this flock of the city's feathered pets. There are three black swans and about a dozen of the white ones. The liveliest of the occupants are the brilliantly colored Muscovy ducks, who seem never so lively as they do at the approach of Winter. Diving and swimming about as they do, with more energy than all the rest of the aquatic fowl combined, they remind one of the fuss and bustle of a lot of men playing at the game of water polo. With wings flapping gaily they bear a light film of water from the surface of the water, and, with a continuous splashing, go racing along for a distance of a dozen yards or so. With a quick dive they go under the water to appear on the surface several yards away, a half-dozen or more going through the operation at the same time. The edges of the pond are favorite resorts for the children, who clap their hands with delight and shout cries of encouragement to the birds as they revel in their sports.

Perhaps the funniest sight the pond affords is when a swan decides to take a feed on some of the succulent weeds at the bottom of the pond. The great bird poises itself for an instant, and then gracefully arching its neck slowly thrusts its head and neck down out of sight. Then comes a slight tremor of the body, and immediately the fowl is topsy turvy with the stubby tail sticking upright in the air, looking for all the world like a miniature iceberg. Both black feet stick out straight from the snowy body and move only as seems to be necessary to steady themselves while they pull from its place on the bottom some bit of a plant or possibly some worm or grub they have found in their explorations. The reversal of the bird in its upright position is so easily and gracefully accomplished as was the original overturning.

To the perpetual astonishment of the small boy the birds come to the surface as dry as a bit of salt codfish, and often emphasize the fact by stretching out their long necks and dipping their bills into the water for a drink. The observant small boy frequently remarks to the nurse or parent who has him in charge, "Why can't I do that, too?" Every time I go under water when I am in swimming or in the bathtub I get my mouth full of water, and am all wet. Why don't the swan get wet, too?" There is but one ready answer to that puzzling question of the inquisitive lad, and that was rolled off yesterday by a puzzled father who answered his boy as he only could, with "Because you ain't built that way, my boy. Ask your teacher at the kindergarten and she will tell you all about it." That kindergarten comes in as a handy refuge from answers to all sorts of puzzling questions nowadays.

DEATH DUE TO STAB WOUND.

Fate of Joseph Kelleher Leads to Brother-in-Law's Arrest.

Joseph Kelleher, thirty-five years old, died in the Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, last night, from a stab wound on the right cheek, which the doctors at first mistook for a slight abrasion. John B. O'Neil, forty years old, a brother-in-law of the dead man, was locked up in the Amity Street Police Station, on suspicion of knowing something about Kelleher's wound.

Kelleher lived with O'Neill and the latter's family at 27 State Street. O'Neil, who was under the influence of liquor, met Policeman Wall and told him that Kelleher, with whom he had been drinking, had slipped and fallen in the house, striking his face against a corner of the stove. The policeman found Kelleher unconscious and had him sent to the hospital. O'Neil was hurried to the bedside so that the dying man might identify him, but he arrived too late. Mrs. O'Neil told the police that she knew nothing about it.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Showers in the afternoon; brisk north to east winds.

A trough of low pressure which covered the Central West Friday night has spread eastward through the Mississippi Valley, but persists in the slope region and still extends from the British possessions to the Gulf. It has caused general rain over this territory, and also from the East Gulf States northward to the upper lake region. In addition there were snows in the middle plateau, and rains on the North Pacific Coast, accompanied by lower temperature. It is also colder in the lower lake region, the Middle Atlantic States and New England. Rain is indicated for to-day from the Mississippi Valley eastward, except in Eastern New England, continuing generally to-morrow in the Upper Ohio Valley, the lower lake region, and Atlantic States. With these latter exceptions, fair weather will prevail to-morrow throughout the country. It will also be fair to-day west from the Mississippi River.

It will be warmer to-day in New York and in the interior of New England and colder in the lower Missouri Valley and West Gulf States. It will be colder to-morrow from the upper lake region southward through the East Gulf States. Fresh to brisk winds, generally northeasterly, will prevail on the Atlantic Coast. The display of storm signals will be discontinued for the season on Lake Huron after Dec. 11 and on Lakes Erie and Ontario after Dec. 14. The display of storm signals will be discontinued on Lake Superior with the closing of the locks at Sault Ste. Marie.

	—Weather Bureau—		THE TIMES
	1898.	1899.	1899.

The maximum temperature yesterday was 38 degrees at 4 P. M. and the minimum 31 degrees at 11 A. M. The humidity at 8 A. M. was 67 per cent, and at 8 P. M. 84 per cent. The temperature at 8 A. M. was 36.30 and at 8 P. M. 30.04.

A TOO PERFECT MAIL SERVICE.

An Unusual Cause of Complaint About the Local Letter Delivery.

"I see THE TIMES has been publishing some letters lately from people who have been finding fault with our local mail service," remarked the man who lives in a flat, and who, like most flat-dwellers moves occasionally as new and better flats rent within his means multiply. "I am suffering from a too perfect mail service. I moved in October from one up-town west-side flat to another. The street is immaterial. If I gave the number it would get me into trouble with my landlord. I call my house a flat. He calls it an apartment. A rose by any other name may smell just as sweet, but an apartment called a flat does not rent for so much. Which, of course, is neither here nor there.

"To resume, as to my rather unusual trouble—too good a mail service. When I lived a little farther down town my name got into one of those directories of 'Good Names of People to Send Circulars To.' Now, the circular distributing people do not know that I have moved, and of course the directory fellows don't care if I have. When I moved I left notice at the branch Post Office station, from which I was served, of my change of residence, which happened to be within the boundaries of another branch office. That notification is the cause of all my trouble. All the circulars sent to my old address are carefully corralled at the old office and re-addressed to my new home. Now every morning at the breakfast hour the postman or hall boy is sure to set my bell ringing just when the maid is ready to serve the particular tidbit that needs to come on piping hot. Off she rushes to get the mail—she is always expecting a letter from some of her friends—only to return with a bunch of circulars that have chased me from the old flat to the new one. It is positively wearisome, and I can't stop it. The Post Office fellows say they have to deliver mail addressed to me so long as they know my address. They refuse to save me the trouble of throwing the circulars away by doing it themselves. If they did that, they say, they would not only tear big holes in some law, and so lay themselves liable to imprisonment, but would be sure to offend me by throwing away some personal letter on which I would ordinarily set great store. Of course, they have the better of the argument. The law is on their side, and so I am forced to receive and throw away all the circulars any one cares to send my old mail address and that are so carefully remailed to the new one. That's what makes me believe there may be such a thing as a too-perfect mail service. I'm suffering from it, but I presume the thing benefits some one. So I suffer in silence without sending a 'letter to the editor' howling for the correction of this personal annoyance to me."

TARVIN'S REPLY TO BRADLEY.

Kentucky Judge Says the Governor Is Disingenuous, but Refrains from Calling Him a Liar.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 9.—Judge Tarvin of Covington has written a long, sarcastic reply to the interview with Gov. Bradley published in to-day's newspapers. The following extracts give its spirit:

"I thought my telegram would bring you—and it did. I have read your statements concerning me in this morning's papers with the liveliest interest. You have done well. You call me an idiot, a liar, a coward, a squirt, depraved, and 'Jim' Tarvin. But, fortunately, I am hardened. You remember the manner of attack indulged in by all of a certain class of newspapers on free silver anarchists in 1896 and since then, and from them I have received my baptism.

"But it was unkind of you to mention that Vice Presidential matter. You and I ought to have a fellow-feeling as to that. We have both been 'mentioned' as the probable tail of some man's kite. So far as I am concerned, I am trying and will continue to try to live it down and let it be forgotten.

"You say you did not know of the danger threatening Coleman. But you are mistaken. You did know. It was generally known and was repeatedly mentioned in the press. You knew of his danger and its extent, and willfully or negligently failed in your duty. I don't call you a liar—you are only disingenuous.

"You then say that you did not act because I did not call on you to act. You are again disingenuous. You know that I had no authority or jurisdiction in the matter. If I had possessed any authority, Coleman could never have gone to Maysville.

"Governor, your statement has accomplished one thing at least, for which I am thankful. The Washington Post and The Nashville American have been denouncing me for months because I am 'obscure.' But, thank God, that can no longer be said. The Governor of Kentucky, the General of its army and navy, has given me prominence.

"Must I apologize for criticising the criminal failure of the Governor? You and I ought to know that the public will criticise officials. You can't stop them. If I must apologize, I can only say that I could not help a feeling of resentment at your treatment of that poor negro. I do not criticise the people of Maysville. You are the one to blame."

...espondent has discovered the ...nts of Mr. Montagu White, the former Boer Agent here, who, after spending the recent weeks with Dr. Leyds, at Brussels, has returned to his home in England, where he is living quietly. While he has no official connection with the Transvaal, Mr. White keeps in touch with those who sympathize with the Boers. He has been invited to lecture in the United States, but declined. Mr. White intends to return to Johannesburg, where he has much property, when the war is over. But he doubts if his holdings there are worth much, believing the Boers will wreck the town and mines before surrendering.

"We no longer," said Mr. White, "have cable connection with President Krüger, so I am unable to speak definitely regarding Boer opinion of the progress of the war. I do believe, however, that, after both sides have had more fighting, they will grow tired, and an offer by President McKinley to arbitrate will be accepted. President Krüger will not surrender until the last ditch, and that will not be reached before battles are fought far harder than have yet marked the campaign. Even if President Krüger wished to make terms he could not do so. The women alone would prevent it, for the Boer women, though usually phlegmatic and taking little part in the affairs of men, when roused to the present pitch, are, perhaps, a more serious factor than the Boer commandos. The British public is only just beginning to realize the extent of the disaffection in Cape Colony. When the fighting is all over, nothing will have been accomplished, for the Dutch, though sullenly obedient, will take no interest in internal matters, harboring, with racial tenacity, the memory of their wrongs and instilling hate of the English into their numerous offspring, thus laying the seeds of continual unrest."

The removal of Irish Magistrates exhibiting tendencies to sympathize with the Boers continues at a lively rate. Mr. Conor O'Kelly, Chairman of the Mayo County Council, is the latest victim, while it is said that a number of other Magistrates in the west have been asked by the Lord Chancellor for an explanation of their speeches, which is a probable preliminary to their removal.

Mr. James Bryce, Liberal Member of Parliament for the South Division of Aberdeen, has been challenged to resign his seat by one of his leading constituents and test the feeling of the voters on the stand he has taken on the South African war.

GEN. CRONJE'S FORCES ATTACKED.

Pretoria Reports Fighting in the Vicinity of Schaltz Nek.

LORENZO MARQUES, Delagoa Bay, Dec. 9.—A despatch from Pretoria, dated Friday, says:

"Reports have been received here of fighting early this morning in the vicinity of Schaltz Nek, the British attacking Gen. Cronje. Fighting is also reported, to have occurred in the direction of Kimberley. It is presumed this is another sortie. The Dutch-German Ambulance Corps has been enthusiastically received, and will be divided between Natal and the Free State frontier.

PROMOTION FOR COL. EATON.

Husband of a New York Woman to be a Major General.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—Col. Herbert Eaton of the Grenadier Guards, who has been promoted to Major General, is the husband of Elizabeth, a daughter of the late F. O. French of New York. Gen. Eaton's mother is also an American. He had seen no active service, and commanded the Grenadier Guards when they were sent in disgrace to Bermuda.

Col. the Hon. Herbert Francis Eaton is the third son of the first Lord Cheylesmore, who died in 1891. As Col. Eaton's brother, the present holder of the title, has no children, he is heir presumptive to the barony, which is among the wealthiest in Great Britain.

Col. Eaton was born Jan. 25, 1848. He was educated at Eton, and became a subaltern in the Grenadier Guards in 1867. A short time ago he retired on half pay, but the news that he has been promoted in rank probably indicates that he has applied for and received permission to go on active service, as promotions in the British Army of retired officers are extremely rare.

He was married on July 14, 1892, to Miss Elizabeth French, daughter of the late Francis Ormond French, President of the Manhattan Trust Company of New York City. Mr. French died suddenly three years ago, leaving large fortunes to his children. Miss French was regarded as one of the most beautiful women in New York society. Her sister is Miss Elsie French, another celebrated beauty.

When Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt started on his tour round the world last Spring, it was announced in many of the newspapers that on his return to America his engagement to Miss Elsie French would be announced. He hurried back to America on the death of his father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, and this event would have prevented a marriage being arranged at present, but it is still said that Miss French will be his wife.

The wife of the first Lord Cheylesmore was Miss Charlotte G. Harman, daughter of Thomas L. Harman of New Orleans. They were married in 1839. Lady Cheylesmore died in 1887.

THE MAINE NEARLY READY.

B. N. Baker Arrives Here and Talks of the Hospital Ship.

B. N. Baker, principal owner of the Atlantic Transport Line, returned from Europe yesterday on the steamship Lucania. He went abroad recently to expedite the preparations for sending away the hospital ship Maine, which his company loaned to the British Government, and which has been equipped by American women resident in England. She will sail for the Cape Dec. 18, and thereafter ply between the Cape and England. The committee in charge, Mr. Baker said, had ample funds. While he was in London an anonymous giver contributed $5,000.

Mr. Baker said that the company's two new 13,000-ton steamers Minneapolis and Minnehaha are drawing near completion, and will be out in February.

British Buy Missouri Mules.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 9.—Capt. Marshall, an officer in the British Army, closed a contract with a local firm for 1,000 Missouri mules, to be used in South Africa. It is expected that other contracts may be let within a short time for 10,000 more.

British Advance on Naauwpoort.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—A special dispatch from Pretoria, dated Friday, Dec. 8, says 3,000 British troops preceded by an armored train, are advancing on Colesburg from Naauwpoort.

Mr. McKinley Asked to Mediate.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Senator Burrows of Michigan presented to the President to-day an elaborately prepared petition asking that the Chief Executive tender the good offices of the United States in the settlement of the difficulty between the two South African Republics and Great Britain. The petition was signed by a committee representing a large number of Hollanders in Michigan.

ASPHYXIATION KILLED HIM.

George Bussell of Red Bank Found Dead by His Father.

RED BANK, N. J., Dec. 9.—George Bussell, son of Commodore Edward Bussell, was found dead in his room by his father last night. He had been asphyxiated by illuminating gas. He was twenty-five years old.

The position of the body indicated that while in his death struggle he was groping for a window. The gas burner was of an old-fashioned make, and Bussell, it is believed, turned the key too far when he extinguished the light.

DIVORCE SUIT MUST GO ON.

Plaintiff's Motion to Discontinue It Denied at Providence.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Dec. 9.—What is considered one of the strangest divorce cases ever recorded in this State came up in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court here to-day, when Mrs. Margaret J. Hull successfully contested a motion made by her husband, George W. Hull, for the discontinuance of a suit brought by him a few weeks ago.

Hull, it is alleged, is a millionaire mine owner of Arizona, who, with his wife, had been spending some time in Massachusetts. Mrs. Hull's contention is that her husband sometime ago intimated to her that he intended to file a petition for a divorce somewhere, but would not tell the place at which he purposed to bring the action. Mrs. Hull at once sought counsel, who by telegraph and letter tried to find out where the suit had been brought. A sudden citation from Providence was promptly met, but it was found that Mr. Hull's lawyer had been directed to discontinue the action.

Winters Hanged at Sacramento.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., Dec. 9.—Harry Winters was hanged at Folsom Prison to-day for participation in the murder of C. M. Andrews at Baden, Cal., in 1897. Winters died gamely. One of his accomplices was hanged last year, and another is serving a life sentence at Folsom.

AGUINALDO'S MEN BEATEN

Young's Troops Defeat the Rebels Fifty Miles from Vigan.

KILL AND WOUND SEVENTY

Gen. Del Pilar Among the Dead—Navy Will Reach Aparri, the Northern Port, To-day.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The War Department has received the following from Gen. Otis:

"Manila, Dec. 9.

"Dispatch from Young at Vigan yesterday says escaped Spanish prisoners report four hours' engagement 3d instant between his troops and Aguinaldo's guard near Cervantes, fifty miles southeast Vigan, with heavy loss to enemy, who is being pursued. Our loss one killed, six wounded. Inhabitants of own accord join troops repairing trail and carrying subsistence.

"Have pushed column to San José south Bangued; Howse's column on rear trail; Batchelor's battalion Twenty-fourth out of reach north of Bayonbong, evidently descending river. Natives report fighting occurred twenty miles north. Navy reaches Aparri to-morrow; column of MacArthur's troops Twenty-fifth Infantry reported near Iba, west coast Zambales; Grant's column near Subig Bay; Lawton in Bulucan Province to-day with sufficient troops to overcome opposition and scatter enemy."

It is probable that the troops which engaged Aguinaldo's guard are Hare's command, as he was reported to be close in the insurgent leader's rear.

Gen. Otis also cables as follows regarding the revolt in Negros:

"Information received that Negros revolt of minor importance; Byrnes in rapid pursuit of disaffected party; Hughes in mountains Panay, en route Capiz."

MANILA, Dec. 9.—Gen. Gregoria del Pilar, commanding Aguinaldo's bodyguard, has been killed by Major Peyton C. March's battalion of the Thirty-third Infantry in a fight eighteen miles northwest of Cervantes, Dec. 3.

According to reports which Gen. Young obtained from escaped Spanish prisoners at Vigan several days ago, Major March left the coast, where he was pursuing Aguinaldo, and encountered Gen. del Pilar on a fortified trail. They fought for four hours, during which seventy Filipinos were killed or wounded. The American loss was one man killed and six wounded.

The Spaniards report that Major March is still pursuing the insurgents.

Del Pilar was one of the leaders of the present and of the anti-Spanish revolution. He was a mere youth and was reported to have been graduated from a European university. Prof. Schurman met him as a member of the first Peace Commission and rated him as remarkably clever.

The Americans have occupied Bangued, Province of Abra.

Gen. Grant's expedition has visited Orani and several Western towns, meeting small bands. He killed several of the rebels and captured a considerable quantity of munitions of war.

Bishop Potter has arrived here on a brief visit to study the Philippines.

SURGEON'S PAY STOPPED.

One of the Results of the Transport Tartar Investigation.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—One of the results of the investigations made in the case of the troopship Tartar is the stoppage of the pay of Major John A. Rafter, Surgeon, Twentieth Kansas Volunteers. This action was taken at the request of Gen. Shafter and was seconded by Secretary Root.

Gen. Shafter, who has direction of the inquiry, suggested that the pay in Surgeon Rafter's case be suspended until certain accounts for the provisioning of sick soldiers on board the transport are settled.

In a protest which Major Rafter has filed with the War Department he represents that he is not responsible for the conditions which prevailed on the Tartar.

ANOTHER NAVAL OFFICER ILL.

Commander Wood, Like Lieut. Brumby, Has Typhoid Fever.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—One of Dewey's war Captains, Commander E. P. Wood, is lying seriously ill at his residence in this city of typhoid fever. This officer commanded the Petrel, which ran in and silenced the Cavite forts in the battle of Manila Bay.

Dr. P. M. Rixey, the physician attending Capt. Wood and Lieut. Brumby, reports the condition of both officers to be as favorable as can be expected at the present stage of typhoid fever.

Archbishop Chappelle Sails.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Archbishop Chappelle, the Papal Delegate to the Philippines, with his personal staff, sailed yesterday from San Francisco on the transport Sherman for Manila. With him was Chaplain McKinnon, late of the California Volunteers, and now a regular army Chaplain, with one other Chaplain, Groves. The Sherman also carried out the field and staff officers and four companies of the Forty-ninth Infantry and a number of unattached officers and men going to join their commands in the Philippines.

Major S. T. Armstrong Not Dead.

In the notice announcing the death of Major Armstrong, Surgeon of the Thirty-second Infantry, at Manila, published in THE NEW YORK TIMES Dec. 6, the name appears as Samuel T. Armstrong. This is an error, Major Armstrong being at present in good health and active service at Puerto Principe, Cuba. The Major Armstrong referred to in the announcement was Frank C. Armstrong.

The Troopship Thomas at Colombo.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The Quartermaster General has received word that the troopship Thomas arrived at Colombo this morning and will leave that port to-morrow for Singapore. The Thomas left New York Nov. 2, and carries the Forty-seventh Volunteer Infantry, commanded by Col. Walter Howe. She was the first of the three troopships taking reinforcements to the Philippines by the transatlantic route.

Soldier Drowned at Santiago.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Gen. Brooke, commanding at Havana, Cuba, reports to the Adjutant General this morning that William H. Harris, Company D, Tenth Cavalry, was drowned at Santiago Nov. 29.

The Manauense Starts for Home.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Gen. Otis reports that the Manauense, which had such a rough passage from San Francisco to Manila, has started on the homeward voyage.

GRIDIRON CLUB CARICATURES.

Burlesques on Current Events at Its December Dinner.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The December dinner of the Gridiron Club was held to-night at the Arlington Hotel, where about 130 guests were entertained in characteristic manner by the forty correspondents who compose the organization. Gen. H. V. Boynton presided. He took part in a burlesque election, in which members of the club impersonated well-known statesmen and politicians, and participated in a Kentucky-Philadelphia election on plans of the most exaggerated type. Gen. Boynton was unanimously voted out, but he called in the "army" and "navy" and was successful through their aid.

The initiation of Rudolph Kauffmann of The Evening Star was a feature of the dinner. The candidate appeared as "Aguinaldo" running for safety and pursued by three members of the club, representing Gens. Lawton, MacArthur, and Wheeler. "Aguinaldo" was captured by these three "officers," and then "Gen. Otis," another member of the club, stalked in with military pomp, and after some conversation received the reports of the "officers," each claiming to have captured the Filipino chief. After reading each report he dictated a dispatch to his "orderly," cabling Adjt. Gen. Corbin that "the army under my command presents the Nation as a Christmas gift Aguinaldo." The club presented to "Gen. Otis" a "house" for his victory.

Another incident was the reading of an alleged dispatch from South Africa detailing a great victory which the British had achieved over the Boers. This was followed by a number of British soldiers running the whole length of the room, pursued in a leisurely manner by "Oom Paul Krüger," cracking his whip.

NO ACTION ON SANTOS COFFEE.

President Murphy and Dr. Doty Have Several Tilts at the Health Board Hearing.

No action was taken by the Health Board in the case of the coffee from the plague-infected port of Santos at the public hearing yesterday. President Murphy said he would notify to-morrow the owners of the vessels having cargoes of coffee, but no cases of plague, what disposition would be made of their cases. Commissioner York said he for one would vote against the admission of the cargo of the J. W. Taylor. There will be another hearing of the case to-morrow morning.

The hearing developed some verbal tilts between Dr. Doty, who was supported by Dr. Jenkins, on the one side, and President Murphy, supported by President York of the Police Department and Dr. Cosby.

"I want you to tell me, Dr. Doty," said President Murphy, "whether or not coffee beans are not absorbent?"

Dr. Doty said that in a degree they were.

"Is it not true," asked President Murphy, shaking his finger at Dr. Doty, "that coffee beans absorb the odor of hides and other things?"

"We are talking about living organisms," replied Dr. Doty, warmly, "and odor is not an organism. Whatever germs there might have been in these coffee beans were killed by the disinfection."

President Murphy then entered into the question of the absorbent powers of vegetable products, using various scientific formulas.

"Where did you learn all that?" asked Dr. Doty.

"I read it in the 'Encyclopaedia Britannica,'" said President Murphy.

"Why," said Dr. Doty, "the 'Encyclopaedia Britannica' was published many years ago. Sanitary science has made some progress since that time."

"You're wrong there," replied President Murphy. "The 'Encyclopaedia Britannica' I read was published just two years ago. I was careful to see just when it was published. My 'Encyclopaedia Britannica' is really up to date."

"Granted that it was published two years ago," retorted Dr. Doty, "and that it contains all the information up to the date of publication, even then there has been great progress made since that time. Science does not sleep. Lots of things have been accomplished in the last two years."

Later President Murphy said: "Is it not true Dr. Doty that fleas leave the body of a dead rat, and that other germs consume it?"

"I have not gone into the literature of fleas concerning rats, and I cannot see how in the world fleas have anything to do with the case anyhow," said Dr. Doty.

"Oh, yes, they do, yes they do," said President Murphy. "There is a good deal in this illustration of fleas, if you only knew it."

POLICE ON MILLER'S TRACK.

Capt. Reynolds and Deputy Chief Mackellar Refuse to Discuss Brooklyn Rumor—Miller No Tool.

It was rumored in Brooklyn yesterday that the police have got upon the trail of William F. Miller, the Franklin Syndicate proprietor, and are in hopes of capturing him within a week's time. This rumor may have had its origin in a long conference held yesterday morning by Capt. Reynolds of the Detective Bureau with Deputy Chief Mackellar. From this conference Capt. Reynolds came forth in apparent good humor. He was asked if there was any new developments in the Miller case, but replied that he had nothing to say. Deputy Chief Mackellar would not talk about the case beyond stating that he had not abandoned his search for the fugitive.

A story was afloat to the effect that Miller was in hiding either in this city or not far away from it, and that his friends were sounding the police to see if terms could be made which would result in Miller's surrender. No one in authority, however, could be found who would confirm this story. Inspector Brennan, who has charge of the district in which Miller's offices and home are located, said that there was nothing new in the case that could be given for publication. Capt. Lees of the Vernon Avenue Police Station, who has been at work on the case, reported sick yesterday. He caught a severe cold, which developed into bronchitis.

The Brooklyn police say that they attach no importance to the story that Miller was only a tool employed by bookmakers who had become acquainted with him when he was playing the races. They also allege that the books and papers seized in Miller's place seem to be genuine, and that they do not believe the real transactions were tabulated and placed in the hands of other parties who were the real promoters of the scheme.

Judge Thomas of the United States Court for the Kings County district yesterday appointed John B. Lord as receiver of the Franklin Syndicate. Mr. Lord has been appointed receiver by the Supreme Court also. The two appointments will not conflict.

An application was made to Judge Thomas yesterday for an injunction restraining Postmaster Wilson of Brooklyn from disposing of the Franklin Syndicate's mail matter. United States District Attorney Fettle opposed the granting of the motion, saying that no one interested in the proceedings was named in the papers, and that the mail was received conditionally by the Government, which had a perfect right to stop its delivery if fraud or illegal business was shown. He added that Postmaster Wilson had returned to the senders all the Miller mail which had been received. Judge Thomas reserved his decision.

Mrs. Miller in Elizabeth.

ELIZABETH, N. J., Dec. 9.—Mrs. Miller, wife of the manager of the Franklin Syndicate, was seen in this city Thursday and again yesterday. Several detectives followed her. Miller was born in Elizabethport, and has a large number of relatives there. It is said that he is hiding there.

OFFICERS OPEN A BALLOT BOX.

Philadelphia Commissioner Seeks to Show Fraud in Voting.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—The Commissioner appointed to open the ballot box used in the Thirteenth Division of the Seventh Ward at the November election completed his work to-day. A number of men are now under bail charged with conspiracy to stuff this box and make fraudulent returns from that division.

Counsel for Salter, Meeser, and Rodgers made a vigorous protest against sealing the ballots, but was overruled by the Court, and to-day they were opened and the number of each recorded. The vote, as returned by the election officers, showed James H. Barnett, Republican candidate for State Treasurer, 332; William T. Creasy, Democrat, 5. Kirkland, who, it was subsequently discovered, was acting as agent for a newspaper in order to unearth suspected fraud, stated at a recent Magistrate's hearing that he and a gang of repeaters came here from Washington under Rodgers's leadership.

As to the Thirteenth Division, he said Salter put 200 ballots in the box before the polls opened, and inserted on the voting check list the names of fictitious persons, some who had not voted and others dead or no longer residents of the division.

The object of the District Attorney unsealing the ballots is to call those whose names appear on the list as having voted.

Montreal Harbor Privileges in Court.

MONTREAL, Dec. 9.—An injunction has been applied for in the name of Charles L. Taylor, a member of the Corn Exchange, to prevent the Harbor Commissioners from granting the Buffalo-Cleveland-Canadian grain elevator syndicate exclusive privileges and rights in the harbor of Montreal. The writ is returnable on Thursday, and the Harbor Commissioners have agreed not to do anything until then.

TAYLOR TO BE GOVERNOR

Will Be Inaugurated in Kentucky Without Resistance.

GOEBEL'S COURSE UNDECIDED

He Declines to Discuss the Question of a Future Contest—Two Court Decisions Favor Democrats.

Special to The New York Times.

FRANKFORT, Ky., Dec. 9.—The Republican candidates have received their certificates of election and Taylor will be inaugurated Governor next Tuesday without resistance or protest.

"When will you make a contest?" was asked to-day of Mr. Goebel.

"I have not decided yet," he replied, "and I, of course, cannot discuss it when I do not know myself."

The Democratic candidates were in conference to-day, but left Frankfort without coming to a decision. Two opinions, however, were rendered by the Court of Appeals which may influence their action, as they greatly strengthen their position.

One decision of the court was the granting of a permanent injunction against Judge Toney, who issued rules of contempt against election officers who refused to admit Brown Inspectors to the counting of the ballots in Louisville. The court held that these Inspectors were not authorized to demand recognition, as the followers of Brown did not compose a separate political party.

The second decision was to the effect that in a case where thin paper ballots were used in a local option election, the election was invalidated because the ballots did not meet the requirements of the law for secret elections. The Goebelites say 17,000 votes were cast for Taylor in mountain counties on ballots so thin that they could be read easily from the back. The Republicans insist that thin ballots were used also in strong Democratic counties, and that these offset those of which the Democrats complain.

At 9:45 this morning the election certificate of William S. Taylor was signed by the Election Commissioners, and he was declared to be Governor-elect of Kentucky. The official figures of the vote filed with Secretary of State Finley are: Taylor, 193,714; Goebel, 191,331; Taylor's plurality, 2,383.

The proceedings of the Commissioners, which ended, for the time being, the bitterly fought Gubernatorial contest, were conducted in the simplest manner. The majority opinion of Commissioners Pryor and Ellis and the minority opinion of Commissioner Poynts, which were published this morning were not read, as was the original intention. The three Commissioners walked first to the office of the Clerk of the State Supreme Court, where they filed the two opinions. They then passed into the office of the Secretary of State. Clerk Chenault of the Board of Commissioners read the figures, showing the Republican candidates for offices on the State ticket had received a majority of votes, and then certificates of election were signed at once, that of Mr. Taylor being first on the list.

There were only fourteen persons in the room at the time, and of this number only two were there as spectators. There was no crowd around the building and no interest was manifested in the work save by those engaged in it. The three Commissioners were all apparently in good humor. The certificates, as soon as signed, were filed with the Secretary of State, and commissions will be issued to the elected man at once by Gov. Bradley.

Commissioner Ellis to-day freely discussed the action of the board. "This has been a hard thing for me," he said. "It has been a hard thing for all of us. I think, however, that the people of the country should know how nobly Judge Pryor has acted in the matter and how conscientiously he has done what he considered his duty. He is a great man—one of the greatest, in my opinion, that Kentucky has ever produced.

"Speaking for myself, I say, frankly, I did not like to do this thing, but under the law and the evidence there is nothing else I can do and be an honest man. The proceedings before the board were so overwhelmingly in favor of the Republicans, and they had so much the better of the arguments, that it is almost idle to discuss the affair. There was, to the minds of Judges Pryor and myself, only one thing to do, and that we have done. I know there are plenty of men who think that Democratic partisanship as I have always been, I should have remained a Democrat; certainly I have voted otherwise. But I have done what my conscience and my long career as a lawyer tell me is right, and I will do otherwise for no man or upon no consideration."

Gov.-elect Taylor said of the action of the board: "I expected it, of course. I knew that if the Commissioners went by the law and the evidence they could do nothing else than decide the way they have done."

Commissioner Poynts declined to sign the Republican certificate of election, saying that he stood by the opinion he had rendered and could not consistently do so. He consented, however, to sign the certificates of the Railroad Commissioners.

The local people are arranging to make Taylor's inauguration a non-partisan affair. A Committee on Reception has been made up, composed of about fifty prominent men of the State capital, Republicans and Democrats alike being represented on it. Ex-Senator Blackburn, as Chairman of the Goebel State Campaign Committee, issued a call to-night for a meeting of the committee here next Thursday, Dec. 14. Chairman Allie W. Young also issued a call for a meeting of the State Central and State Executive Committees here the same day.

The call does not state in either case what the object of the conference is, but it is known that the purpose is to give official party indorsement to the contests which are expected to be made by Goebel and the candidates on the defeated Democratic ticket. Goebel and Blackburn to-day received many telegrams from Democrats throughout the State urging contests, and it is said mass meetings will be held in various counties next week for the purpose of working up sentiment on the subject.

EXPANSION TALK IN ARKANSAS.

State Organ of the Democracy for Retention of the Philippines.

Special to The New York Times.

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Dec. 9.—A surprise has been sprung on the Democracy of Arkansas by The Arkansas Gazette declaring for expansion. This paper has for many years been the organ of the party and has always exercised great influence in its councils. In a leading editorial entitled "For Expansion," it says:

"Gov. D. W. Jones, in his address at the Choctaw banquet, came out strongly in favor of the retention of the Philippines. His views on this subject are in line with those of the business men of this section, who believe that the South will be more benefited than any other portion of the country by the United States holding on to the sovereignty of the islands.

"Not only the business men of the South, but some of the most prominent statesmen in this section, are in favor of expansion. Nearly every commercial organization that has held a meeting in the South within the last year has indorsed the policy of expansion. They realize that it is to the interest of the cotton-producing States to build up an export trade with the Asiatic countries and that this cannot be done unless this country secures a foothold in the Pacific Ocean. The South is no longer blind to its own interests, and when public sentiment is fully developed it will be found that this section is pronouncedly in favor of retaining the Philippines and all other newly acquired territory in the Pacific."

WASHINGTON MEMORIAL PLANS.

Efforts Started Many Years Ago That Came to Naught—Cartman Lyon's Ambitious Scheme.

An interesting history might be written, could one gather all the facts, of the numerous futile attempts that have been made from time to time to erect monuments to the memory of Washington. It was natural that enthusiasm in this respect should be noticeable immediately after Washington's death 100 years ago, but many of those efforts never amounted to anything more than an exhibition of laudable ambition. Congress was the first to take public action in this matter, and among the resolutions adopted by that body on Dec. 19, 1799, was the following:

Resolved, By the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that a marble monument be erected by the United States in the Capitol at the City of Washington, and that the family of Gen. Washington be requested to permit his body to be consigned under it, and that the monument be so designed as to commemorate the great events of his military and political life.

The history of the last 100 years shows that these ideas were never fully carried out.

The New York State Society of the Cincinnati decided in 1801 to erect a monument in this city to Washington. It was to be a large bronze equestrian statue, and the newspapers of the day waxed eloquent over this proposed artistic adornment of the city. Considerable money was raised, but after four or five years the amount was too small to defray the cost of the original intentions, and rather than make a failure of it the Cincinnati abandoned the attempt, and not only returned the original subscription to all contributors, but added the interest with each amount.

One of the most remarkable attempts for a Washington memorial in New York was started in this city in 1846 by I. S. Lyon, an energetic individual of varied talents, who began business as a cartman, and who signed his name to the speeches he made on behalf of the monument, "I. S. Lyon, Cartman No. 2,480." Later in life he wrote an interesting little history of Boonton, N. J. His energy succeeded in arousing a great deal of enthusiasm for the monument, and the Mayor of the city and other influential men were appointed Trustees of the Washington Monument Association. William F. Havemeyer was Mayor when the scheme was started, and with him on the committee were Shepard Knapp, Hamilton Fish, William Hall, Edward K. Collins, Alderman Elias G. Drake, John Leveridge, John Paine, Henry Storms, E. D. Hart, Calvin Pollard, and W. C. H. Waddell. The interest was well sustained for two or three years, and on Feb. 22, 1847, a monster festival in aid of the cause was held in the old Castle Garden, now the Aquarium. The admission was only 12½ cents, as it was the idea to have every citizen contribute something.

Mr. Lyon's scheme was undoubtedly too elaborate for New York fifty years ago. His plan was to induce at least 100,000 persons to contribute $1 each for five years. That would have given half a million dollars as a starter with which to commence work on the design of Calvin Pollard. This was practically a monumental building, where relics and trophies of the Revolution might be kept, and, to quote from one of Mr. Lyon's speeches: "Its lower halls might be fitted up into vast libraries, for the reception of such books and manuscripts as would from time to time be presented to the association, and the upper halls might be occupied as galleries for the safekeeping and exhibition of the portraits and statues of the heroes, orators, and statesmen who were instrumental in achieving our independence."

The most novel feature of all, which was clearly intended to gain subscriptions, was the suggestion that one of the largest rooms be set apart for keeping the original subscription lists, upon which would appear the amount given by each person, with his occupation and residence. "Let it be," exclaimed the ambitious cartman, "such a monument as earth never saw before, for it will be dedicated to the memory of earth's paragon of human greatness."

This remarkable edifice was to have been erected on the east side of the city, but the scheme never advanced far enough to [illegible] chase a definite site. Mr. Lyon invoked the crowned heads of the world to aid his undertaking, and wrote to Queen Victoria, the Czar of Russia, and scores of other rulers, asking for their autographs, that they might be sold in aid of the cause. Most of them replied, but their signatures were no help to the Washington monument, for the interest gradually died out. Mr. Lyon left the letters and after his death they formed an interesting autograph sale, and were scattered among various collections in the city.

WASHINGTON IN THE SCHOOLS.

Plans for Observing the Anniversary of His Death This Week.

The public school children of the five boroughs will observe with appropriate exercises on Thursday the one hundredth anniversary of the death of George Washington. President Little of the Board of Education has addressed a letter to each of the Borough Superintendents, saying:

"I beg to call your attention to the fact that the educational interests of the country are to observe this occasion not by vacation or by any important interference with the studies of the children or the duties of the day, but by simple yet impressive exercises at the opening of the schools on that day, and I respectfully suggest that you co-operate with this purpose by directing the Principals throughout your borough to hold such exercises, which need not occupy more than fifteen or twenty minutes, and yet, if properly conducted, may leave a lasting impression upon the minds of the scholars regarding the wonderful characteristics of the Father of Our Country."

It is intended to have the flags on the various schoolhouses displayed a half-mast.

Henry C. Blackmar of 196 Rodney Street, Brooklyn, announces that the Grand Army of the Republic will render assistance in providing speakers for the Washington Memorial exercises in any of the Brooklyn schools. Mr. Blackmar, who is a member of Post No. 362, and Charles H. Cotton of Post No. 197 are members of a special committee appointed by Department Commander Joseph W. Kay to make suggestions as to the best methods of teaching patriotism and civics in the public schools. The above offer is the result of their work. The same offer will hold good for any succeeding anniversary or patriotic holiday. The committee solicits the names and addresses of speakers who will volunteer to perform this service in the public schools.

Washington Memorial Services.

Services commemorating the 100th anniversary of the death of George Washington will be held on Thursday at 2 P. M. in the council chamber of his old headquarters, known at that time as the Morris House, later as the Jumel Mansion, and now called Earle Cliff. The services will be under the auspices of the Washington Heights Chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of which Mrs. Ferdinand P. Earle is Regent. The ceremonies will be held in the same room occupied by Washington as his headquarters from Sept. 16 to Oct. 21, 1776. Gen. Washington afterward visited the old mansion as President of the United States in July, 1790, accompanied by his Cabinet.

ELEVATED EMPLOYE KILLED.

His Brother, a Policeman, Becomes Hysterical When He Sees His Body.

Henry Neiman, twenty-nine years old, living at 1,724 Amsterdam Avenue, employed as a car cleaner on the Manhattan Railway, was run over and instantly killed on Eighth Avenue, between One Hundred and Forty-ninth and One Hundred and Fiftieth Streets, yesterday afternoon by a passing train. He was cleaning some cars on the centre track when he was struck by the train which was north-bound.

Policeman Paul Neiman, a brother of the dead man, was on reserve duty in the West One Hundred and Fifty-second Street Station House. When the mangled body of his brother was carried into the station house he became hysterical. The dead man is survived by a widow and three children.

Two Alleged Swindlers Captured.

Two men, who described themselves as J. King Potter and Edward Farrell, were yesterday held in the Jefferson Market Police Court for examination on a charge of trying to obtain money under false pretenses from W. D. Shepperd of Monkton, Md., and Andrew S. Coriel of Bound Brook, N. J. It is charged that they advertised for men to work for the American Cereal Company. They received many answers, including two from the complainants, who were asked to deposit money in advance to secure the positions. The police of this city were notified of the scheme, and an appointment was made with the men at a hotel, where they were captured.

TRIED MURDER IN COURT.

Thomas Lynch, in the Presence of Magistrate Pool, Attempted to Stab Katie Hanrahan.

Thomas Lynch, an ex-convict, attempted to kill Katie Hanrahan, his accuser, yesterday morning, in the presence of Magistrate Pool and the other officers of the Centre Street Police Court. Lynch lives at 555 Canal Street, and was released only last Monday from the penitentiary, where he had served a month's sentence for annoying Miss Hanrahan.

Miss Hanrahan, who lives with her parents at 40 Beach Street, attended a church fair Friday evening with Mary Lynch, a sister of the prisoner. On the way back they were met by Lynch, who with knife in hand made an attempt to kill Miss Hanrahan. The girl ran away, while Miss Lynch pluckily grappled with her brother. A crowd gathered and held Lynch at bay until Policeman Reilly of the Leonard Street Station could arrest him.

When arraigned in court Lynch declared he was being persecuted. The Magistrate sentenced him to the workhouse for six months, and no sooner had the words been spoken than Lynch was seen to reach for something in his right hip pocket. A big clasp knife flashed as Lynch suddenly lunged at Miss Hanrahan, who was stepping down from the bridge.

Detective Armstrong of the Oak Street Station and Central Office Detective Gargan, who were standing near, seized Lynch, but not before he had felled the young woman to the floor with a blow from his fist. Lynch made several attempts to free himself from the detectives and there was great excitement in the courtroom. Finally, with the aid of the court attendants, Lynch was disarmed and put in irons. A new complaint for assault in the first degree was then entered and Lynch was rearraigned.

"These officers," snarled Lynch, "are hurting my wrists with their handcuffs."

"I can't help that; you're a most desperate character," responded Magistrate Pool, who in the second complaint held Lynch in $2,000 bail for trial in the Court of General Sessions, the sentence first pronounced to be served after his period of detention in the latter case.

Miss Mary Lynch, who was in court to testify against her brother, said he was released from Clinton prison on Oct. 14, after serving a four years' term for attempting to shoot Policeman O'Connor of the Charles Street Station. Prior to that offense he had served two terms of two and four years, respectively, in Sing Sing for stabbing men.

LEGAL NOTES.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.—The First Appellate Division has reversed an order of the Special Term of the Supreme Court, which directed a writ of peremptory mandamus requiring the Municipal Civil Service Commission of this city to issue a certificate to William J. Chamberlain, a police clerk's assistant, that he had been appointed or employed in pursuance of law and of the civil service rules. The Court holds that Mr. Chamberlain was not legally appointed to the position he holds, and therefore was not entitled to the certificate. He has received no pay for July, August, or September, and the certificate was considered a necessary prerequisite to his receiving payment. He was appointed to the position by the Board of City Magistrates on June 28 last. No eligible list for the examination of such appointees under the civil service rules had been made. The Court holds, by Justice Rumsey, that by Section 7 of the civil service law no appointment could be made until such time as the rules and regulations required by the act should have been established. The effect of this provision is held to be that until rules and regulations had been made it was not legal to make appointments to any position which by the statute was placed in the competitive class. "It is said," Justice Rumsey adds, "that such a construction would prevent all appointments until the members of the municipal commission, having been selected by the Mayor, should establish the rules and procure their approval, and that the effect of this requirement would be to put the whole civil service at the mercy of the Commissioners and destroy it if they do not see fit to perform their duties. Undoubtedly that would be true if the statute had not made some provision for cases where the public welfare required that any office should be filled. But if there were no such provision in the statute, the possibility that some official of the State might throw the public service into disorder by refusing to perform his duties affords no reason why the statute should not have its ordinary and natural construction."

SALE OF COLORED COFFEE.—In the suit brought by W. H. Crossman & Brother to recover damages from Theodor G. Lurman & Co. because of the latter firm's refusal to complete a contract for the sale of 500 bags of coffee, which has been before the courts for several years, a judgment for the defendants upon the verdict of the jury on the second trial was reversed by the First Appellate Division yesterday. The action involved the question whether colored coffee was properly deliverable under the contract. When the case was before the court on appeal more than a year ago the judgment below in favor of the plaintiffs was reversed. It was then held that the only question presented was whether under the public health law the sale of the coffee was prohibited. That law forbids the sale or offer for sale of any adulterated food or drug, and any article of food was to be deemed adulterated "if it be colored, or coated, or polished, or powdered, whereby damage is concealed, or it is made to appear better than it really is, or of greater value." The first reversal was because of the exclusion of testimony to show that the effect of the artificial shelling of coffee, especially where the coloring matter used was ferric salt of a yellow color, would be to enhance its apparent value, or make it appear better than it really was. On the second trial, after the defendants had been allowed to prove that there was a coating of an opaque substance upon the coffee and had rested at that, the plaintiffs in rebuttal endeavored to prove that the coating of this substance upon the coffee bean did not, as a matter of fact, conceal any defect in the coffee, but were not permitted to do so. This, the Appellate tribunal holds, in an opinion by Justice Ingraham, was an erroneous ruling. The Court says that evidence merely tending to show that this coffee was colored by a substance which was in its nature opaque, without proving that the coffee itself was in some way damaged, which this covering concealed, would not bring the case within the statute.

VERDICT OBTAINED BY PERJURED TESTIMONY.—A judgment on a verdict for $5,000 in a suit by Harriett Nugent, three years and eight months old, by guardian, against the Metropolitan Street Railway Company was affirmed by the Appellate Division in May, 1897. The denial of a motion subsequently made at Special Term for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, has now been reversed on appeal and a new trial has been ordered. It was claimed that the new evidence showed that the witnesses for the plaintiff, upon whose testimony the judgment was recovered, were guilty of perjury, and that the judgment was obtained by means of a conspiracy between the plaintiff and one of her attorneys. The child while crossing Madison Street, near James Street, in this city, on May 5, 1896, was knocked down by a horse drawing one of the company's cars and run over by one of the forward wheels of the car. It was held on the company's appeal from the verdict that the facts proved on the trial were sufficient to support the finding of the jury that the negligence of the driver in not looking in the direction in which he was driving was the cause of the injuries. The testimony was that the child walked from the curb of the sidewalk, 7 feet 6 inches, to the first rail of the railroad, reaching the rail when the head of the horse, drawing the car at the rate of about five miles an hour, was still ten feet away from it, and that, although there was nothing to obstruct the driver's view, and the car might have been stopped within a distance of twelve feet, the child was run over and one of her legs was cut off by the front wheel of the car. The referee to whom was referred the question whether a new trial should be granted reported that he was fully convinced that the judgment "was obtained by collusion, fraud, and conspiracy, entered into on behalf of the attorneys for the plaintiff and of the several witnesses who had therefore testified on behalf of the plaintiff; that plaintiff's witnesses, Sadie McDonald, Mary Langstaff, Ellen Reilley, and Margaret Frazer, all testified falsely before the jury as to material facts; that the first two never saw the accident at all, and that the last two never saw the things to which they testified." Justice McLaughlin, in giving the opinion of the Appellate Division, said: "We have here, in addition to the perjured testimony, the fact that it was inspired and manufactured by one of the plaintiff's attorneys; that he entered into a conspiracy with the witnesses for the purpose of obtaining a judgment, thereby committing a fraud upon the Court."

DEPARTMENT STORES' USES

Mr. Wanamaker Describes Them to the Industrial Commission.

TO MEET MODERN CONDITIONS

The Big Concerns an Inevitable Outgrowth of Facilities for the Transaction of Business.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 8.—John Wanamaker testified to-day before the Industrial Commission on the subject of department stores. He declared that these stores were beneficial to society, having a substantial economic and moral basis for their existence.

"The department store," he continued, "is a natural product evolved from conditions that exist as a result of fixed trade laws. Cheaper capital, better transportation, more rapid communication make the modern retail store possible, natural, and useful, and, therefore, inevitable. Executive capacity combined with the command of capital finds opportunity in these conditions, which are in harmony with the irresistible determination of the producer to meet the consumer directly and of merchandise to find distribution along the lines of least resistance. Economy in the expenditure of money, time, and effort measure department store success. Just in proportion as these ends are reached is it popular, powerful, and prosperous."

He contended that the effect of the creation of these stores had been to reduce retail prices. In support of this statement, he asserted that upon American dry goods generally the retailer's percentage of profit has been reduced one-half in the last twenty years. This was also true of woolen, silk, and cotton fabrics. The average percentage of reduction in prices to the consumer could not be stated, owing to the varying standards of qualities and taste, and the improvements in manufacture, but Mr. Wanamaker believed that the consumer got the entire reduction in the retailer's profit.

In some articles definite comparisons of prices were made, as follows: Kitchen agateware is now retailed at less than one-half the prices of 1880; prices of some woodenware articles for domestic use have fallen 80 per cent. in fifteen years; many housekeeping articles manufactured of metal, wood, and wire have been reduced 50 per cent. in twenty years. The causes of these reductions, Mr. Wanamaker said, were various, but prominent among them was the power of the large retailer to buy cheaper and sell for reduced rates of profit.

Standard patterns of French china dinnerware and rich cut glassware are now retailed at 25 per cent. less than the prices of ten years ago. This reduction was, Mr. Wanamaker thought, to be credited entirely to the influence of the modern retail store. It could be stated, he said, that the profits of the great retail stores were from 3 to 6 per cent. on the dollar of business done.

Mr. Wanamaker also argued that reduced prices stimulate consumption and increase employment. More labor, he said, was required for production, transportation, and distribution. The public service was the sole basic condition of the growth of the retail business. The variety of articles dealt in was such that it was impossible to form combinations and trusts in the retail business. It was much the same as the learned professions.

The only advantage of the large store over the small one, he said, was to be found in the superiority of its service. It was also true that generally the employe in a large store was better off than the proprietor of a small store. Some of them received $5,000 a year, and many $2,000. Speaking of the effect of combination stores on small shopkeepers, he said it could not be denied that one of the effects of the big stores had been to retire from business small retailers, but he contended that while this was true, the interests of these few people were not to be compared with the interests of the mass of the people. The wholesale stores and jobbers were also greatly affected by the fact that the large stores dealt directly with the manufacturer, but this, on the other hand, was a great benefit to the manufacturer. He classified the present large city stores as merely an enlargement of the general cross-roads country store, and said the greatest advantage found in them was that they eliminated adventurers and speculators from the business.

"Do not the large retailers often make a point of buying up bankrupt stocks?" he was asked.

"If they do, they are children merchants or idiots," the witness replied. He went on to say that he had been of this class until ten or twelve years ago, but he had changed his methods in recent years. He had discovered that the people did not want dobbers, such as bankrupt stocks are. The great demand was for new things, and often goods were considered old which had not been on the shelves for more than thirty days. He also argued that the properly conducted store was a university, educating the employe not only mentally, but in morals. Men were often discharged, he said, for lying to customers. Mr. Wanamaker declared that there was no reason for the hue and cry against the big stores, and that the only basis for such criticism was found in the misfortunes of the complainers.

Mr. Wanamaker said that when he first went into business he thought it best to do his own manufacturing, but he had abandoned the idea, finding it preferable to be able to go into the open market. In this connection the witness took occasion to say that the worst blow that the carpet business of Philadelphia had ever received was when the high tariff was put upon carpets, shutting out foreign goods. The result was over home production.

He said he did not believe in selling goods at less than cost as a mere bait, and expressed the opinion that the store which followed this practice expected to make up the loss on some other article, where the advance would not be suspected.

Referring to the advance made by the American manufacturers in making woolens Mr. Wanamaker said: "We don't need the French any longer in this work. France can go to war with England if she so desires—we would not miss her."

"How about England?"

"I would rather go to the Paris Exposition than to go to war with England. I am too fond of Joe Chamberlain, who is doing so much talking these days."

In the large stores, Mr. Wanamaker said, the purchaser of large quantities had no advantage over the buyer of a small quantity. The mail-order business had not been found profitable. He considered women quite as useful as men in many places in large stores, and said that in some instances women employes were paid as high as $5,000.

"Don't ask me about the New York business," said Mr. Wanamaker, after speaking of the extent of his interests in Philadelphia, "for I am a Philadelphian, and Philadelphia is my first love." He went on to say that the New York people did not stop in business hours to take a nap and that they came in, bought what they wanted, and went out.

In reply to a question, the witness said that he believed the fixing of a gold basis for the finances of the country and the proper regulation of the tariff, so that it would stay regulated, would mark a step of progress in the interest of the business of the country. He also thought the trusts should be regulated.

The Isabella Heimath.

The tenth annual report of the Isabella Heimath was made public yesterday. The Treasurer's report shows a considerable increase of capital on legacies' account. The income during the year covered the maintenance expenses. An inventory of the property of the home shows a total valuation of $910,511.84. The number of inmates at the beginning of the year was 161. During the year many valuable donations were received, all of which are acknowledged in the Superintendent's report. The average age of those who died during the year was seventy-nine years.

Congress of Deaf Mutes at Paris.

The American sub-committee of the International committee which is arranging for a congress of deaf mutes at the World's Fair in Paris will hold a meeting in this city Wednesday. The Rev. A. W. Mann of the Mid-Western Deaf Mute Mission will preside. The members of the sub-committee who will be present are the Rev. J. W. Koebler, rector of All Souls' Church for Deaf Mutes, Philadelphia; Prof. T. F. Fox of the New York Institution, and E. A. Hodgson.

$75 to the "Conscience Fund."

Collector Bidwell received yesterday by mail a cashier's check for $75 on the Merchants' National Bank, drawn to his order. In the envelope was a slip of paper, on which was printed with a pen: "The inclosed money is for duty on foreign articles—$75." The money will be added to the "Conscience Fund."

MR. HAFFEN ON BOROUGHS.

Favors Their Retention as Opposed to Centralization—Demands Greater Measure of Home Rule.

Louis F. Haffen, President of the Borough of the Bronx, yesterday sent a reply to Frank Moss, counsel of the Mazet investigating committee, in answer to a letter of Nov. 21. In this letter Mr. Moss asked for the expression of views on the question of the retention of the borough system in Greater New York and cognate subjects. Mr. Haffen, in his reply, says in part:

"If Greater New York is to be retained, then certainly the borough divisions should be retained. The abolition of the boroughs as such would mean, I take it, the abolition of all administration by localities and the absolute centralization of power, which I do not believe in. The distinguished men who framed the charter led the people to believe that the principle of home rule was recognized in that instrument.

"The home rule or borough rule that we have in practice under the charter is only the remotest shadow of the real article. Being a believer in home rule, and deeming it not only possible to have it, but considering it to be for the greatest good of the greatest number when judiciously applied, I favor the retention of the borough system just as long as the greater city is to remain intact.

"The influence of borough Presidents in public affairs is not what it should be, for the simple reason that they have little or no power. They are even denied a vote on the Board of Public Improvements on matters affecting the city at large. I think if this board is to be retained, borough Presidents should have the right to vote on all matters affecting the entire city.

"An idea of how the Borough of the Bronx has advanced as to tax values may be obtained from the fact that ten years ago the assessed valuation was $[illegible]. The total real estate valuation now is $[illegible]. Allowing, say a valuation of $[illegible] for the new territory east of the Bronx River, a most substantial increase in ten years is noticeable.

"Public improvements should be controlled absolutely by local authorities. As far as local improvements are concerned, I don't know any better plan than the one which prevailed in the Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards prior to the enactment of the charter. It was due to the operations of this department that this part of the city which lay dormant for many years bounded into public notice and invited a population that is now larger than any city in the State north of the city line, except one.

"The Borough of the Bronx asks for nothing that it is not willing to concede to every other borough. It seeks no favor. It does want home rule, and I feel confident it would welcome municipal ownership of public franchises."

BROOKLYN CHURCHES BOUGHT.

To be Razed to Make Way for the New East River Bridge.

The new East River Bridge Commission has at last successfully carried out the negotiations for the purchase of three Brooklyn churches which will have to be torn down to make way for the new bridge. These temples of worship are the Emanuel Evangelical Lutheran Church at South Fifth Street and Driggs Avenue; the Central Methodist Episcopal Church, also on that street, near that avenue, and St. Mark's Episcopal Church, at Bedford Avenue and South Fifth Street.

For the first of these church properties the commission agreed to pay $[illegible]. This property is the largest of the three. A committee of the congregation has been unable as yet to obtain a suitable site for a new church building. Concerning this an official of the church yesterday said: "We do not anticipate going far away, because our church is one of the largest here, and all our members live here. We have also a large number of young persons and we want to keep them."

For a long time the young persons in the congregation have striven to get sermons preached in English, and a fortnight ago the older members consented. It was reported that the church might possibly obtain the Temple Beth-Elohim, in Keap Street, a beautiful church structure, which is on the market, that society having amalgamated with the Congregation Beth-Ismel. The prospective buyers, however, thought that too much money was asked for the property.

As to the future of the Central Methodist Episcopal Church there is a strong probability that that church society will unite with the Mansell Place Methodist Episcopal Church. The Rev. George Adams, pastor of the Central Church, yesterday said: "Both churches have appointed committees to look into the feasibility of uniting, but have arrived at no definite conclusion. Another meeting will be held in a week or so, and what will then be decided upon will be final."

St. Mark's Episcopal Church will be located at Brooklyn Avenue and Eastern Parkway.

REGISTRATION AT CORNELL.

Largest Number of Students in the History of the Institution.

An advance copy of The Cornell University Register for 1899-1900 shows the largest registration yet reached in the history of that institution. The total number of students enrolled so far is 2,300, as against 2,088 at the same time last year. The Faculty shows a corresponding increase, the number of professors, instructors, and other officers being 314, as against 291 last year.

This increase has taken place hand-in-hand with the adoption of more stringent entrance requirements. The Register shows that entrance requirements have been so strengthened, and at the same time so correlated with the work of the public schools, that it now takes a full high school course to enter a student in any course of the university. Further increase in entrance requirements in courses leading to the degrees of C. E., B. Arch., and M. E. is announced to take effect in and after 1900.

The general increase in enrollment is shared by each of the various departments of the university. In the Academic Department 694 students are registered, as against 616 last year. In the Law School the attendance this year is 177, an increase of 15. In the Medical College are 328, as against 274 last year. In the College of Forestry, now announced for the second term, the number of students has increased from 3 to 18. The College of Civil Engineering, in spite of more stringent entrance requirements, shows the largest registration in its history, the Freshman Class containing 17 more students than last year. The Libby College of Mechanical Engineering and the Mechanic Arts shows increase over last year from 466 to 556. Announcement is also made that the Summer session, which was filled for the first time last year under university control, would be continued in 1900.

The University Library now contains 228,022 volumes, of which about 14,000 have been added during the past year. A staff of fifteen librarians, cataloguers, and assistants is employed in the library.

A territorial summary of the student body shows that 44 States and 14 foreign countries are represented at the university. New York leads with 1,366 students; Pennsylvania follows with 157, Ohio with 98, New Jersey with 88, Illinois 87, and Massachusetts 46. The foreign countries represented are: Canada, Russia, Mexico, Germany, Japan, Switzerland, Brazil, Columbia, New Zealand, Nicaragua, Norway, Sweden, and Turkey.

THE ETHICS OF SHOPPING.

Mrs. Percy Widdrington Talks to the League for Political Education.

Mrs. Percy Widdrington of London, well known in England as a lecturer on social topics, spoke to members of the League for Political Education yesterday on "The Ethics of Shopping." The duty of the consumer, said Mrs. Widdrington, is two-fold, —first in regard to the production and second, to the distribution of goods. She spoke of the work of the Consumers' League on these lines, of its endeavor to obtain healthful surroundings in the manufacture of goods, and to better the condition of shop assistants.

To accomplish the latter end, she declared associations of shop employes to be of absolute necessity, as such associations alone could deal effectively with the matter of wages. After explaining at some length the sweat-shop system, Mrs. Widdrington said that its abolition would be best accomplished through a strengthening of the trade unions.

There is a triple work of association to be accomplished, as a starting point for reforms in conditions of production and distribution, said Mrs. Widdrington in conclusion. This consists of associations of consumers, shop assistants, and producers. But such voluntary work, she declared, could merely give the movement its start, legislation being essential to its crystallization in permanent reform.

Mrs. Weil Wants More Alimony.

Decision was reserved by Justice Gildersleeve, in the Supreme Court, yesterday, on an application made on behalf of Mrs. May Evangeline Weil for an increase of the temporary alimony allowed her from $200 a month to $400 a month and counsel fee of $1,000 in addition to one of $300 awarded her by Justice Beach. Mrs. Weil, who was an actress before her marriage, was known on the stage as May Wood. She is suing Mr. Weil, who is a member of the Stock Exchange, for a separation. In a counter suit Mr. Weil names Frank H. Deane, an actor, as co-respondent.

Louis Albrecht, fifty years old, living at 2,837 Eighth Avenue, and janitor of the Empire City Savings Bank Building, at 921 West One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, was instantly killed yesterday afternoon by falling through a skylight of the building, a distance of twenty feet.

Albrecht was at work cleaning the skylight, and his wife was sitting in a window in the second floor of an extension giving her husband a cloth so he could wipe one of the panes of glass. In reaching for the cloth the man stepped on one of the panes of glass in the skylight and fell through. He struck his head on the cashier's desk, and then fell off to the floor.

THE BIG STORE

SIEGEL SANTA COOPER CO CLAUS CHRISTMAS GREETING

A CITY IN ITSELF

The Two Weeks Before Xmas

bring the supreme test of the store organization. All the year long we search out the weak spots—perfecting the system that keeps 3,000 to 4,000 clerks and half a thousand delivery wagons working as if they were but one piece of machinery—so that when the Xmas rush comes we may be able to rise to the occasion and give our patrons satisfactory service. We are equipped for the work better than ever—with stocks of all sorts of Holiday Goods far beyond any other New York showing, with every possible thing that could cause disappointments carefully guarded against AND WITH PRICES THAT, QUALITY CONSIDERED, HAVE NO EQUAL. May we expect a fair share of your patronage?

The stores will be crowded from now on—your personal safety must not be overlooked—and was not lost sight of when this store was built.

THE BIG STORE IS FIRE PROOF, being the only large store in New York enjoying this distinction.

On all Purchases of $5 or more, WE PREPAY FREIGHT

To Any Railroad Station Within the Following States:

Maine,	New Hampshire,	Vermont,
Massachusetts,	Rhode Island,	Connecticut,
New York,	Pennsylvania,	and New Jersey.

In the Jewelry Department.

"'Tis plate of rare device; and jewels of rich and exquisite form; their values great."—Shakespeare.

Shakespeare's words fittingly describe the magnificent Holiday display of our Jewelry Department. From it you can select a Xmas gift for young or old of either sex that will be sure to please. And such a selection will cost you infinitely less here than elsewhere. Another thing you must not overlook is that you take no risk of any sort by purchasing here. You do not have to be an expert, as anything you buy is returnable. And as we warrant everything we sell to be just as we say it is—a child can buy here as safely as the best expert in the country. Varieties are simply enormous. There is nothing you can think of in the jewelry line that you won't find here in almost inexhaustible assortment.

LECTURES ON FRENCH POETRY.

Course by Henri de Regnier Under the Auspices of the Cercle Francais de l'Universite Harvard.

The Cercle Français de l'Université Harvard is preparing for its usual active season. Its annual French play is to be produced this month, and the members have arranged for a course of lectures in the Spring by Henri de Régnier, the poet. This will be the third course of lectures by prominent French literary men under the auspices of the cercle. M. de Régnier's subject will be "Modern French Poetry." The dates of and the particular sides of the subject to be discussed in the lectures are as follows: March 1, "Parnassians and Symbolists; Origins of Contemporary Poetry"; March 3, "Villiers de l'Ile Adam and the Poets in Prose"; March 6, "Paul Verlaine; the Sentiment in Art"; March 8, "Stéphane Mallarmé; Poetry and Music"; March 10, "The New Poetry School"; March 13, "The Poets of To-day; Works and Biography"; March 15, "Symbolism in Belgium"; March 17, "The Young Poets; Future of Poetry."

M. de Régnier will also lecture at many other universities and educational institutions in this country. He has already been invited to address the students at Adelphi College, Brooklyn; Brown University, the Brooklyn Institute, the University of California, the University of Chicago, Columbia University, Vassar College, Cornell University, and other places. He will be accompanied on his visit to America by Mme. de Régnier, who is also well known for her literary work.

The interest in Cyrano de Bergerac has resulted in the choice by the members of the cercle this year of de Bergerac's comedy, the "Pédant Joué," for representation. It will be produced Dec. 14 and 16 at Cambridge and Dec. 18 and 19 at Boston. The cast will be as follows:

Granger	A. S. Dixey, 1902
Chateaufort	H. B. Stanton, 1900
La Tromblaye	B. F. Bell, 1900
Chariot Granger	R. Goelet, Jr., 1902
Mathieu Gareau	F. W. Morrison, 1900
Paquier	J. A. Dix, 1902
Fleury	R. W. Goelet, 1902
Genevote	F. Watson, 1902
Manon	R. B. Bowler, 1902
Cuistre	J. M. Hunnewell, 1902

The members of the cast are being rehearsed in the most careful manner, and are said all to be amateur actors of more than average ability. Another feature of the performance will be the elaborate mounting of the play, which is on a scale never before attempted by the cercle in its productions. The ballets to be given in connection with the comedy will, it is said, be not the least interesting portion of the performance.

The "Pédant Joué" has never been produced on the stage in any country before or since the author's death. It was adapted for the cercle by the President of that body, H. B. Stanton. Although reducing the number of acts from five to three, Mr. Stanton is said to have been able to preserve all the salient features of the plot, while cutting out very little of the witty dialogue. Great interest is being taken in the representation by students of French literature in this country.

Among the patronesses of the performance at Cambridge are the following: Mrs. Charles W. Eliot, Mrs. G. P. Baker, Mrs. William A. Bancroft, Miss Bocher, Mrs. L. B. R. Briggs, Mrs. Lucien Carr, Mrs. R. H. Dana, Mrs. Arthur Gilman, Mrs. B. F. Goodrich, Mrs. T. W. Higginson, Mrs C. E. Hubbard, Mrs. William Lawrence, Miss Longfellow, Miss Grace Norton, Miss Sara Norton, Mrs. Charles Peabody, Mrs. Edward C. Pickering, Mrs. William Pickering, Mrs. F. C. de Sumichrast, Mrs. J. G. Thorp, Mrs. J. B. Warner, Mrs. C. E. Wentworth, and Mrs. E. B. Wight.

The patronesses of the performances at Boston include Mrs. Thomas Allen, Mrs. F. L. Ames, Mrs. C. W. Amory, Mrs. F. I. Amory, Mrs. George H. Ball, Mrs. J. A. Beebe, Mrs. George Baty Blake, Mrs. Samuel Cabot, Mrs. Robert M. Cushing, Mrs. Philip Dexter, Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, Mrs. J. W. Farlow, Mrs. James T. Fields, Mrs. Andrew Fiske, Miss Edith Fiske, Mrs. R. H. Fitz, Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mrs. J. R. Hooper, Mrs. William Hooper, Mrs. George D. Howe, Mrs. Henry S. Howe, Mrs. James Jackson, Miss S. O. Jewett, Mrs. Thacher Loring, Mrs. F. G. Macomber, Mrs. G. H. Mifflin, Mrs. E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. Francis Peabody, Mrs. R. S. Peabody, Mrs. John C. Phillips, Mrs. Andrew Robeson, Mrs. T. M. Rotch, Mrs. Charles S. Sargent, Mrs. F. R. Sears, Jr., Mrs. J. M. Sears, Mrs. George R. Shaw, Mrs. Henry Stackpole, Mrs. Moorfield Storey, Mrs. Richard Stone, Mrs. Nathaniel Thayer, Mrs. Paul Thorndike, Mrs. Alexander Whiteside, Mrs. Henry Whitman, Mrs. Henry M. MIDWINTER FURS.

Women Revel in Them This Season—Some of Those Worn at Recent Social Functions.

It is a season of furs. Not in years have such quantities of beautiful soft sables and feathery chinchilla trimmed so generously hat, gown and coat—to say nothing of the whole frocks lavishly built of baby lamb wool that are regal from a point of expenditure and extremely chic in effect. The many names by which this baby lamb, as we call it, is known, proves rather confusing, and the nationality of your tailor determines under which title you order it. In London it is broad tail; in Paris caracue, and in Berlin breitschwanz. One of the prettiest of these handsome fur gowns was worn at a fashionable tea the other afternoon. The skirt was perfectly plain and exquisitely hung, while the jacket extended below the waist line in one large scallop just in the centre of the back, and then rounded off toward the front, where there was a decidedly pointed dip. Carved ivory buttons that were not very large served as fasteners. Sable revers and Russian cuffs and collar were the final touch of smartness. When the coat opened there was a glimpse of a most beautiful white satin antique shirt waist, appealingly simple. The hat was also of Court sable, fashioned after an English walking hat—may one be bourgeoise and whisper that the hat alone cost $450? With such hats in their trousseau, women are not likely to discard them, as has been predicted, because cheap imitations are bountiful. If anything, the vulgarity of the imitations rather enhances the value of the real. Besides fur hats are far too becoming, and when ordered from clever milliners prove the grand chic of almost any costume.

Up to the present time there has been but little need of fur jackets. However, the last few days have determined that the woman of fashion has shown rather a preference for seal, and in the jaunty short coats there is nothing richer or prettier. Of course the baby lamb jackets hold their own in popularity.

Mrs. "Jack" Astor's street baby lamb coat is a very pretty model, with its inlet girdle of velvet overlaid with braid. Tiny cut steel round buttons are seen in the front. With this she wore a simple black cloth skirt, and the daintiest of pale blue tucked velvet hats, trimmed with a black choux at one side. Earrings of turquois surrounded with brilliants gave an extra touch of color that was most becoming.

At Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes's reception last week one of the prettiest and most distinguished costumes was a sable-tail short jacket fastened with blue cameo buttons, surrounded with cut steel, and worn with a gray cloth skirt, and a very flat velvet toque, also of gray.

In fancy inexpensive furs there is a large collection to choose from. The grays, though pretty, are rather passé. Cinnamon bear is smart, and makes a good boa and muff. White long-hair boas and muffs are quite the smart touch at the moment. At a recent luncheon just such a set was worn with a pastel-blue costume, and the tout ensemble was good and unusual.

If one is going to order a muff, it is best to stick to the round conventional shape, as it will be found to be more satisfactory in the long run. Some of the fancy fur and velvet muffs are smart, but unless a woman has many such things she will find them tiresome. There has never been a time when cloths were so pretty, if well chosen, but the selection cannot be made too carefully, and in this day of lavish display the woman who knows adheres to simplicity.

Relief of the Puerto Ricans.

From Bishop Benk, of Puerto Rico, the Central Relief Association of New York, of which Cornelius N. Bliss is Chairman, and Warner Van Norden, of the Bank of North America, Treasurer, has just received word that while the work of supplying the immediate needs of the islanders who suffered by the great flood of last Summer is over, funds are still needed for those who are left entirely homeless and helpless. The relief fund raised by the committee amounted to more than $90,000.

NATIONAL CAPITAL GOSSIP

Opening of the New Congress and Measures to be Considered.

CASE OF ROBERTS HOPELESS

Sentiment Rather Than Law Certain to Exclude Him—Report on the Cape Nome Gold Field.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The Fifty-sixth Congress is in motion at the usual opening pace, with interest manifested principally in two questions, and with a prodigious rush of old and new bills. Speaker Henderson will soon complete the organization of the House by the appointment of committees to work under the Reed rules as adopted promptly on the opening day. Thus was one matter disposed of very summarily. Representative Hepburn, who has maintained on several occasions with some heat and his customary cynical and entertaining eloquence, the importance of giving to Representatives a larger measure of recognition, yielded very loyally to the rule of the caucus what is derisively styled his "town-meeting" theory for Congress. He suffered some annoyance when he was tempted by Mr. Richardson, the new Democratic leader, with an invitation to desert and obtain the support of the minority in any effort he might make to reject the Reed rules, which the Democrats themselves have discovered to be better in most respects than the ancient rules under which Carlisle and Randall admitted it to be almost impossible to transact business.

Speaker Henderson has begun in a way to inspire confidence. A good idea of his ability to assign men to work, without exciting suspicion, will be obtained from an inspection of his committee appointments, but it is safe in advance to say that there is not likely to be found any indication of an intention to promote jobbery or reckless extravagance. Mr. Henderson possesses the confidence of men who respect only the most honorable purposes, and while he may lose the reputation among former fellow-members for being ready always to oblige in a jovial spirit of companionship, he will gain added praise for following a course dictated by his great responsibility and a strict regard for sound and honest dealing. Sturdy and zealous soldier that he is, the so-called friends of the soldiers of the Union who expected to make a cat's-paw of him to rake vast sums from the Treasury in the name of patriotism, but chiefly to fatten the fees of pension agents, will inevitably be disappointed, and will presently be ready to denounce him if he locks up the Treasury when it was expected that he would help to have the doors carried away and the treasure left in charge of a lot of land pirates.

One of the two questions most prominently before the House is that of Roberts of Utah. There was little surprise at the vote to adopt the resolution to keep him out of his seat pending an investigation to ascertain whether he is duly qualified to be sworn in or shall be permanently kept out. Singularly enough, there is almost unanimous opinion that the opposition to him has not a legal leg to stand on.

When he appeared before the House to be sworn in, after he had answered to his name on the roll call and voted for the Democratic candidate for Speaker, his appearance seemed to favor him. His manly bearing unquestionably evoked friendly comment. His speech was an arrangement of points with reference to getting everything important before his judges in half an hour. For most of the time he spoke calmly and deliberately, carefully shaping his phrases so as to avoid accusing himself, but not altogether avoiding the rule that prohibits disrespectful allusion to the Senate, although his pointed speech conceded that offense. Two or three times, however, he broke forth into impassioned eloquence. The lift of his voice was tremendous, with a quality that thrilled even those who could not afford to let their admiration be expressed in a vote.

He is a strong-wristed man. Impatient of frequent contact with a chair that stood at his side, close to the central aisle of the House, while he was earnestly presenting one phase of his argument, he lifted the obstructing piece of furniture easily with his right hand while he was talking and set it down in the middle aisle out of his way. When he demanded not privilege, but his right to sit as the Representative of Utah, he was for a moment possibly the most impressive orator that has been in Congress since Col. Bryan lost his Nebraska district.

There is a disposition to criticise Mr. Roberts for the blunders he has made, and to intimate that he might have been in better case if he had refrained from accusing the President and the Senate of appointing Mormons to Federal office, and thus intimating that what was an offense in a Democrat is not an offense when committed by a Republican. Roberts's case could not be hopeful under any circumstances. Were he to denounce and formally abandon his wives and children and declare for the Republican Party, that would not now win him a seat. Many Republicans applauded his speech before the House. Only one voted against the resolution of inquiry. Democrats who consider the course of the House a very unjust prosecution and a persecution at the same time will vote to expel him, if it comes to that. The people of Utah will surely learn, from the course of this Congress, that it will not be worth while to offer again as a representative a man known to be a polygamist.

It is not difficult to ascertain that the offense is not alone by Roberts in person, but by the State that voted him here. He might believe in polygamy as much as he liked. He might have a reputation for living in Utah, as it is intimated that one of his prominent opponents, a leader and promoter of "social purity," has lived in a large Eastern city, a notoriously immoral life, but if he did not have three admitted wives he might have been sworn in. Utah will learn that while it intentionally or inadvertently nominates and elects polygamists to Congress just so long it will lack representation. So when Roberts goes home, search will be made, if the Mormons are wise, for a man who is without plural wives. Roberts has run up against sentiment, and he will find it as difficult to overcome as law.

Klondike is apt to become a disused and forgotten name if the promise of the new Alaska gold field shall be maintained. The Cape Nome grounds, as Capt. C. F. Shoemaker of the Revenue Marine Service learns from Lieut. Jarvis, a very cool-headed man not at all likely to be indulging in stories of the dazzling, Aladdin sort, are rich beyond description. Jarvis led the overland expedition for the relief of the wrecked whalers, a journey calling for the greatest resolution and demanding as its leader the most level-headed man to be found. Yet this unimaginative man, who has been along shore at Cape Nome, and knows something about what he has seen, says there is no mistake about describing the beach from Cape Nome to Cape Rodney as "a beach of gold." The scales of the precious metal have been accumulating there for ages, until a miner with the simplest implements can wash out from $150 to $300 a day. It is difficult for men in the service in Alaska to avoid the temptation to abandon another employment and to take up claims they have staked out.

The effect of the discovery of gold on the beach has been to draw 5,000 people to Cape Nome, with the prospect that the number will be swelled to 25,000 or more in the Spring. It is assumed by those who are familiar with the country that if so much free gold is found on the beach there must be more of it in the hills from which it came. If the beach is all staked off by the early comers of next Spring, the mountains remain to be explored and worked. Every floating thing along shore, from San Francisco to Juneau and beyond, has been bought or hired to carry passengers with the gold fever to Cape Nome as soon as the ice will permit. The "craze" promises to belittle the Klondike one, and it may leave to Canadians exclusively the task of developing the more difficult interior field.

If industry can be denoted by figures, the House has displayed uncommon activity in the first week of its sitting. Already it has put about 3,000 bills on the files, to say nothing of some seventy resolutions and a mass of petitions and protests without number. Many of the bills are "old soldiers," who wear the scars obtained in repeated charges upon the Congress. Regulse does not dismay the promoters of these bills, mostly presented to establish the right to draw money from the Treasury for alleged service in the army or out of it that has not yet been requited, and of the value of which doubt has existed in the minds of men long dead and gone.

Mr. Gibson of Tennessee is spoken of as the leader in the number of bills introduced by any member. The South usually brings in a large number of private claims bills, most of them coming from alleged loyal persons or their legal representatives, for supplies furnished or taken without pay during the rebellion. One large measure that is favored by the South is a bill to repay to owners about $2,000,000 remaining of the cotton tax, unexpended or unappropriated on the books of the Treasury. About as much was refunded, and now the South asks for the rest. Mr. Reed was very successful in restraining Congress from recklessly passing such measures, and Mr. Henderson will undoubtedly not permit them to go through without due consideration. But this Congress will be a liberal one. The intimation from Assistant Secretary Vanderlip some time ago that the excessive balance in the Treasury might be reduced by public expenditure, thus freeing money for circulation, will not be lost upon a Congress preceding a Presidential campaign.

A writer to The Washington Star has offered a suggestion to the Post Office Department regarding the proposed issue of a special line of stamps for the Buffalo Exposition of 1901. That proposition is for a set of nine stamps, including those of high value, up to $2. Although the smaller denominations in large size soon come to be regarded as a nuisance, and are avoided by everybody who can get the small stamps by asking for them, it is recommended that if the special set be issued it be confined to stamps of 1 and 2 cents, which, having the commonest use, would go everywhere that the exposition could be advantageously advertised. If desirable to advertise the enterprise abroad, the five-cent denomination might be added. Attention is directed to the fact that impoverished nations in Europe and South America issue stamps of high denominations, not for consumption in the postal service, but simply to supply philatelists, the issues being a source of revenue. It is not considered necessary for the United States to resort to such means to increase its revenue.

A while ago some notice was made of a report issued by the Bureau of Revenue Marine of the Treasury Department on the "Cruise of the Bear" in search of some lost and disabled whalers north of Bering Straits. This beautiful book had a conspicious blemish. It lacked an index and a list of illustrations, and was therefore a puzzle to everybody except the editor. Capt. Shoemaker has corrected the book in a new edition, which comes along with a brief table of contents and a list of illustrations that will enable the reader speedily to find something he has seen and wishes to find again. For a time the Chief of the Revenue Marine Service was deluged with letters asking for copies of the report. A new edition having been procured, the demand for it may in a measure be met, but it is probable that a resolution will have to be procured from Congress to furnish an adequate supply for all who desire to have it.

That there is still some doubt about the Presidential succession is shown in a little paragraph in the last number of Harper's Weekly, in which an enumeration is given of the persons who may become President in case of an epidemic among successive occupants of the highest office in the land. This list puts down the Secretary of Agriculture as eighth in the line of possible successors. The law, passed in January, 1886, provided seven successors to the President, the last being the Secretary of the Interior. The succession was not placed in the Cabinet, but in the officers constituting the Cabinet, and then only by specifically naming them. The Secretary of Agriculture was not named because the Cabinet did not contain a Secretary of Agriculture until after 1889.

A CONGRESSMAN'S SON KILLED.

Albert Gardner Hurled to Death by a Train at Egg Harbor City.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 9.—Albert Gardner, seventeen years old, son of Congressman John J. Gardner of this district, met a tragic death to-day in Egg Harbor City.

He was out bicycle riding, and attempted to cross the railroad tracks. A fast express train, known as the "Nellie Bly," hit him and hurled his body aside. The victim was instantly killed.

MANAGER MALONE RESIGNS.

Nephew of the Priest Leaves the McCaddin Institute.

Sylvester L. Malone, a nephew of Father Malone, has tendered his resignation as manager of the Henry McCaddin Memorial Institute, on Berry Street, Brooklyn. No cause is assigned for the action, and Mr. Malone, when questioned concerning the matter, declined to be interviewed, saying that he resigned for personal reasons. The institute, which is the new $250,000 parish house connected with the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul, will hereafter be under the management of the Rev. Joseph O'Brien, acting rector of the parish.

Although Mr. Malone's resignation was unexpected, it did not cause much surprise, as it had been reported that when the venerable Father Malone would pass away his nephew's services as manager of the institute would be immediately dispensed with. Mr. Malone has never been popular with the parishioners. Several lectures and concerts have been held during the past year in the institute under the auspices of the management, and very few were well attended. The audience would be comprised chiefly of those outside of the parish, and, as a consequence, they were financial losses. Other entertainments given by church societies filled the auditorium, and in many instances standing room was at a premium.

When Mr. Malone's resignation was announced at the institute the young men around the place were in high glee. A number of them held a conference and decided to reorganize the society of Father Malone's Young Men which disbanded several months ago, after an existence of thirty-two years. The principal cause of the disbandment was the inability to get along with the management.

Mineral Exhibit at Paris.

The mineral exhibit from the United States at Paris next year will be of unusual merit, especially the gold exhibit from California. The gold specimens from that State will represent a value of over $1,000,000. Every branch of mining in California is represented. Two of the principal features will be a model quartz mill and a model of quartz mining underground. There is also to be a model of gravel mining, which will be perfect in every detail. The Almaden quicksilver mine, in Santa Clara County, has been selected as a model for a miniature of that variety of mine. A novel part of the exhibit will be a huge bowl three feet in diameter, which will be filled with quicksilver. In this liquid will be floated a sledge-hammer.

Fair in Aid of a Sisterhood.

A fair in aid of the sisterhood connected with the Congregation Ahawath Chesed Shaar Hashomayim, Lexington Avenue and Fifty-fifth Street, will be opened on Thursday evening. John W. Keller, Commissioner of Charities, will deliver the opening address. On Saturday evening Charles J. Richman and Edward J. Morgan, the actors, will act as auctioneers.

WRETCHED SCHOOL FACILITIES

Large Percentage of Illiterates and Small Expenditures for Education a Blot on the State.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MIDDLESBOROUGH, Ky., Nov. 21.—Middlesborough, a "city" in style of designation and in architectural and street and other municipal improvements, is but the husk of a vast, expensive, and collapsed boom, a city of magnificent pretentions, in which 3,000 or 4,000 people live in the expectation that the "boom" may be patched up and started anew where it went to pieces several years ago. Approaching it at night, its electric lights suggest modern comforts after the plain life of the country. The glare of a furnace, lighting up the very pinnacle of the Cumberland Mountains, where it overlooks three States, seems to indicate a source of support for a bustling town. It is a bit disappointing to be dropped at a dark station, and to see by the dim light of a lantern that it is sadly out of repair, its once stylish features merely so much dingy shingles, broken sashes devoid of glass, its waiting room—there is only one left—dilapidated as well as dingy. An unlighted bus barrics over a good, up-hill road and drops its passengers under a porte-cochère of rough-dressed stone. They pass into a hall of good proportions, provided with cold radiators, and in the centre of the office find a great stove full of blazing coal.

Things seem to be incongruous at once. A clumsy field hand takes you to a room far away along a hall once bright and attractive and puts you in a room destitute of washbowl and pitcher, but provided with a grate. He changes you to a room without a grate, but with toilet facilities. In a small dining room that was built to shelter those who like to feed daintily a supper is provided like that encountered anywhere along the road. When the guest awakens in the morning, it is to look out over a superb mountain view. He finds that he is in a graceful building, of the modified Queen Anne sort, with many gables, many spaces shingled and stained a dull red, broad piazzas, a fine parlor, a commodious dining room in disuse, rooms for perhaps 300, and accommodations for a third of that number, an elaborate steam-heating plant deranged and abandoned. Down below in the valley, at the edge of which this beautiful hotel building is perched, appears to be a sparsely built city.

WHAT THE CITY LOOKS LIKE.

Descend the hill. At the right, as you approach an avenue fully sixty feet in width in the roadway, and with sidewalks twenty feet wide and paved the entire width with concrete, is a fine, large brick building, fit for a place on Riverside Drive. Go along Cumberland Avenue to the left and you pass elaborate and expensive structures of stone and brick, two of which were once occupied by as many banks. One of the banks is displaced by a grocer, the other by a town officer. At the doorways of several fine buildings the directory panels are all vacant. Amid so many deserted fine shops the Post Office is found in a sort of open vault, and in the corner of a shop with a great glass front a cobbler patches shoes. Here is a really impressive eight-story stone building, with a panel inscribed "Public Library and Exhibition Hall." It is now a school. A endlessly pretty little church building, and a shingled house of large size on the side other above the hotel, intended for a clubhouse, but never opened, are other objects that attract attention, and compel wonder when it is found to what insignificant uses some of them are put.

This is the remnant of the investment of the Arthur Syndicate, a British company that intended to make money. It started broadly, spent lavishly, fell with a crash, burying everything that had been spent. At a cost of nearly $1,000,000 a creek that meandered through the old town was converted by Col. Waring into the outlet of a sewer system. At prodigious cost a water supply was provided, a mountain valley being dammed for the purpose. A street railroad was built and put in operation, with seven miles of track. Property bought at $10 to $30 an acre rose until it could not be bought at $410 per foot front. Crowds of business men were constantly on the go, and slept in cots in all the available lodging houses. The town covered, on the map and partly improved, six miles square. Other capitalists, attracted by the Arthur investment and the beauty and healthfulness of the region, put up the great Four Seasons Hotel, a magnificent thing, that cost a million. It looked down on Cumberland Gap and the State Road, over which Burnside and his army marched from Lexington to Knoxville.

The Baring failure withered everything. The banks broke and the bankers fled. Street railroad, fine shops, fine offices, fine speculators, fine men and women with lots to sell at $410 per foot front, gay equipages, blooded horses, vanished like the mists before the sun. The hotel swiftly degenerated, the big dining room was closed. The swell servants went beyond the mountains. The building now rents for $600 a year to a keeper who formerly ran a plain little unpretentious house below the hill on the same scale that he maintains the great tomb on the hillside. The Four Seasons also suffered a stroke of ill-fortune. Its end was melancholy. The whole establishment—building, furniture, appliances—was sold to a Chicago wrecking company for about $30,000, torn down, and moved away, leaving no indication of its existence except the foundations. The town is such a sham that to stay in it and bear its past discussed distresses one. It is a lovely. There is a ray of hope that the place may regain a share of the enterprise that made it what it was. The iron and coal mines of the Virginia Coal and Steel Company are near at hand. They are inexhaustible, according to an engineer familiar with the country. The demand for pig iron has kept the furnace with a capacity of 300 tons a day, going full blast, night and day. The stock of iron is low, and ore is scoured out of the hills as soon as it is dumped. Four hundred men are on the pay roll, under charge of a master from the Lehigh Valley. It is his opinion that he gets about one-third as much work out of his force, principally negroes, as he would out of the same number of men in the Lehigh Valley.

ILLITERACY IN THE STATE.

Middlesborough is the last town on the way out of Kentucky. A place with so magnificent a past and so phantasmal a present is not hard to leave, and its oppressiveness makes it easier to leave a State attractive in many respects, yet exasperating in others. No man can guess the possible future wealth of the State. Its present wealth is not inconsiderable. It may not lack public spirit. But if it were more sensitive and self-critical it would find itself blamable for an indifference to the education of its people more ghastly, oppressive, and menacing than this sham City of Middlesborough that is only a bad case of arrested overdevelopment. The State was carrying a fearful burden of illiteracy at the period of the last census. The census of 1900 should show some improvement, but, judging from the testimony of those who live in the mountain districts, the improvement there will be inconsiderable. In 1890 Kentucky, out of a population of nearly 1,900,000, showed 183,351 illiterate whites and 110,000 illiterate negroes. This block of whites who could not read or write is the greatest found in any one State. Tennessee had more illiterates, but not so many ignorant whites. I am informed, live in the mountain country. That is found to be a general belief, however. It is admitted to be true that generations of mountain people have lived in Kentucky, and that some of them have become comparatively rich, without knowing so much as the alphabet. But along the rivers it is asserted that there is a population quite as ignorant and more brutal and destitute of ambition to know books than are the more spirited mountain folk. The river people are so much on the move as to be harder to subject to rules for compulsory education. They do not long dwell in one school district. The mountain people grow where their ancestors took root a century or more ago. Physically, the mountaineers are rugged, manly and vigorous. Morally, they are not desperately degraded. Their notions may not be city notions, but they are not insensible to moral restraints. That they may be approached by argument is proved by the fact that the Mormons claim 200 members of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints in the mountain counties, seized on ground considered very unproductive by other teachers of religion.

Rich Kentucky has dealt very poorly with her illiterates. The record of her support of schools is discreditable. Let them testify the opinion. In 1890 Kentucky had 550,000 children of school age. She stood No. 9 in the list of States in that respect. When it came to expenditures, Kentucky stood No. 42, with an outlay of $333,290 to teach more than half a million children. It is true that she had 1,000 private schools, and 10,000 teachers, but it is also true that Idaho, with about 17,000 school children, spent $306,000; Florida, with 108,435, spent $132,000; Georgia, with 398,823 children of school age, gave to public schools $1,737,806; Louisiana, with 181,341 children, spent $306,000; Montana, having 28,765 school children, expended $344,581 upon them; North Carolina, with 573,626 school children, spent $331,200 for them; South Carolina spent $337,000 on her 324,191 school children, and Virginia gave $1,453,530 to maintain schools for 367,817 children of school age.

Gov. Bradley assured the writer that things are better now. The census must be awaited to give information of the actual gain in the number and quality of the schools. My observation has been that generally they are inferior. A very eloquent advocate of education in Clay County admitted that the rural teachers are not good, that most of them have had no training beyond that of the meagre district schools. The per capita allowance of the State tax is too small to support even the very poor schools in some districts longer than five months in each year. Local school taxes in richer communities supplement the State allowance. That produces schools of vastly different degrees of adequacy. The schools of Louisville are many and admirable. So are those of Lexington, Frankfort, Winchester, and other large and thriving towns.

While the white people of the back counties are steeped in black ignorance, groping for light with a mere pittance to help them, at Lexington I stopped there long enough to make the acquaintance of Major Duncan, a gentleman who has just been elected Mayor. He is an alert friend of public education, proud of the fact that Lexington has twelve white schools and six schools for negroes. At the invitation I visited the Russell School, in which 600 colored pupils are taught under the direction of Prof. Russell, a negro of great intelligence, carefully trained for his work. They boys and girls in the senior class read and translated several passages in the first four books of Caesar's Gallic Wars, analyzing readily and creditably. The class in history gave colloquially their ideas about the vicissitudes of Thomas a Becket, the exploits and influence of William the Conqueror, and how clearly and appreciatively the significance of Magna Charta. A reading class, trained in a very progressive way, acquitted itself of any suspicion of merely perfunctory work. Other illustrations of training and discipline showed decided capability for absorbing book knowledge and confidence by the race. To keep up this broad scheme of education, Lexington adds $75,000 yearly to her allowance of State taxes, and contemplates doing better. "Patriotically speaking, we have 30,000 population," said Major Duncan, "but I know we have 35,000, and we propose to provide our children with enough education to enable them to keep up with the procession."

Lexington rich, and prominently to be richer; proud and liberal, afflicted in its neighborhood with a new rural population of tobacco growers so ignorant, indifferent, and impossible of assimilation by the former educated rural classes as to drive the latter into the city, is not a subject for sympathy if the hopeless condition of the mountaineers is borne in mind. If the millions sunk in extravagant overdevelopment at Middlesborough could have been expended upon the schools of the mountain counties, the investment would have been more certain of success and of more lasting benefit to the State and country. Kentucky has no business to talk about monuments and a new Capitol, to cost $2,000,000 or $3,000,000, while she is permitting nearly 300,000 of her white citizens to grow up in absolute ignorance so dense that its victims are incompetent to feel the shame of their helplessness. It is with the approval of sober, earnest, patriotic Kentuckians that I venture to write thus, to invite attention to the conspicuous indifference of the State to a most important matter, and to venture to hope that rich Kentucky will not long permit herself to be reported as having a greater school population than thirty-six of the other States, and that she yet permits forty-one other States, including some of the smallest and newest, to surpass her in their generous provision for common school education.

CHAMBERLAIN IN HOT WATER.

British Newspapers Continue to Censure His Leicester Speech—Lord Salisbury Angry at It.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—Mr. Chamberlain shows no signs of repentance or desire to recant his Leicester speech. When questioned in this connection he replied: "I have nothing to add to what I have already said."

In the meanwhile Lord Salisbury has refrained from making any public utterance to offset his Colonial Secretary's remarks. As was said at the time, Mr. Chamberlain spoke without the authorization of his chief and much to the latter's chagrin, yet it would be a gross breach of etiquette for the Foreign Office to issue a formal denial of Mr. Chamberlain's statements. However, frequent articles appear, apparently inspired, in papers which warmly supported Mr. Chamberlain's war policy, denouncing his Leicester speech, both for its alliance and anti-French sentiments. The Saturday Review, speaking on evident authority, says:

"It is possible that a certain situation might arise in regard to China when England, Germany and America, having a common, well-defined object in view, might conclude a written treaty of combination, but such an event, in our opinion, is still far off."

The storm raised by Mr. Chamberlain's premature announcement appears to have made a hitch in the negotiations between the powers regarding the "open door." Whether they are definitely shelved, or merely temporarily held in abeyance, is at present unascertainable. All the English authorities agree in surmising that President McKinley's reference to no entangling alliances was slipped in as a result of Mr. Chamberlain's remarks. The message itself is regarded by the weeklies as non-committal. The Speaker describes it as "an admirable instance of the art of saying nothing by allocuting a great deal." The Saturday Review echoes this, drawing attention to the supineness of British traders in allowing American friendship for Russia to secure for Americans contracts on the Siberian Railroad.

Premier Waldeck-Rousseau's action in instructing the Paris newsvendors that the sale of German as well as French caricatures of the Queen will render them liable to prosecution, is a finely ironical reply to British criticism of the French press. While Mr. Chamberlain was denouncing France for villifying the Queen, and protesting friendship for Germany, he overlooked the fact that caricatures almost equally offensive to the British are appearing in Germany, especially in the Kladderadatsch. As a correspondent of The Times points out, this sheet is of far higher standing than the offending French journals, and it perpetrated at the moment Emperor William was visiting his grandmother an obnoxious caricature, yet no steps were taken to suppress it, though German control of the press is much firmer than French. The same correspondent adds that illustrated post-cards bearing insulting pictures of the Queen are in frequent use in Germany, passing through the mails untouched.

Sampson Again Remanded in London.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—Michael J. Sampson, the alleged forger who was arrested Nov. 28 near Limerick at the request of the Chief of Detectives of Chicago, Ill., was again remanded to-day in the Bow Street Police Court until Dec. 16.

Sampson was arraigned in the Bow Street Police Court Dec. 2, when a representative of the United States Embassy gave to the Magistrate a cable dispatch from the Secretary of State at Washington asking him to hold Sampson on the charge of forgery pending the arrival of a Chicago detective.

Canadian Judgment Upset in London.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The Privy Council has allowed the appeal in the case of the Queen vs. Bemers, from the judgment of the Queen's Bench of Lower Canada. The Privy Council held that while under the contract sought to be upheld the respondent undertook to print and bind public documents at certain rates, the contract imposed no obligation on the Government to give the respondent all or any of said work, and therefore reversed the Canadian Court's decision, and taxed all the costs on the respondent.

Englishman Leases Mexican Railroad.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The Westminster Gazette says Sir Weetman Dickinson Pearson, (Member of Parliament for Colchester and head of the firm of Pearson & Son, limited, contractors for public works,) has completed negotiations with the Mexican Government to take over the Isthmus of Tehuantepec Railroad on a fifty years' lease. It is added that he will reconstruct the railroad and construct a harbor at either end. The harbors are to cost £2,000,000.

Lady Warwick's Agricultural Station.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The first anniversary of Lady Warwick's Women's Agricultural Experiment Station, at Reading, was celebrated to-day. H. H. Asquith, the former Home Secretary, and other members of Parliament were present. Mr. Asquith, in complimenting the founder, acknowledged the success of Lady Warwick's attempt to instruct women of culture and education to earn a livelihood by means of the lighter branches of agriculture.

Finnish Newspaper Insurance.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The newspapers of Finland have suffered so heavily financially owing to the censorship and suppression that a concern has been formed entitled the Finland Newspapers' Press Censure Insurance Company. It guarantees an indemnity not exceeding 60 per cent. of the loss of gross income incurred by suspension. The fee charged by this novel concern is 5 per cent. of the gross income.

The Garter for German Crown Prince.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—As a sequel to Emperor William's recent visit to England, Queen Victoria has intimated her intention of conferring the Order of the Garter on the German Crown Prince. The ceremony will probably occur during the Queen's visit to Potsdam in 1900, when the recipient will be eighteen years old, the same age at which the Emperor received a similar decoration.

Archibald Forbes's Condition.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—Reports have been current that Archibald Forbes is dying, but they are unfounded. The celebrated war correspondent has been in poor health during the last few years, but he is no worse. He is now living quietly in London with his American wife.

A Dickens Hostelry to be Sold.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—It is announced that the Bull Hotel, at Rochester, so much associated with the late Charles Dickens, is to be sold at auction this month. It contains a quantity of Dickens's furniture. One little sitting room is entirely furnished with things formerly used by the novelist.

Low French Birth Rate.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—French statistics of the past year show that the number of deaths has increased by 59,054, while the number of births has decreased by 15,174, a striking confirmation, it is pointed out, of the strictures made on the French Nation in Zola's latest book.

Great Battle Expected in Venezuela.

CARACAS, Venezuela, Dec. 9.—A great battle is expected to take place to-day at Maracaibo. The Government has stopped private messages. An American steamer was not permitted to enter Maracaibo. The report that the Colombian Army will invade Venezuela is untrue.

Russia and the Vatican.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—It is announced that Russia will resume this month diplomatic negotiations with the Vatican. Mgr. Tarnassi is going to St. Petersburg as Nuncio, which creates delight among the Roman Catholics of Poland.

The Pope Restored to Health.

ROME, Dec. 9.—The Pope, who, it was announced a few days ago, was suffering from a heavy cold and experienced some difficulty in breathing, has completely recovered his usual health.

WAR FEVER IN AUSTRALIA

Thousands Would Enlist, but Services Are Rejected.

AMERICANS CLAIM AN ESTATE

Trouble in South Africa Causes a Warring Interest in the Proposed Colonial Federation Scheme.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

SYDNEY, Nov. 8.—The war spirit in Australia displays no indications of abating; on the contrary, the critical state of affairs in South Africa occasioned a great increase in the number of applicants for military enrolment, followed by a demand for the dispatch of a second contingent, several thousand strong, to the seat of war. It is estimated that the seven Australasian colonies could raise between them a force of from 25,000 to 30,000 men. The contingent which has left Australasian shores, amid great popular demonstrations, represents the flower of colonial manhood, and although comparatively few in number, will give a good account of themselves. The majority are experienced bushmen, and accustomed to mountain riding, which will occasion their services to be in request. Not a man has thrown up the sponge.

At Adelaide a lance corporal, an Irishman named Doherty, was tempted by some of his old companions to break leave the night before embarkation, but presented himself at the vessel's side the next morning. He was refused admission, but was afterward taken on board as a deserter. Subsequently it was determined to punish him by sending him ashore. On hearing this, Doherty became furious, and there was considerable difficulty experienced in getting him into the boat. He begged and prayed to be allowed to accompany his comrades, but in vain. On landing he appeared completely unmanned, but in a few hours sufficient money was raised to defray his passage by another vessel leaving for the Cape. He will not be allowed to rejoin the South Australian force, but he has determined to offer his services to the British, and do his best to redeem his honors and win back a place among his comrades.

It is impossible to describe the enthusiasm which everywhere prevails. Red, white, and blue have become the popular colors, and everywhere may be seen the three flags—British, American, and Australian—floating side by side. At Albany, Western Australia, the last port of call for the ships conveying the troops to the Cape, a sensation was created by a young lady, the daughter of a soldier, engaged at the leading hotel, wearing a red, white, and blue blouse, in honor of the West Australian detachment taking its departure. Her employer, disapproving of the dress, ordered her to discard it or leave the place. She chose the latter alternative, and, when the story became known, she was besieged with applications for pieces of the blouse, and refused an offer of $150 for it. The patriotic barmaid was formerly on the stage in the leading Melbourne Theatre, and is a daughter of an old soldier, Corp. Rubery, who served in the Ninety-first Highlanders, Cape Mounted Riflers and Seventeenth Hussars, spending thirty-eight years in South Africa, through the Boer and Kaffir wars, and now an inmate of the Pensioners' Barracks, Fremantle, Western Australia. She has since offered her services as nurse with the troops, but they could not be accepted in consequence of the large number already sent out.

STRENGTH OF THE CONTINGENT.

The total strength of the Australasian contingent in South Africa will be 74 officers, 1,458 men, and 1,115 horses, and these figures are to be maintained to the end of the war, which it is trusted will result in placing the whole of South Africa under a régime similar to that which forms the basis of Australasian progress and prosperity. The largest contingent is that furnished by New South Wales, which includes the greater portion of the squadron of Lancers which recently left England, a detachment having been sent from Sydney to bring this section of the contingent up to the required strength of 125.

The detachment is in charge of Capt. C. L. Lee, an Australian born, and an ideal cavalry officer.

THE TYSON MILLIONS.

Numerous applications from persons residing in the United States and claiming to be next of kin to the late James Tyson, the Australian millionaire, who died intestate, have been received by the colonial legal authorities, but, so far, none have been successful. The Master in Equity of the New South Wales Supreme Court, to whom, by consent, the whole matter had been referred, has just decided that the following persons are next of kin and are entitled to share in the estate: Frances Shiel of Haldon, near Picton, only surviving sister of the deceased; James Tyson, Jr., of Riverton, near Hay; Mary Ellen Scanlon of Bendigo, Victoria, widow, and Peter Tyson of Coorong, near Hay, the only surviving children of William Tyson, deceased, one of the brothers of the deceased; Ann Sheil of Round Hill, Haldon, near Picton, and John Tyson Doneley of Camden Park, Toowoomba, Queensland, the only surviving children of Isabella Doneley, sister of the deceased; Isabella Dwyer of Paddington, William Moore of Bulli, Fanny Eagles, wife of Archibald Eagles of Bulli, and Alice Fahey, wife of Timothy Fahey, of Appin, the only surviving children of Mary Moore, a sister of the deceased; Elizabeth McDonald, wife of John McDonald, of Tinenbarra Station, Cunnamulla; Stephen Hewett of Appin, Edward Hewett of Meteor Downs Station, Springsure, Queensland; Isabella Lewis of Wilton, Peter Charles Hewett of Cordeaux, near Picton; William Hewett of Wilton, Caroline Ann Wonson, wife of Charles Wonson, of Wilton, and Emily Mulholland, wife of David Mulholland, of Dalby, Queensland, the only surviving children of Elizabeth Hewett, deceased sister; Susan Tyson of Hay, widow; Eliza Hill, wife of James Hill, and Barbara Ziymack, wife of John Ziymack, of Tupera, near Oxley, the only surviving children of Barbara Herring, deceased's sister; Emily Isabella Woods, wife of John Woods, Jr., of Fitzroy, Victoria; Alice Maria Tyson of Coorong, died at Petty's Hotel on the 4th of July last; Susan Alouis Matthews, wife of George Matthews, of Yea, Victoria; Walton Seal Tyson of Pevensey Station, near Hay; Albert Prince Edward Tyson of Coorong, near Hay, and Arthur Charles Denis Tyson of Yea, Victoria, the only surviving children of Peter Tyson, brother of deceased; Mary Isabella Ross Soden of St. Kilda, near Melbourne, Victoria, widow, the only surviving child of Maria Horton, one of the deceased's sisters by her marriage with George Horton, and Emma Matilda Forbes, wife of Alexander Forbes, of Perth, Western Australia, the only surviving child of Maria Horton by her second marriage to John Sturdey Jones.

The American claims have not been finally dealt with, and further attempts are to be made to discover the children of Margaret Tyson, eldest sister of the deceased millionaire, and who are supposed to be in America. The total number of claimants to date is 270, and others are still coming in. But everything must have an end, and it has been decided that the final adjudication shall be made on Feb. 23, 1900.

AUSTRALIAN FEDERAL PROSPECTS.

The South African trouble has somewhat diminished the interest evinced by the colonists in the work of Australian federation, which is being delayed by the dilatory action of the West Australian Government, the Colonial Premier fearing that his colony will suffer a considerable loss of revenue, unless a special arrangement can be effected. However, nothing can be done until the Australian Commonwealth bill has received the sanction of the Imperial Parliament. When this has been done, provision will be made for establishing a temporary Federal Government, headed, probably, by Earl Beauchamp, Governor of New South Wales, and a Ministry consisting of the Premiers of the federating colonies. The next step will be to prepare the way for the Federal elections, each colony having to decide whether it will act as a single constituency or become divided into the requisite number of electoral districts. The Federal Parliament elected, the choice of a Ministry will have to be made, followed by the creation of departments and the appointment of departmental officers. All this will take time; meanwhile the New South Wales Government is instituting inquiries respecting the most suitable sites for a Federal capital. A large number of places have been mentioned, but the final selection will be made from less than half a dozen.

It is probable that a locality equi-distant from Sydney and Melbourne will be most favored by the Federal Parliament, which, it is arranged, will hold its sittings in Melbourne Parliament House until a building in the Federal capital is provided. This may signify a delay of several years, greatly to the disappointment of the Sydney people, who are extremely jealous of the least advantage secured by the Victorian metropolis. In the commercial world much interest is being taken in the probable character of the Federal tariff, which will form the real issue at the Federal elections. It is admitted that a free trade tariff, as now existing in New South Wales, is impossible, and the struggle will be between the advocates of a simple revenue-producing tariff and those who favor one on a protectionist basis, the latter preferring a list of customs duties similar to that of the United States.

A DAY OF DEBUTANTES.

Mrs. Payson Merrill of 41 East Sixty-seventh Street gave at her residence yesterday afternoon a coming-out reception for her daughter, Miss Cornelia Helen Merrill. Those who assisted in receiving were Mrs. George Slade and the Misses Ruth Cox, Louise Aldrich, Edith Clark, Ruth Guernsey, Mollie Bangs, and Alice Smith. After the reception there was a dinner of twenty-four covers, and after that an informal dance. The débutante's costume was white crêpe de chine, exquisitely embroidered in Japan, the designs being Japanese maple leaves, which were copied from the leaves themselves. Mrs. Merrill's gown was a Shanghai brocade, the design being Chinese peach blossoms. Both these gowns were made especially for Mrs. and Miss Merrill, the one in China and the other in Japan.

Mrs. Schuyler Quakenbush gave yesterday afternoon at her residence, 142 West Fifty-seventh Street, a coming-out reception for her daughter, Miss Marguerite F. Quakenbush. Miss Edith Talcott, Miss Isabel Fowler, Miss Effie Strong, and Miss Branch of Richmond assisted in receiving. Miss Marguerite Quakenbush wore white point d'esprit over white satin, Miss Ethel Quakenbush white tulle over lavender, and Mrs. Quakenbush was in gray crêpe de chine. The reception was followed by a dinner of sixteen covers.

Mrs. Charles Weekes of 22 West Seventy-fifth Street gave a reception at her residence yesterday afternoon to introduce her daughter, Miss Lucille Weekes. The Misses Harriet McAllister, Isabel Geer, Ruth Robinson, Helen Burgess, and Edith Weekes received with the débutante. Miss Weekes wore white crêpe de chine and lace, and Mrs. Weekes a pale gray cloth gown, with lace.

Miss Mildred Carruth Dix was given a coming-out reception yesterday by her mother, Mrs. Alfred P. Dix, at her residence, 822 Madison Avenue. There received with her Miss Pratt of Boston and the Misses Jenner, Cecil Boardman, Polly Sloane, Violet Stewart, Muriel Gould, Helen Dominick, Ruth Emmons, and Isabella Curtis. Miss Dix wore a gown of white chiffon, and Mrs. Dix was in black lace over white satin.

Mrs. Wager Swayne gave at the Hotel Renaissance yesterday a tea to introduce her daughter, Miss Eleanor Swayne. There assisted Mrs. Swayne and Miss Eleanor Swayne in receiving Miss Swayne and the Misses Emily Trowbridge, Helen Bulkley, Edna Loew, Lena Fanshawen, Julia Edwards, and Pansy Roosevelt. Miss Eleanor Swayne wore a dress of embroidered white silk. Miss Swayne wore yellow silk, and Mrs. Swayne black lace over white.

Mrs. Robert Fulton Weir of 37 West Thirty-fifth Street gave a reception yesterday afternoon to introduce her daughter, Miss Enid Badgley Alden. Miss Alden was assisted in receiving by Mrs. Edward La Montagne, who was Miss Weir, and the Misses Tomlinson, Gertrude Tomlinson, and Esther Kennedy. There was an informal dinner after the reception. Miss Alden's gown was white tulle over white satin. Mrs. Weir wore a black lace costume. The decorations were pink roses, lilies of the valley, and palms.

SOME SOCIAL EVENTS.

The diner de luxe at Sherry's this evening will be largely attended. These dinners began a fortnight ago.

The wedding of Miss Melicent Duryea to Mr. Ellery Anderson, which was to have taken place in February, will now occur a little later, on account of the death of Miss Anna Duryea. As Mr. Anderson is a Roman Catholic and Miss Duryea a Protestant, it will necessarily be a house wedding and very quiet. Both young women were well-known figures at Narragansett Pier last Summer, and it was there that Miss Anna Duryea contracted typhoid fever, from which she died.

Rumor evidently made a mistake in coupling Mr. Joseph Choate, Jr.'s, name with that of a young woman from Albany, who has been an aspirant for golf honors. London gossip has it that he is devoting himself very seriously to Miss Cornwallis West, and that an announcement will soon be forthcoming.

Lady Mary Sackville, who was to have come over to visit Mrs. George Gould at Lakewood this month, has postponed her visit until February. Mr. and Mrs. Gould will visit Lord and Lady Minto at Ottawa next month.

The doctors who sailed for London to join the hospital ship Maine are being royally entertained and made much of in London. The enthusiasm over our generosity has astonished Americans in London, it being so unlike the British. The doctors have been put up at the Carlton Hotel, where they are to be until Dec. 16, when they sail with Lady Randolph Churchill for South Africa.

Miss Joanna Davidge has begun her classes which were so much in vogue last Winter, and has over sixty young women hard at work on Greek ethics, history, &c. The lunch club in connection with this class met last Tuesday at the house of the originator, Miss Barger. Among the members present were Miss Edna Barger, Miss Constance Schieffelin, Miss Robinson, Miss Barnes, Miss Constance Parsons, Miss Randolph, Miss Beatrix Jones, Miss Helen Armstrong, Miss Ethel Phelps, Miss Phelps Stokes, Miss Mamie Field, Miss Spofford, and many others.

The engagement is announced of Mr. Robert M. Snyder of Kansas City, Mo., well known in New York and Boston, and Miss Sibyl McKenzie, niece of Mrs. Staples Potter of Boston. The wedding will be celebrated in Boston Jan. 17, 1900.

The first meeting of the season of Mrs. Sands's dancing class took place in the large ballroom at Delmonico's last evening. The patronesses of this class are Mrs. Lewis L. Delafield, Mrs. Sackett M. Barclay, Mrs. John Erving, Mrs. Leopold H. Francke, Mrs. Robert Dun Graham, Mrs. James J. Higginson, Mrs. Charles R. Huntington, Mrs. Walter C. Taylor, Mrs. John Clarkson Jay, Mrs. Edward King, Mrs. Joseph G. King, Mrs. J. P. Lee, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish Morris, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, and Mrs. Philip J. Sands. The class numbers from 200 to 300, and among the members, most of whom were present last evening, are Mr. and Mrs. Leopold H. Francke, Mr. and Mrs. C. Van R. Cogswell, Mr. and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Schroeder, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Parrish, Mr. and Mrs. R. McA. Jones, the Misses Julia Delafield, Mabel I. Jones, Helen and Augusta de Peyster, Augusta Robinson, Lily Whitemore, Marie Hamilton, Caroline Lee, Cornelia Clarkson Biddle, Barclay, Barnes, Belknap, Du Pont, Beaman, Elizabeth Emmett, Fiedler, Margaret Folsom, Hoppin, Marie Mosle, Laura Hard, Higginson, Mary Jay, Ethel Iselin, Kearney, Morgan, Morris, Mary Low, Alice Post, Ethel Post, Ogden Caroline Stokes, Laura Satterlee, Matilda Van Rensselaer, Sarah Thompson, Mary Belknap Schroeder, Neeser, Bertha Munde, Haight, Hitchcock, Howland, and Nicholas, and Messrs. C. A. Wissmann, Davis R. Vail, Ridley Watts, Matthew Wilkes, Joseph F. Talmadge, F. K. Trask, Francis Stevens, Robert M. Parker, Horace Stebbins, Schieffelin Stebbins, Guy R. McLane, Fred W. Douglass, Darrach, Frelinghuysen, Neeser, Mosle, Gilmore, and Munson.

The first De Coverley dance took place in the large ballroom at Sherry's last evening. The patronesses of this class, most of whom were present, are Mrs. H. Benedict, Mrs. William H. Bliss, Mrs. Vernon C. Brown, Mrs. B. H. B. Dominick, Mrs. Charles B. Foote, Mrs Robert Hoe, Mrs. Edward L. Keyes, Mrs. Elihu Root, Mrs. Henry C. Valentine, and Mrs. L. Stewart Wing. Those who received were Mrs. E. L. Keyes and Mrs. James H. Benedict. Mrs. Elihu Root, who was also to receive, was prevented from doing so as the Cabinet and their families are in mourning for the late Vice President Hobart. The Floor Committee were Messrs. F. Raymond Lefferts, C. N. Bliss, Jr., H. M. Brookfield, C. S. Chisholm, Morris Groves, Gardiner Brown, W. H. Macky, and R. P. Goldsborough.

There was a large attendance of members, and among those present were the Misses Mildred Carruth, Marie Vernon Brown, Catherine Clark, Caroline B. Carpenter, Belle Dominick, Mildred Dix, Davis, Carol Biddle, Emmons, Fanny M. Foote, Adeline Fox, Louise Grace, Hartshorne, Marjorie Hurlburt, Clara Harper, Eleanor Keyes, Ludington, Isabella Lockwood, Anna Mead, Antoinette Mackay, Josephine Roe, Rockefeller, Edith Root, Helen Sabler, Anne P. Sampson, Hilda Tiffany, Anne Van Ingen, Van Smith, and the Messrs. H. M. Brookfield, C. N. Bliss, Jr., T. E. Blake, Austin Baldwin, Gardiner Brown, H. D. Cleveland, G. P. Day, C. S. Chisholm, R. P. Goldsborough, Morris Groves, S. C. Herriman, D. Aspinwall Judd, F. T. James, H. D. Longstreet, F. Raymond Lefferts, R. P. Little, J. E. Locke, L. J. Mead, Hugh Miller, J. D. Rockefeller, Jr., C. S. Rodman, Arthur Sullivan, Henry Black, Duncan Sterling, David Taylor, W. De Forest Thomson, Oswald G. Villard, Dr. Van Wagener, A. H. Van Brunt, Prescott Van Smith, Artemas Ward, Jr., Dr. A. Wadsworth, A. Stewart Walker, and O. O. Redington. The next De Coverley dance will take place on Dec. 26, also at Sherry's, and the succeeding dances on Jan. 13 and Feb. 3 and 17, 1900.

MEN'S DRESS.

New Garments for Town Wear, Country Outings, and Ordinary Use —Latest in Waistcoats.

The morning or business suit is by far the most important to the many. Now that the season is advanced the best style and cut are easily selected, and many of the little changes of detail attempted in the early season have been rejected, so that there is a uniformity of design in the garments of the well-dressed man that distinguishes him from the general tide that passes to and fro.

The sack suit for town wear should be of dark material, either blue, dark gray, or a mixture, with perhaps an almost invisible line of red; some of the dull, dark greens are also permissible.

For country or outing there is a broader scope, and some of the big checks of mustard tints lined with deeper brown, or even a queer shade of blue, are smart in their ultra-loudness, as are the Scotch tweeds in faded greens. It is needless to say that the owner of such clothes must of necessity have a large supply and only indulge occasionally in such pronounced taste, even then with the assurance that he has the proper physique. It is well to remember that such clothes are English and an Englishman's size is generous.

The materials for ordinary wear are rough cheviots or Scotch goods. Serge, when used at all, should be rough grained. The sack coat is cut shorter than last year; to be correct it should be the exact length of the sleeve, although there are some well-dressed men to be seen with the line at least two inches shorter. There is a general tendency toward a waist line that is decidedly short in front, such suits are not comfort, and should follow the figure loosely. The coat sacks are square in appearance and single breasted, fastened with four bone buttons and with two or three smaller bone buttons on the sleeve, which, by the way, fits closely over the cuff. The collar of the coat should measure two inches in breadth in the back. An outside pocket without flap is correct.

The smartest waistcoats are cut double-breasted, with notched collar and rather short at the bottom, while the buttons incline as they reach the bottom. Instead of overtopping, the corners are cut in angles. If a single-breasted waistcoat is preferred, it should be cut a little higher than the double, but equally short at the bottom. Fancy waistcoats are passé. Coat, waistcoat, and trousers all of the same material should be adhered to for the lounge suit.

Trousers, if we follow our English cousins, are to be broad through the hips, straight in the leg and on the bottom, pockets of course on the sides, and it is almost unnecessary to add, no braid.

Some men about town are showing a tendency to dress more for business, and are adopting the English morning coat in preference to the sack. This should be worn with gray trousers, such as are appropriate with a frock coat. The material must be unfinished worsted, vicuna, or lambs' wool. The waistcoat is cut double-breasted and the coat to fit the figure. Shoulders should be square, and padded if necessary. The sleeves are cut with a spring that falls of a straight line from shoulder to hand.

Either white or colored shirts are correct with morning dress. If colored, the patterns and colors should be neat, not conspicuous. Cuffs that are cut square are a little smarter than the round. Plain gold links that are flat on top are beyond reproach; these allow for a handsome monogram on top. Studs should also be of plain gold. In fact the general idea of simplicity is carried out in every detail, making it impossible to designate any one thing as accenting the appearance of a well-dressed man.

Fancy hose have become rather ordinary, and in preference the darker shades and blacks are worn. There is a ribbed combination of two shades of contrasting colors that is a pretty novelty, and can be had in either all silk or lisle and silk combined. Handkerchiefs with very tiny hemstitched borders, either marked with three small plain initials diagonally placed in one corner or an inconspicuous monogram, also small, are the best taste for men, and no end of extravagance can be indulged in the selection of the linen. In fact the taste and refinement of a man is easily told by the quality and freshness of his linen. Colored handkerchiefs are a fad and not accepted by the best-dressed men, although one must admit some of the dull blues are rather smart.

Pretty ties are legion, and if a man exercises ordinary taste and discretion, avoiding the violent combinations and vivid colorings, he is not apt to be far amiss. Carry out the general tone of your suit, or else see that the contrast is harmonious. Those basket weaves make handsome ties, and the raw silks are smart. Some of the browns and greens shown now in the shop windows are particularly appealing, while the rich deep Burgundy reds are an invitation to buy that is hard to withstand. Scarf pins should be handsome or have some individuality to recommend them. Odd bits of old-fashioned jewelry can often be utilized to great advantage as such. Antique pins, when good, are always distinguished. Pearl pins, of course, are the acme of good taste and will always look well in any appropriate scarf.

WILL FEED 36,000 ON XMAS.

Salvation Army Appeals for Contributions to Aid the Project.

The Salvation Army has issued an appeal for contributions in aid of its project to give a Christmas dinner to 20,000 of New York's poor in Madison Square Garden. The Garden has been rented for the day, and dinner will be served from 11 A. M. to 10 P. M. There will be also a continuous entertainment by bands and orchestra and stereopticon views. Arrangements have also been made for the moving pictures of the Passion Play.

The list of those who have already contributed includes the names among others, of Collis P. Huntington, Edward Lauterbach, Bernard J. York, Dr. Henry Wilson, and Mrs. A. A. Hearn. The army proposes to give away also 1,300 baskets of food, sufficient to feed 10,000 persons.

Deborah Lodge's Celebration.

The Arrangement Committee of Deborah Lodge, No. 1, of which Mrs. Roberts is President, held a meeting at Sherry's Wednesday evening to complete arrangements for the celebration of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the lodge. The Chairwoman of the committee, Mrs. Leerburger, presided. It was decided to hold a banquet in the afternoon and a ball in the evening at Sherry's Jan. 14.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

Gen. H. H. Lockwood.

Gen. Henry H. Lockwood of Washington died at his residence, on Georgetown Heights, last Thursday. He had been more than forty years' service in the army and navy of the United States. Appointed to West Point from Delaware, his native State, in 1822, he resigned one year after graduation to enter the other arm of the service. In 1841 he was appointed Professor of Mathematics at the Naval Academy, at Annapolis, in which position, with an interval of four years during the civil war, he remained until his retirement, in 1878. At the outset of the civil war the naval professor was appointed a Brigadier General of volunteers by President Lincoln. He served in this capacity until honorably discharged in 1865.

Gen. Lockwood married a daughter of Chief Justice Booth of Delaware. His eldest son, Lieut. James B. Lockwood, died while a member of the Greely expedition. He is survived by a son, Harry Lockwood of Washington, and by five daughters, Mrs. Charles D. Birgbee, wife of Capt. Birgbee; Mrs. Peck, wife of Commander Peck; Mrs. William Orme, Mrs. Samuel Rittenhouse, and Miss Mary Lockwood of Washington.

The burial took place yesterday at the National Cemetery at Annapolis.

Charles E. Ide.

Charles E. Ide of Syracuse, Eminent Grand Commander of the Grand Commandery, Knights Templars of the State of New York, died yesterday at Jacksonville, Fla., from Bright's disease.

Mr. Ide was a prominent lawyer of Syracuse, and for a number of years was Corporation Counsel for the city. He was born in Phelps, Ontario County, N. Y., May 31, 1852, and settled in Syracuse when a young man. He was made a Mason in Central City Lodge, No. 468, and was Master of the lodge in 1880, 1881, and 1882. He was appointed Grand Steward by Grand Master Shearer in 1881, and was reappointed by Grand Master Ten Eyck in 1882. The following year he was elected Junior Grand Warden, and was re-elected in 1884. For three years—1887, 1888, and 1889—he was Eminent Commander of Central City Commandery.

Mr. Ide was a Past Master of Central City Lodge of Perfection, Past Master of Central City Council of Princes of Jerusalem, Past Master of Central City Chapter Rose Croix, and Commander in Chief of the Central City Consistory of the Ancient and Accepted Rite. He was a Mason of the thirty-third degree.

Judge E. K. Foster.

Judge Eleazer K. Foster of Gainesville, Fla., died at the hospital in New Haven, Conn., on Friday night. He came North for his health. Last Sunday his condition became serious and he underwent a surgical operation, which caused his death.

Judge Foster was fifty-eight years of age, and was a son of the late Judge E. K. Foster, the head of one of the oldest families in New Haven. He was graduated in the class of 1863 from Yale. When a young man he established himself in Florida. At the time of his death he was division counsel for the Plant system of railroads, President of the Board of Trustees of the Agricultural College at Lake City, Fla., and a Trustee of the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn. At one time he was a Judge in a circuit court in South Florida. He was a member of Gov. Bloxham's Cabinet. He leaves a wife, one son, and two daughters.

Obituary Notes.

A. M. STUART, a prominent coal dealer of Syracuse, died yesterday morning, aged forty-seven years.

JAMES SEYMOUR, Jr., who for over fifty years was a prominent banker of Auburn, N. Y., died there on Friday night, aged seventy-two years.

The Rev. C. H. SCHOONOVER died at his home, Goldens Bridge, N. Y., Friday night. He had been ill for six weeks with stomach trouble. He was fifty-three years old.

The Very Rev. P. V. KAVANAGH, for thirteen years President of Niagara University, died at Niagara Falls last night, aged fifty-seven years. The funeral service will be held on Wednesday.

Mrs. CAROLINE OGDEN, widow of Alfred Ogden, died at her residence, 23 East Thirteenth Street, yesterday. She was seventy-nine years old. Mrs. Ogden was a Miss Ogden. She leaves a son, George H. Ogden.

ISAAC R. CLEMENTS, one of the most prominent residents of Middletown, N. Y., died there yesterday, from paralysis, aged seventy-seven years. He was for many years President of the Merchants' National Bank of Middletown.

WILLIAM GRIMSTEAD, Port Captain here for the shipping firm of Andrews, Weir & Co. of Glasgow, died yesterday at Roosevelt Hospital in his forty-ninth year. Capt. Grimstead had been suffering from rheumatism. He lived at the Stevens House.

THE RECIPROCITY TREATIES

Agreements Are to Remain in Force for Five Years.

FREE LIST IS COMPREHENSIVE

United States Makes Fewer Concessions to France and Great Britain Than Received from Them.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The reciprocity treaties negotiated between the United States and France and between the United States and Great Britain during the past Summer, the terms of which have been carefully guarded, have at last been printed. They were transmitted to the Senate on Tuesday, and will be taken up for consideration by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations at the first meeting of that committee, which will probably be held next Wednesday.

The treaty with Great Britain covers the dependencies of Jamaica, Bermuda, Barbados, British Guiana, and Turk's and Caicos Islands. All the agreements include lists of articles on which concessions are made by the respective parties. Those with Great Britain are signed on the part of Great Britain by Reginald Towers, and on the part of the United States by John Kasson. The French treaty is signed by Mr. Kasson and Ambassador Cambon.

The list of reductions in each case is followed by treaty articles, giving the general terms of stipulation. The French convention is made applicable to Algeria and its products, as it is to France and its products.

The general terms of all the treaties are practically the same, the stipulation being in most cases that "in case either of the contracting parties shall during the continuance of this convention increase the duties upon the importation of merchandise, the increase shall be without discrimination or prejudice against the products of the other."

There are variations of this provision. For instance, in the case of Jamaica it is stipulated that the increase shall in no case exceed 50 per cent. of the present duty.

In the case of France it is provided that "any reduction of the duty of the Tariff act of 1897 upon sparkling wines or upon certain articles of woolen manufacture imported into the United States from any other European country shall be immediately extended to the articles when imported from France."

TREATIES AWAIT RATIFICATION.

With reference to Barbados it is provided that the colony shall not during the term of the treaty increase its duty upon oats, coal, or shingles produced in the United States, but upon other articles not especially provided for in the treaty. The colony reserves the right to increase the duties not exceeding 50 per cent., but without discrimination against the United States. There is a provision in each case that no separate import duty shall be imposed upon packages or coverings of importations.

Article III. of each of the British treaties provides against export duties or other charges upon exportation by either country.

Article IV. of these treaties provides that the rates prescribed for imports from the United States shall continue during the term of this convention preferential in respect to all like imports from other countries, with the exception of Great Britain and the British possessions, and of such other countries as shall be entitled by convention with Great Britain to the benefit of the most favored treatment.

Article V. in the British treaties provides for the ratification of the treaties by the President and the Senate on behalf of the United States and by the Queen on behalf of Great Britain, after favorable action by each of the colonies interested. In all cases except that of the Barbados an exchange of ratificatfons within eight months is provided for. In the Barbados treaty twelve months' time is allowed. All the treaties are to continue in force for five years, and from year to year thereafter at the pleasure of the contracting parties.

The French treaty provides for a termination of its obligations by either party six months after notification in case either of the contracting parties changes the relative conditions by legislative action, France by increasing the minimum rates of duty stipulated for products of the United States, or the United States by increasing the reduced rates made by the treaty or increasing the existing rates upon other French products or either party by imposing new restrictions or prohibitions upon importations from the others.

It is provided that in case the United States should concede a lower rate of duty to any other country on the articles mentioned than is granted to France, the lower rate shall be made immediately applicable to France.

The terms of the French treaty as applicable to specific articles have already been published, France granting on her part the right of admission of American products at the minimum rates of duty, with few exceptions, and the United States making reductions on articles of French origin of from 5 to 20 per cent.

Following are the principal reductions provided for in the British treaties:

JAMAICA.

The following articles are to be admitted from Jamaica into the United States at a reduction of 20 per cent.: Citrous fruits, pineapples, fresh vegetables, (including potatoes and onions,) and rum. Cane sugar and molasses are to be admitted at a reduction of 12½ per cent. Bananas, cocoanuts, coffee, crude cocoa, unground ginger root, kola nuts, pimento and annatto, beeswax, crude sarsaparilla, tortoise shell, logwood, and fustic and mahogany.

Jamaica agrees to admit free of the products of the United States a long list of articles, including agricultural implements and tools of all kinds; all electrical apparatus for communication and illumination, gas apparatus, asbestos, and tar paper for roofing, flax bags, dried and smoked beef, canned beef and pork, belting for machinery, books, bran, bridges, bullion and coin, coal and coke, tallow candles, cotton, wool carts, wagons, &c., not used as articles of pleasure; cottonseed products, drawings, paintings, &c.; eggs, fertilizers, fish, fire engines, fruit of all kinds, hay and straw, horses and mules, lamps, lime, locomotives and railroad rolling stock, maps, marble, fresh meat, paper, printers' ink, poultry, sugar pans, resin, tar, &c.; sausage, slates and slate pencils, sewing machines, steam engines, boilers, &c.; steel ingots, stills, tallow, telephones, trees, plants, &c.; varnish, wire fencing, wood hoops, yeast cake and baking powder, and zinc.

The following articles are to be admitted at reduced rates: Pine lumber, Cyprus shingles, beef, wet, salted, or cured; pork, wet, salted, or cured; butter and oleomargarine, plain bread and biscuit, corn and cornmeal, ham and bacon, peas and beans, cottonseed oil, manufactured tobacco, cigarettes, cavendish plug, cotton cloths, cheese, wheat flour, lard and its substitutes, oats, petroleum, wines.

BERMUDA.

From Bermuda the following articles are to be admitted into the United States at a reduction of 20 per cent. from the present rates of duty: Potatoes, onions, bulbs and natural flowers, tomatoes, and other fresh vegetables. Reciprocally the following articles originating in the United States are to be admitted to Bermuda free of duty: Books, coals, fresh fruits and peas and beans, ice, paintings, engravings, &c., trees, plants, &c., for planting, fresh meats and poultry, bread and biscuit, cheese, bran, canned fruits, canned meats, canned vegetables, dried fruits, carts and carriages, clocks, corn brooms, cornmeal, cottonseed oil and oil cake, cycles, fertilizers, hay, horses and mules, agricultural implements, pitch, resin, tallow, tar, wire fencing.

The following articles are to be admitted at the rate of 5 per cent. ad valorem: Beef and pork, pickled and smoked meats, butter, cereals and cereal food, eggs, flour, furniture, milk, cattle at 4 shillings per head.

BARBADOS AND GUIANA.

The United States agrees to a reduction of 12½ per cent. on the duties on cane sugar and molasses, fresh fruit, fresh vegetables, and asphalt imported from Barbados and to the same reduction on cane sugars, fresh vegetables, and kaolin, brought from British Guiana.

Both countries agree to admit free the following United States products: Bran, tallow candles, carts and vehicles, clocks, corn brooms, corn, cornmeal, cottonseed oil, cycles, eggs, hay, horses, lamps, electric light machinery, mules, pitch and tar, resin, tallow, wire fencing.

Other articles admitted from the United States at reduced rates are: Fruits and vegetables, canned fish, cotton clothing, earthen and glass ware, hardware and cutlery, furniture and upholstery, wooden and willow ware, wooden hoops, bread and biscuits, cheese, wheat, flour, lard, canned or preserved meat and salted beef or pork, oil meal and cake, oleomargarine, butter, lager beer, dry and sweet wine, pine lumber, unmanufactured tobacco.

TURK'S AND CAICOS ISLANDS.

The agreement covering these islands provides for a reduction of 12½ per cent. on the duty imposed upon unmanufactured sponges, and undressed sisal grass imported from the islands into the United States. The list of articles of United States origin which are to be admitted free and at reduced rates into the islands is very similar to that of the same list for Barbados and Guiana.

WANT NO RECIPROCITY.

Californians Protest Against Treaties with Jamaica and France.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 9.—The Secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers' Association has been instructed to telegraph the President of the United States and Senator Perkins a vigorous protest against the passage of the proposed reciprocity treaties with Jamaica and France on the ground that these treaties seriously affect the prosperity of Southern California, and injure one of the greatest industries of this section.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—All but two members of the California delegation in Congress called at the State Department to discuss with the officials the French reciprocity treaty, which is now pending before the Senate. The Californians, basing their action upon newspaper publications as to the character of the treaty, are opposing vigorously so much of it as appears to threaten the California wine and fruit interests.

Secretary Hay referred the delegation for accurate information as to the scope of the treaty to Special Plenipotentiary Kasson, who negotiated the instrument for the United States, and the gentlemen spent half an hour this morning in conference with him on this subject.

JAMES MOIR'S CAREER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

There appeared in the papers yesterday very short notices of my father, Mr. James Moir's, life, some of which have been quite incorrect, and it has seemed to me that when a landmark, such as he, was removed from the city life, it might be a kindness to write the real facts of his life.

My father was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, March 15, 1817; he was the son of Dr. James Moir, a somewhat celebrated physician in the early part of this century, and of his wife, Margaret Laing Stenhouse. My grandfather, who was my father's father, of course, was a surgeon in the British Navy at the time of the first Napoleonic wars, was wrecked on the coast of France, taken prisoner, and for several years lived on parole in the City of Verdun, during which time he and my grandmother—that is, my father's father and mother—were received with great kindness and hospitality, both by the great Emperor and his wife.

My father was the last remaining son of these two people; his eldest brother was Dr. John Moir, the President of the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons in Edinburgh, Scotland, who died last year at the age of ninety-one, perhaps the best known figure in Edinburgh during the last twenty or thirty years, one of the founders of the Free Church of Scotland, and who through his marriage was connected with the best-known Scottish nobility, and whose lovely character made him a landmark wherever he moved. My father was the second son. Next to him was Dr. William Moir, who, very early in life, went to India, and, at his death, when quite a young man, was Post Captain of the Port of Bombay. The youngest son was the Hon. Alexander Wilson Moir, G. C. M. G., who in turn was Governor of almost all the smaller West Indian Islands, and who died some two years ago.

My father came to this country in 1836 and began life with the house of Andrew Mitchell & Co., dry goods importers of this city at that time. He subsequently became interested in the house of Wilmerdings, Priest & Mount, and later with Crafts & Stell, and was a partner for many years in the firm of Starvart, Zigomala & Co. of Manchester, England, which same concern is still carrying on its business under the old firm name. His connection with these firms covered a period of twenty years. He retired in 1869 and formed in 1870 the firm of Aborn, Moir & Co., Mr. Aborn being the father-in-law of ex-Mayor Strong, who is to act as one of my father's pall bearers. This concern was dissolved in 1877, and since that time he had not been engaged in active business pursuits. It was always his boast that not only he himself personally had always paid a hundred cents on the dollar, but that he had never been connected, directly or indirectly, with any business concern which had not done the same.

In 1845 he married Miss Mary McElroy, the daughter of the Rev. Joseph McElroy, D. D., who, from 1820 till 1876, was the pastor of the Scotch Presbyterian Church in this city. It was the privilege of these two old people that they were able to keep their golden wedding in 1895, when, with their children and grandchildren surrounding them in perfect health, they enjoyed that blessing.

My father was all his life a stanch Presbyterian. When he severed his connection with the Scotch Presbyterian Church and transferred it to the University Place Presbyterian Church, he was the oldest living member, and through all the vicissitudes or joys of his life, he never swerved from his old Scotch principles and ways. He was a life member of the St. Andrew's Society, having been for many years one of its Directors, its first and second Vice President, and ultimately its President.

He was elected a Director of the Bank of New York in 1878, of which institution he was a Director at the time of his death, and was a well-known figure for over half a century on Wall Street. Under the new civil service rules of that time, he was appointed a civil service examiner under Mayor Edson, and he always took more or less interest in educational affairs.

He leaves four children; my eldest brother, Joseph McElroy Moir of Minnesota; my sister, Mrs. Henry T. Lee of Los Angeles, Cal.; myself, Rev. William W. Moir, assistant rector of the Church of the Holy Communion, and my younger brother, Arthur Duncan Moir of Saranac Lake, in the Adirondacks, who for some time, until quite recently, was one of the Directors of the Consolidated Exchange.

I do not feel that, as a son, I should say very much about my father's abilities and wonderfully strong character. He was a man of deep convictions and steadfast following of duty. He was a man of marvelous breadth of education, his yearly reading being about the average of one book a day, since his retirement from business, always remembering what he read and writing a resumé of every book for perhaps the last fifteen or twenty years, his reading covering every side of life. He was also a most able classical scholar, and only this Winter had mapped out a course of Latin reading for himself, of course in the original. His dignity was tempered with great friendliness and hospitality, and I feel that a landmark has been removed from the city's life at his death.

His funeral is to take place at the University Place Presbyterian Church on Tuesday of next week, at 12 o'clock noon. The Rev. Dr. George Alexander of that church and the Rev. Dr. Samuel M. Hamilton of Englewood, N. J., who for many years was his trusted and well-beloved pastor, are to be the officiating clergymen.

He was also a member of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, of the American Geographical Society, and of the Museum of Natural History. I think that these facts may be interesting to you and I have the honor to be,

W. W. MOIR.

New York, Dec. 9, 1899.

New Artesian Well Water Company.

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 9.—The People's Water Company was incorporated here to-day at the County Clerk's office. The company is capitalized at $500,000, divided into 5,000 shares at $100 per share. The following are the stockholders: Charles Sweeney, Spokane, Wash., 1,200 shares; Senator Christian Braun, 20 shares; William B. Gourley, 500 shares; E. R. Weiss, 10 shares; George P. Pfeiffer, Jr., of Camden, 250 shares; George Ashley, 10 shares, and George White of New York, 450 shares. The object of the company is to drive artesian wells to supply pure water for public use.

The Detroit Sails for Colombia.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The cruiser Detroit has sailed from Colon for San Martai, a point on the coast of Colombia about eighty miles east of Cartagena. Notwithstanding the reassuring reports received a few days ago from Commander Hemphill as to the termination of the revolution in Colombia, it has been concluded that the situation in the eastern part of the country is so threatening as to demand the presence of an American warship to look after American interests in that section.

Killed by Gas in Boston.

BOSTON, Dec. 9.—Henry Chapman, colored, of Corpus Christi, Texas, is dead, and his wife, Emma, is dying at a hospital here as the result of gas poisoning last night. The Chapmans arrived in this city yesterday, and lodged at a house in Pleasant Street. About 2 o'clock this morning a strong smell of gas in the hall was traced to Chapman's room, and the man and woman were found unconscious. Chapman died soon afterward. It is thought that the affair was an accident.

SUGAR TRUST STOCK DOWN

BIG DEVELOPMENTS IMPENDING

Powerful Rivalry to the American Company Hinted At—Statement Regarding 1900 Dividends.

The statement in THE NEW YORK TIMES of yesterday that developments impending in the Sugar Trust situation might create a Wall Street sensation was amply verified by the course of yesterday's security market. After opening around 145, Sugar Trust stock fell steadily, until at the end of the two hours of business it was selling at 139½, with brokers offering the stock at a still lower price after the close.

So much of a surprise was the announcement of F. O. Matthiessen's withdrawal from the Sugar Trust that certain Wall Street interests sought every avenue possible to get a refutation of the story, and even the news agencies for a time worked to create the impression that there might be some blunder in the statement. But there was no blunder, and the same news agencies, finding this to be a fact, then began to expend their energies in explaining that Mr. Matthiessen had been out of the trust for a long time—though Mr. Matthiessen himself was so unaware of that fact that, as his statement to THE TIMES showed, he had found it necessary to write an explicit letter of his intention to withdraw.

In sugar trade circles, save and except among a few insiders, the announcement was as much of a surprise as it was to the general public.

James H. Post of B. H. Howell, Son & Co., representing the Mollenhauer and National refineries, voiced the general sentiment when he said: "The withdrawal is a big surprise. It will be a very serious thing to the American Sugar Company if Mr. Matthiessen starts in opposition to that company. He has plenty of money to do it with."

Other sugar men spoke freely on the situation, but not for publication. They all agreed that Mr. Matthiessen's withdrawal is of much significance. In this connection it is hinted that something is pending of even more importance than the absorption of the Doscher property by a new company of which Mr. Matthiessen is the head, though in no quarter can specific information be obtained.

The New York News Bureau, discussing the matter, said yesterday: "It is asserted that there is much significance in the statement of J. H. Post that the Sugar Refining Company dividends recently have not been earned, and the trade thinks that this is strictly true. The policy of the company is to make the dividend rate once a year in four quarterly payments. A new year now begins, and it is thought in the trade that the 1900 dividends may not be maintained at the usual rate."

The same authority also says: "Several of the independent refineries have lately increased their capacity, and the chances are that the output of these refineries will be larger after the first of the year than ever before. The Arbuckle refinery has lately resumed operations, after a week's shut-down, which was necessary to increase its capacity to about 5,000 barrels a day. The Mollenhauer refinery has also increased its capacity 500 barrels a day, and the National refinery is also putting in new pans, which will increase its output 500 barrels daily. This will make the total output of each of these refineries 3,500 barrels a day. John Arbuckle is said to have told a friend of his a few days ago that he was not making any money out of the sugar business, but that he intended to refine sugar to supply his trade."

NEEDS OF FISK UNIVERSITY.

Prominent Men Issue an Appeal for the Endowment of the Nashville Institution.

An appeal has been issued for funds to create an endowment for Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn. The university, in the words of the circular, "finds that its great success is its serious embarrassment. Its work, increasing year by year, has made necessary a large endowment." The appeal is signed by Senator Depew, Gov. McMillin of Tennessee, the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, the Rev. Dr. W. H. Ward, the Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke, the Rev. Dr. David H. Greer, James M. Head, Mayor of Nashville, and others.

The university was founded in January, 1866, by Northern philanthropists for colored young men and women. Its Faculty now consists of seven professors and twenty-one instructors, while it has this year 507 students, who come from twenty different States. Its instruction covers all the departments of a college curriculum, normal, preparatory, industrial, English, and musical. There are among its alumni more than a score of physicians, more than a dozen each of ministers, lawyers, and merchants, and over 200 teachers. Nearly one-half of the last named are teachers of public schools or professors in colleges. The university has, to quote from the circular again, "made clear the fact that when educated, the negro can use the instruction that he has received."

Fisk University is unique from the fact that $150,000 of its present property was earned by colored young men and women, the famous Jubilee Singers, who gave their Alma Mater the fruit of seven years' labor. The university, which is free from debt, owns a campus of thirty-five acres, which once was a slave plantation, and on which are eight substantial buildings. All that is needed now is an endowment. Contributions to the institution at present come from a number of persons in moderate circumstances, who have been able to prevent the university from getting into debt, but have not been able to endow any of the chairs of instruction. It is declared that one-half the sum needed in an Eastern college will endow a professorship or instructorship at Fisk University, on account of the strict economy in the methods with which it is conducted.

The charge at the university for tuition, board, room rent, light, heat, and laundry is, according to the circular, less than that for tuition alone in many New England colleges.

Senator Depew and the other prominent men who sign the appeal say in it: "Over $20,000,000 given to endow institutions of learning in 1899 is a significant fact. That not one-thousandth part of this sum has been given to endow institutions for the benefit of a race including one-tenth of our population is a still more significant fact. Everything for those who have had centuries of civilization behind them, nothing for those whose civilization has not had as many decades, does not accord with an American twentieth century idea of justice. It is a disparity doubtless in part due to the fact that the institutions of learning for the black people are little known.

"It (Fisk University) stands for the fine sentiment of a distinguished Southern gentleman, who said: 'Give them all, black and white, the keys of knowledge and let them unlock as many doors as they can; I pity the coward who is afraid to give a human being this chance.'"

The Dean of Fisk University, the Rev. Dr. James G. Merrill, is to be in New York for a short time, and will be glad to call upon any who may wish for further information with regard to the institution. He can be addressed, Box 40, Madison Square Station. John H. Washburn, President of the Home Insurance Company, 119 Broadway, is Chairman of the Board of Trustees of the university, and will receive any subscriptions, great or small, for the endowment fund.

"SPORTING DUCHESS" IN LUCK

Won $100,000 on the Races and Will Open a New Hotel—Plays Cards with the Plumber for His Bill.

There are few persons who visit the race track regularly all season who find themselves winners when the season comes to a close, and fewer, even among the big plungers, who ever win as much as $100,000, but that is the sum the "Sporting Duchess," Mrs. Amelia Westphal of 414 Pearl Street, is credited with having won this season, and on Wednesday she will open a new hotel at the above address.

Mrs. Westphal is as well known on the race track as she is in Pearl Street, where for many years she has been the friend of all the sports, policemen, and politicians of the neighborhood. She is a big, brawny German woman, as strong and as quick as a professional athlete, and for more than twenty years she kept a saloon and restaurant at 306 Pearl Street. Her place was the rendezvous of policemen when they were off duty, politicians, and down-town sports, and Mrs. Westphal, who was in succession Mrs. Henry Bailey, Mrs. Adam Von Rieder, and Mrs. Anthony Westphal, was equally at home behind her bar serving her patrons, at the poker table playing with them, or at the race track playing the horses. She made plenty of money in business, was lucky enough at the races to buy a stable of horses, and at the poker table she was credited with knowing the value of a flush or a full house as well as any player that ever sat in the game.

Henry Bailey, her first husband, died, and then a few years later she buried her second, Adam von Rieder. She married Policeman Anthony Westphal of the Oak Street Station next, and when he died in June last, she applied for a pension from the Police Pension Fund. What money she had made in business and at the race track was gone, for she had, and still has, about $80,000 in loans to politicians, policemen, and sports outstanding, and she was obliged to give up her saloon.

With a small sum she received on her third husband's life insurance policy Mrs. Westphal began to play the races again last Summer, and when the season closed last month she claimed to be $100,000 winner on the season. She then decided to go into business again.

When seen yesterday the "Sporting Duchess" was in a speculative mood. She expected to be able to open her saloon yesterday, but the carpenters had not finished their work, and there was nothing else for the "Sporting Duchess" to do but wait. The plumber who did the work in the saloon called while the reporter was present, and received the amount of his bill, but as he was leaving the "Sporting Duchess" challenged him to a game of penuchle. He was willing, and while the carpenters were getting the place ready, Mrs. Westphal and the plumber were playing for the latter's bill. She was too deeply ingrossed in the game to talk much about her winnings on the season, but after she melted a hundred aces she paused long enough to say that she would probably buy another stable of race horses next season.

When the reporter left the "Sporting Duchess" had won back what she paid the plumber, and was playing him for the bill for any plumbing that might be needed in future.

TO TAX EXPRESS COMPANIES.

Bankers Declare They Are Brokers Within the Meaning of the War Revenue Act.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Col. J. C. Boyd, Assistant Attorney General, gave a hearing to-day to John A. Garver and others, representing a committee of the American Bankers' Association, and John J. McCook, representing the Wells-Fargo Express Company, and Charles Steele of the Adams Express Company, on the question of the taxability of express companies as brokers under the War Revenue act. The question has been before the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for some months, the bankers claiming that the express companies not only do a large business in domestic exchange, but also in foreign exchange, and under the wording of the War Revenue act are clearly liable to a tax of $50 a year as brokers on every office where such business is done.

Mr. Garver contended that the express companies, or some of them at least, did a large foreign exchange business, and that, owing to the fact that they had hitherto been exempt from the tax, they were enabled to cut rates to an extent that practically drove the banks, and especially those of the interior of the country, out of the exchange business. Since the new law went into operation, he said, the express companies had practically discontinued the old forms of bills of exchange and substituted therefor checks on foreign banks. He insisted, however, that checks, orders, drafts, and all instruments of that character were in effect "bills of exchange," and, therefore, clearly within the scope of the law.

Some time ago Commissioner Wilson rendered a decision in which he held that express companies engaged in the business of buying and selling foreign coin were subject to the tax. The question of their liability, however, for issuing foreign remittance checks, travelers' checks, cable transfers of money, or domestic exchange was not decided, and the whole matter was referred to the Attorney General for an opinion upon the questions involved.

Mr. McCook and Mr. Steele asked permission to file briefs, which was granted. Mr. McCook maintained in an brief oral argument that if express companies were declared liable to the tax, telegraph companies must also be included. Thus about 104,000 offices of these companies, representing largely the business activity and industry of the whole country, would be practically closed to the public. The business men of the country, he said, would not consent to any such heavy restrictions on their methods of doing business. Large areas of the country, where banks were few, he said, depended almost entirely upon the express and telegraph companies for the transmission of funds.

Col. Boyd said that he would receive briefs any time between now and the 1st of January.

FOUR BURNED IN GIVING AID.

Tried to Save Girl Who Was Fatally Hurt by Blazing Clothes.

Mary O'Connor, a domestic, twenty years of age, employed by Mrs. Lena Leerberger of 182 East Seventy-fifth Street, was fatally burned yesterday while preparing breakfast on a gas range. Her clothing caught fire, and in her efforts to get some one to extinguish the flames she was the cause of three women and a man being burned and slight blazes in two apartments.

When her clothing caught fire she ran to Mrs. Leerberger, who is quite feeble. Mrs. Leerberger attempted to help the young woman, and in pulling her clothes from her burned her own hands and set fire to some lace curtains. When the curtains caught the girl ran through the halls of the apartment house and into the flat of Mrs. Kominsky, who was sitting at breakfast with her daughter Rose.

Mrs. Kominsky and her daughter were burned in trying to help the woman, and their tablecloth was set on fire. When they could render no further assistance the burning woman ran to the street, followed by the janitor with a blanket. She fell exhausted upon the pavement, and the janitor, who extinguished the flames, was burned about the hands. The girl was taken to the Presbyterian Hospital unconscious.

he report follows:

Charles P. Clark, President of this comy, having refused a re-election on acnt of his health, we, his fellow-Direcs, both as a body and individually, de to express our regret at his retirement, our appreciation of the signal services ch he has rendered this railroad and interests of the territory tributary to its s. The results of the twelve years of administration have been the expansion the New York, New Haven and Hartd Railroad from a local company of limlength, connections and business, into of the great systems of the country. The line has grown by wise and judicious uisitions and extensions until it covers of Southern New England, and with its er routes practically controls the ght and passenger business between w York and Boston. Foreseeing that the traffic which would be gathered could be accommodated by the road as it then , he eliminated grades and grade crosses, four-tracked the road, provided addial terminal facilities sufficient to meet re requirements, remodeled the roadbed, strengthened the bridges, until to-day line is up to the highest standards, and permanent way equal to the best in the ld.

He became President of a company 1887 which had of roads owned and ed 450 miles, and leaves the office with 7 miles owned and operated. The gross ings have increased from $8,000,000 to 00,000. The company now has 500 locoives, as against 123 in 1887; 1,800 passenagainst 3,000, and nearly 600 other cars, des 24 steamers, 12 tugs, and 37 car s.

HAS DISSIPATED HOSTILITIES.

An able administration of the facilities a great traffic thus created has given to ons and shippers better accommodas and lower rates and dissipated the lities, prejudices, and local difficulties ch threatened serious damage and ade legislation. In the conception and exion of the plan for a Union Station in on he has builded an enduring monut to his sagacity and farsightedness as ilway manager.

n thus expressing our profound appreon of the work of our President for company, we, each of us, desire to add wn cordial good wishes for the enjoyt by Mr. Clark for many years of his -earned rest and merited honors; and

W VICE PRESIDENT'S RECORD.

Vice President elect of the New Haand Hartford, William F. Merrill, was in Montague, Mass., in 1842, and is seven years old. He early took up the of civil engineering, afterward enterAmherst College. In his junior year in he enlisted in the Corps of Engineers, d States Army, and remained until lose of the war, leaving the service as mmissioned officer in the Engineer s. After the war he took a scientific e in engineering at Lawrence Scientific ol, Harvard College. He began his as a civil engineer on the Chicago, ington and Quincy Railroad, and cond in that capacity on that road and s for about ten years. He then beGeneral Superintendent of the Iowa Chicago Division of the Wabash Railand afterward was General Superinent of the Chicago and Alton Railroad. hen went to the Chicago, Burlington Quincy Railroad, and became at first rintendent of the Iowa lines of that any, then General Manager of the ourl lines of the same company and ward was made General Manager of Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Rail- which position he held for several until he was called to be Second President of the Erie Railroad, the on which he now holds, having conf the Operating and Construction Deents of that property, under President Thomas.

won him the confidence of both railroad officials and strikers.

The New Haven and Hartford's future has been discussed for months in Wall Street and railroad circles. When Judge Hall succeeded Mr. Clark, the change was regarded as temporary, and there is unanimity of opinion that permanency of organization will be reached when Judge Hall retires to the board to be succeeded by a President selected by Morgan and Rockefeller interests. Mr. Merrill may be the choice. It is also considered as arranged that an Executive Committee of three or five members will in time control the affairs of the system, and that, if of three, it will consist of J. Pierpont Morgan, William Rockefeller, and Mr. Merrill; or, if of five, of three Directors and ex-Judge Hall and W. D. Bishop, Sr.

THE SEABOARD CONSOLIDATION.

Raleigh and Gaston Stockholders Vote to Absorb Eighteen Roads.

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 9.—The initial steps providing for the unification of the Seaboard Air Line system were taken at the general meeting of the stockholders of the Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company, held in Raleigh to-day. The proceedings of the meeting were almost unanimous, 99 8-10 per cent. of the entire stock voting in favor of the plan.

President Williams says that the situation is extremely satisfactory, and that there is nothing now that can materially interfere with the consummation of their plans for the operation as one system of the eighteen separate railroads which constitute the Greater Seaboard, whose lines will reach from Washington and Norfolk on the northeast to Jacksonville, Tampa, Tallahassee, Montgomery, and Atlanta in the south and southwest.

To Absorb the Sierra Madre.

EL PASO, Texas, Dec. 9.—Gen. J. M. Dodge of New York, Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Colorado and Southern Railway, with six other Directors representatives of the Rock Island Railway, and New York owners of the Sierre Madre Railway, are here. It leaked out from official sources that the object of their visit is to inspect the Sierra Madre Railway, which the Colorado and Southern will purchase and extend to the Mexican Pacific Coast. The Sierre Madre terminates as Casas Grandes, Mexico, 150 miles southwest of this point, and when extended will tap a vast coal, timber, and mineral region in Sonora.

Warner Miller Plans to Build a Road.

SPOKANE, Wash., Dec. 9.—Ex-Senator Warner Miller of New York and James F. McNaught of Seattle have taken an option on the water power at Kettle Falls on the Columbia, north of Spokane, and contemplate the building of an electric railroad from the Spokane Falls and Northern Railroad to Republic Camp. Engineers have examined the power and reported to Mr. Miller, who will to-day leave New York, accompanied by a party of capitalists, for Spokane.

Censure for a Railway Company.

HAZLETON, Penn., Dec. 9.—The Coroner's jury empaneled to investigate the Cranberry crossing accident of Nov. 29, in which three women were killed by a Pennsylvania Railroad train crashing into a stage coach, rendered a verdict to-day censuring the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company for not maintaining proper safeguards at the crossing, and the driver of the coach for not using precautions for the safety of his passengers. The piece of road on which the accident occurred is owned by the Lehigh Valley Company, and the Pennsylvania Railroad uses the tracks.

Railroad Shops for Newmarket.

PLAINFIELD, N. J., Dec. 9.—There seems to be little doubt now that the Lehigh Valley Railroad Company will establish its repair shops on the property purchased several weeks ago in Newmarket. The officials of the road have received assurance that the township officials will treat them fairly in the matter of taxation. The plant will probably be built within a year and will employ several hundred men.

Railway Men to Confer on Rates.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—Efforts are now being made to have a conference of all interests concerned in the carrying of tourist business between New England points and California. The Chicago connections of the Boston and Albany Road were asked yesterday if it would be convenient for them to attend such a meeting next week, and they replied it would.

New Through Train to Florida.

The Southern Railway's first through train to Florida via the Pennsylvania Railroad to Washington, thence via the Southern Railway to Savannah, and the Plant system, left New York yesterday at 3:25 P. M. From this date a through-car service to Florida from New York will be operated by this route.

POET'S SONG OF EXPANSION.

"Political Polliwogs," by ex-Congressman William Robert Moore of Tennessee.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—A poetical tribute has been paid to President McKinley by ex-Congressman William Robert Moore of Tennessee, who, under the appellation of the "Statesman of Blue Hog Bottom," was favorably mentioned by some humorous persons for Mr McKinley's running mate in 1896. The poem is entitled "Political Polliwogs," and is "respectfully dedicated to William McKinley, that is, and is to be, President of the United States." Mr. Moore is much pleased with a letter he has received from Secretary Porter, thanking him, in the President's name, for his good wishes, and acknowledging the receipt of the poetry. After assailing "the Atkinsons, the Masons, and the others" as "homemade Tagals," Mr. Moore sings:

They scout "expansio1" as if we'd not expanded
And stab their Government with malice bloody-handed.

Later on the Moore muse appeals to patriotism as follows:

Good patriots all should down the demagogues,
Who're plotting mischief with these Tagalogs,
Political, pestiferous polliwogs,
Whose head machines are run with broken cogs.

In another rhythmical appeal, entitled, "Who Will Haul it Down? Nobody," Mr. Moore sings:

The flag of Jackson, Washington,
The flag of Lincoln, Grant, and Lee,
Hauled down? No, no, it shall not be,
It shall not be.

He thus rebukes those who would haul down the flag of Grant and Lee:

To him who says we are to blame,
Let every patriot cry shame, shame.

Apparently referring to Mr. Bryan, the poet says:

"What could we do? Oh, pull it down,"
Says one who ought to know.
He has no valid ground for saying so.

He thus indicates the effect of Mr. Bryan's advice upon patriots:

And when he writes the chilling words,
"Oh pull that unjust banner down,"
The blood of patriots almost curds.

The poet thus vindicates the American title to the Philippines:

Our title is as clear, unsullied, clean,
As sunshine's purest golden sheen,
Our flag shall not come down,
Shall not come down.

Mr. Moore concludes his verses as follows:

Now, who would haul it down?
It shall not down.
No, no, it shall not down.

MINING EXPERT KILLED.

M. A. Bucke Loses His Life in a Runaway Accident in Montana.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mont., Dec. 9.—M. A. Bucke, general manager of the Bear Gulch Mining Company at Jardine, Park County, was instantly killed in a runaway accident last night. In company with A. C. Blair of New Brunswick, he was driving from Jardine to Cinnabar, to take the train to come to Helena. While running down a steep grade east of Gardner, the team became frightened and ran away. As the animals tore down the grade the occupants of the buggy jumped for their lives. Mr. Bucke struck head first upon a rock and was instantly killed. Mr. Blair, though seriously injured, crawled some distance and secured assist-

SCHOOL LAW VIOLATED.

Charge Made Against Board of Estimate in Applying State Fund—Controller Coler's Defense.

In a letter which he has written to City Superintendent of Schools Maxwell, Deputy Superintendent of Public Instruction Ainsworth intimates that the Board of Estimate has acted illegally in not appropriating directly the city's portion of the State school tax for the payment of salaries as required by the general school laws. This sum, Mr. Ainsworth says, amounts to $1,166,966 for the current year, and he holds that if it had been applied strictly in accordance with the statutes, the present situation would not have arisen.

Controller Coler, in discussing Mr. Ainsworth's charge, said yesterday:

"The City of New York contributes annually over $2,500,000 to the support of schools all over the State. Of this sum, less than one-half is returned to this city as its portion of the general school fund, so that it is apparent that New York does more than pay its share of the expenses of education and gets a most inadequate recompense, everything considered. So far as Mr. Ainsworth's charge is concerned there has been no illegality in the actions of the Board of Estimate. We pursue the same course as obtained in the old City of New York for nearly a quarter of a century. When the budget is prepared we allow the total amount needed for the support of our schools irrespective of the portion of the State tax, which would revert to us anyway. When this money is available it is turned into the general fund for the reduction of taxation, and this fund is deducted from the gross budget, leaving the net amount to be raised by taxation the next year proportionately less. This is a simpler plan than was observed in the former City of Brooklyn, where the receipts from the State school fund were estimated and the amount immediately deducted from the budget and the tax rate fixed at once. This resulted in an apparently lower tax rate. When the money from the State school fund reached the City Treasurer it was added to the moneys collected by taxation. Generally the estimate was too high and a shortage resulted.

"The whole matter amounts to whether or not the identical money must be used for a certain purpose or whether an equal sum derived from other sources may be so used. We hold that there is no difference. It all comes out of the taxpayers' pockets, and in the present difficulty we cannot see that matters would have been amended even if Mr. Ainsworth's plan were carried out."

Corporation Counsel Whalen holds similar views to the Controller, and he will next week give an opinion on the same general lines to Superintendent Maxwell, who has referred the matter to him.

SECONDARY SCHOOL WORK.

Prof. John L. Stewart Urges the Need of a Two Years' Course in General History.

Prof. John L. Stewart of Lehigh University, delivered an address on "History in the Secondary School" yesterday at the ninety-fourth regular monthly meeting of the Schoolmasters' Association of New York and vicinity, which was held in the Girls' High School, 36 East Twelfth Street.

Prof. Stewart said that until relatively recent times history was simply the handmaiden of literature, but now it was assuming the position of a definite science. The great mistake of teachers and writers of history was that they associated politics or the advocacy of a particular form of government, and he instanced among other works showing reprehensible bias the histories of Mommsen and Froude. Prof. Stewart deprecated the one-sided versions of American Colonial history disseminated by the Sons and Daughters of the Revolution and kindred societies as being misleading in the highest degree. The problems that in Revolutionary times affected the colonies also affected England, and to talk about the Revolution as it was talked about thirty years ago was absurd. For instance, the expulsion of the Tories was a measure as unwise as was the Edict of Nantes. It took away from the American population a very valuable element.

The primary consideration of a teacher in the secondary schools should be the inculcation of ideas that would lead to a broadening of human motives and an understanding of the complexity of affairs with which men have to deal. Prof. Stewart said he thought a course of at least two years in general history ought to form part of secondary school education. He was averse to giving too much time to the detail of American history, which could not be taught save in connection with the history of Europe. America had never been isolated from Europe save physically for a brief period, and as far as economical and social conditions were concerned it was still West Europe.

The time was at hand, he continued, when there would be really good teachers of history and of every other subject in the secondary schools. The trouble in this country was that university men would not take a position in these schools, preferring to occupy a minor place at a college and hope against hope that they would one day win a professorship. If they entered a secondary school they were regarded as hopeless cases. This, said Prof. Stewart, was a ridiculous prejudice, which did not exist in England or Germany, where for a university man to teach in a secondary school was not to lose caste in any way.

The great fault about the secondary schools was that their system was solely a preparatory one. The idea of working for a set of examination papers was a gross mistake. He objected to the present practice of examinations for entrance to universities. "We insist," said he, "upon setting questions for boys of whose training and inclinations we know absolutely nothing. It is an injustice to them, an unwarranted hardship. I am in favor of the examination of the boys by their own principals, and of trusting to the honor of the latter to do their duty with strict impartiality."

Prof. Stewart's remarks met with the approval of the audience.

QUEENS TEACHERS TO FIGHT.

Committee Appointed to Prepare Suits for Unpaid Salaries—Talk of Criminal Action.

Seven hundred school teachers in the Borough of Queens gathered in St. Mary's Lyceum Building, in Fifth Street, Long Island City, yesterday afternoon to take some action toward collecting their unpaid salaries from the City of New York. The gathering was called at the instance of the Teachers' Association of the Borough of Queens, of which Dr. Peter E. Demarest, Principal of the Long Island City High School, is President. Dr. Demarest presided at the meting, which at times was decidedly lively.

A motion prevailed to put off until February the time of arrears of dues to be paid, and then the association proceeded to the object of the meeting. A motion was offered that a committee of four, of which the President should be a member, should be appointed to retain counsel and arrange for bringing suits against the City of New York for their unpaid salaries.

Deputy Auditor Francis R. Claire of the Borough of Queens, who was one of the founders of the association and who is still a member, was present and protested against the adoption of the resolution. Auditor Claire stated that if individual suits were brought it would be a great injustice to the taxpayers. He said that the teachers would certainly be successful, and that the costs in each case would be at least $15. Considering that there would be 750 suits, Mr. Claire declared that the amount of costs would be enormous, and that only one test suit was necessary, and that all the others could be decided by the one.

Despite the remarks of Mr. Claire, the motion was adopted amid a storm of handclapping.

President Demarest denounced Mr. Claire's protest as coming from a repre-

est, and finally the Chairman turned upon him and said:

"Mr. Claire, I have the floor, just now!"

The teachers were evidently not in favor of the stand taken by Mr. Claire, and applauded the Chairman vigorously.

Principal Martin Joyce of Woodside took exception to Mr. Claire's remarks. He said:

"We don't want advice from over there, (referring to the Controller's office.) When we stand up for our rights they know we will get them and they begin to whine about it. We go several months without our salaries, and then they appeal to us for honesty. Tell me, ladies and gentlemen, when could people be more honest. Here we have been working day after day with board bills unpaid, shoes worn out, and suffering for necessaries, and with no money for even carfare, and then they appeal to us to be honest. We tell those people today that we mean business and that we shall not leave a stone unturned until we get our salaries. The more they squirm the better we shall be pleased. We shall fight to win."

The speaker was frequently interrupted by the teachers with loud and continued handclapping, and when he referred to the squirming of the city officials there was loud and prolonged laughter.

Chairman Demarest will announce the names of the committee of four on Monday.

District Attorney-elect John B. Merrill of Queens County announced yesterday that just as soon as he secured possession of the District Attorney's office on January 1 he would bring the present school muddle to the attention of the Grand Jury. Mr. Merrill stated that Mayor Van Wyck, at a public meeting, had charged the School Board of the Borough of Queens with being criminally liable for exceeding their appropriation, and he believed that the Mayor should present his evidence to the Grand Jury.

"I shall institute a searching investigation," said Mr. Merrill. "I will endeavor to find out through the Grand Jury who is responsible for delaying the work on new schools in the borough and why it is the teachers have had to go without their salaries when there is money in the City Treasury to pay them. The State gave to the city over $1,000,000 that can be used only for the payment of teachers' salaries. I will also endeavor to find out why teachers have been dropped and why the standard of the schools has been lowered. The law covers all the points and violations cannot be tolerated. My action will be in the nature of a criminal proceeding against the nine members of the School Board of the Borough of Queens."

MAY AMEND CORPORATION LAW.

New York Railroad Commissioners Seek to Compel the Carriers to Make Fuller Reports.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 9.—An effort will be made at the coming session of the Legislature to have the corporation law amended so as to compel certain corporations leasing and virtually operating railroads to make a full report to the State Railroad Commission. The matter has been informally discussed by members of the Board of Railroad Commissioners, and promises to come up before a regular meeting of the board in the near future.

The corporations which make no report save that to the State Controller of capital stock and gross earnings for the purposes of taxation as corporations, while at the same time they are operating railroads under leases, are the ones which will be brought under the law.

Section 57 of the railroad law provides:

Every person or corporation owning, leasing, operating, or in possession of a railroad, wholly or partly in this State, shall make an annual report to the Board of Railroad Commissioners of its operations for the year ending with June 30, and of its condition on that day, which shall be verified by the oath of the President or Treasurer, and the General Manager or Acting Superintendent, and shall be filed in the office of such board on or before Sept. 1 in each year. Every such person or corporation shall make quarterly and further reports to such board in the form and within the time prescribed by it. Such board may in its discretion change the date of the annual report and of filing the same, but the length of time between the date of the annual report and the filing of the same shall not be less than herein prescribed. Any person or railroad corporation which shall neglect to make any such report, or which shall fail to correct any such report within ten days after notice by the Board of Railroad Commissioners shall be liable to a penalty of $250 and an additional penalty of $25 for each day after Sept. 1 on which it shall neglect to file the same, to be sued for in the name of the People of the State of New York for their use. The Board of Railroad Commissioners may extend the time herein limited for cause shown.

Under the above section the corporations to be considered report the operations of the railroads they lease, as individual companies, but give no statement of their own operations or their balance sheets. The Delaware and Hudson Company, for instance, never files other than the individual reports of the several lines of railroads operated by it. The Brooklyn Rapid Transit makes similar reports. Recently there have been formed a number of traction companies whose object it is said to be not to operate railroads as a corporation, but as lessor. The proposed amendment will be drafted to cover the several ways in which the Railroad Commissioners say the law is evaded.

TEXAS TO ALTER ITS TAX LAWS.

Hinted that Corporations Are to Bear the Burdens.

AUSTIN, Texas, Dec. 9.—It has been decided that the Texas Legislature should be convened in special session next month for the consideration of a taxation bill that will completely revolutionize the taxation system of the State. For three months the State Tax Commission has been preparing a bill which remodels all taxation laws of the State.

This bill will, from all reports, cause the corporations of the State no little concern.

CHICAGO BROKER IS EXPELLED.

Deprived of Seat in Stock Exchange for "Bucket Shopping."

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—C. A. Whyland, the senior member of the firm of C. A. Whyland & Co., was to-day expelled by the Chicago Stock Exchange. The charge was "bucket shopping." The action of the Governors created a profound sensation in La Salle Street, where Mr. Whyland was rated high, morally and financially. The news was hardly credited by members who are not on the Executive Committee of the Exchange.

It is said that of the sixteen members of the Governors ten voted for expulsion and six for suspension, the latter element finally yielding to the insistence of the majority. This is the first expulsion ordered in the history of the Chicago institution.

It was learned that the firm of C. A. Whyland & Co. was in business communication with New York firms who are not members of the New York Stock Exchange, but transact their orders on the Consolidated Exchange.

BOSTON, Dec. 9.—The members of the Board of Management of the Stock Exchange to-day voted unanimously to so amend the by-laws of the board that "club trading," so called, on the floor of the Exchange, shall be prohibited. The penalties for the violation of this rule are in the hands of the Governing Committee.

MR. ROGERS'S KIDNAPPING TRIP.

Maria Conde's Parents Now Bereft of Their Granddaughter.

One of the happiest men in Harlem yesterday was Lebbeus Harding Rogers, Jr., who on Friday paid a sudden visit to the home of Swits Conde, his father-in-law, in Oswego, N. Y., and fled with his seven-months' old daughter, whom the grandparents were reluctant to give up, wrapped in an overcoat. Rogers married Maric Dorcas Conde at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church in May, 1898. The wedding of the couple was a surprise to their friends, as it was reputed that Miss Conde was deeply in live with Ensign Stone of the United States Navy, to whom her parents were opposed. The Ensign had announced in 1897 that he was engaged to marry Miss Conde. The father of the young woman accused the Ensign and a friend, Ensign Osborne, with concocting a plan to spirit his daughter away, so that she and Stone might elope. The Condes were then living at 6 West Fifty-sixth Street.

Mrs. Rogers gave birth to twin daughters last May and died within a few days. The children were taken to Oswego by Mrs. Conde after the mother's death. In September one of the babies died. Since then Mr. Rogers has expressed a desire to take the surviving child to the home of his parents, but the Condes were not anxious to give the little one up. Accompanied by a trained nurse Mr. Rogers went to Oswego Friday, and going to the residence of the Condes asked to see his daughter. The nurse was left in a cab standing a few doors away. He was warmly greeted, and told that the baby was in the nursery, and there he went. The child was still in its night clothes. Rogers took it in his arms, walked toward the front door of the house, and abruptly departed, wrapping the infant up in his overcoat.

He then drove to the residence of Mrs. Henry D. McCaffrey, and, after seeing the child safely installed, returned to the Conde residence, where all was commotion. A son of Mr. Conde caused a warrant to be issued charging Rogers with kidnapping. Mr.

DROPPED DEAD IN THE STREET.

Undertakers Strive for Possession of George F. Tasche's Body.

George F. Tasche, fifty years old, a Custom House broker doing business at 65 Broadway, dropped dead on his way to business yesterday morning. Mr. Tasche, who resided at 444 East One Hundred and Twentieth Street, had been suffering from heart trouble for several months and had been confined to his bed on several occasions.

He seemed to be in better health than usual yesterday, and left his home a few minutes before 10 o'clock. He walked almost to Second Avenue, when he staggered and fell heavily to the sidewalk. Policeman Cavanagh ran to his assistance and found him unconscious. He was carried into a drug store. A surgeon who came in an ambulance from the Harlem Hospital pronounced the man dead. The body was removed to the East One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street Police Station.

Three undertakers strove for its possession. James P. Marren of One Hundred and Twentieth Street was the first of them to look at the body and announce his intention to remove it. In the afternoon Sergt. Wallace received a telephone message from Coroner Bausch directing him not to surrender the body to Frank J. Schremp of 2,329 First Avenue. The Coroner explained that a permit had been given to Schremp, but was later revoked. When J. N. Gennerick of a Ninth Avenue firm appeared with a permit Sergt. Wallace was confused. He telephoned to the Coroner, who approved Gennerick's permit, and the body was taken away.

MR. CROKER'S JOCKEYS HERE.

Leslie and "Johnny" Reiff Arrived on the St. Louis.

Leslie Reiff and "Johnny" Reiff, jockeys, returned from England yesterday on the steamship St. Louis. The Reiffs are much pleased with the methods of the English turf, and under their contract with Richard Croker they will return to England in February, meantime visiting their home in Findlay, Ohio.

They went abroad in June, and since then Leslie, who rides at 115 pounds, has had 184 mounts. He had 55 wins, and the others were nearly all seconds and thirds. "Johnny" Reiff, who is but fourteen years old, rides at 66 pounds. He has had 145 mounts, with 27 wins, and, as he put it, "a lot" of seconds and thirds.

WAR VETERAN MOBBED.

Experiences of First Tennessee Men in London and Paris.

Eight discharged soldiers from the Philippines, former members of the First Tennessee Volunteers, who decided to see something of Europe on their way home, arrived here yesterday on the steamship St. Louis. They were paid off and provided with transportation to their homes by way of the Pacific, but leaving the transport Pueblo at Nagasaki, Japan, they took a French steamer for Marseilles. In Paris they were mistaken for English soldiers, and were repeatedly hissed. On one occasion a crowd gathered about their hotel, and it was not until a German correspondent addressed the crowd in French and explained that the soldiers were Americans that it dispersed.

The boys looked for better things in England, but reaching London they were mistaken for Boers on parole, and heard such things as "Shoot the bloomin' Boers, shoot the traitors," and the like.

The Tennessee men who are from Clarksonville, are Lieut. P. Stacker, Sergts. W. Rollow, C. Stacker, and L. Drane, Sergt. Major R. Johnson, Corp. J. Randle, and Privates J. Kendrich and J. H. Tate.

HARVARD-PRINCETON DEBATE.

Collegians Who Will Argue on the Controversy Between Great Britain and the Transvaal.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 9.—The team of Harvard debaters has been working hard in preparation for the debate with Princeton, to be held in Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, Dec. 15. The question, of which Harvard supports the affirmative, is: "Resolved That the English claims in the present controversy with the South African Republic are justifiable." The team, composed of W. Morse, 1900; H. B. Kirtland, '01, and R. C. Bruce, '02, has been debating against a negative maintained by the second team, S. Mayer, 1900; the alternate, H. A. Yeomans, 1900, and J. Frank, 1900.

Wilmer Morse, 1900, of Philadelphia, is the only veteran of the three, and by his experience and strength of argument is the bulwark of the Harvard team. He entered Harvard with the Class of '99, and took part in 1895 in the last freshman debate held between Harvard and Yale. Last year he made the victorious team to debate against Princeton, winning the Coolidge debating prize in the trials.

Henry Bevier Kirtland, 1901, of Plymouth, Ohio, entered Harvard in the Class of 1901. His first appearance as a prominent debater was in the inter-class debate last year, when his team, the sophomores, defeated the freshmen. In the trials this year he won the Coolidge debating prize of $100.

Robert Conkling Bruce, 1902, of Indianapolis, is a son of the late Senator Bruce. At Phillips Exeter Academy, where he prepared for college, he was a member of the Golden Branch, the oldest debating society in this country. In his freshman year, at Harvard last year, he won the Pasteur Medal for debating, being far above all the men in his class.

Ellis Mayer, 1900, of Chicago, is the alternate speaker. In the Fall of 1897 he entered Harvard as a sophomore, but took no part in debating that year. Last year, a member of the Junior Wranglers, he was one of the last fourteen men retained for the Princeton debate. Encouraged by this, he tried again this year, and made the team as the alternate.

Following are sketches of the debaters who will represent Princeton in the debate:

Alfred Bewail Weston, P. G., lives at West Mount Vernon, Me. He entered Princeton in 1895, and has since been active in debating. In his sophomore year he won second prize in the second competitive debate in Whig Hall. In his junior year he won the first prize in the junior debate, the junior extempore speaking contest in Whig Hall and was one of the speakers in the junior oratorical contest. During his senior year he won first prize in the first competitive debate and the French medal contest in Whig Hall, and the class of '76 prize debate on Washington's Birthday. He was a member of Princeton's debating team last year against Yale and Harvard, and won the special prize given in the Harvard preliminary debates, and first prize in the Baird Disputation Contest. He now holds a Fellowship in the university.

Joseph Addison Jones, 1900, resides in Passaic, N. J. He entered Princeton in the Fall of 1897. In his freshman year he won the first prize in the freshman and special debate in Clio Hall. He won first prize in the sophomore oratorical contest and general prize debate in Clio Hall. Last year he represented Princeton in the Yale-Princeton debate.

Joseph Hall Hill, 1900, Edgewood Park, Penn., lives in Pittsburg, and entered Princeton in 1896. In his junior year he won his class debate in Whig Hall, and in 1898 and again this year he captured second prize in the first competitive debates. He represented his class last year in the 1876 prize debate on Washington's Birthday, and was one of the debaters from Whig Hall in the inter-hall debate, and entered the junior oratorical contest last year.

ng papers in an injunction suit to re- Gov. Roosevelt and the Commission- the Land Office of the State of New from issuing letters patent to the Light, Heat and Power Company nds under water at Berrian's Island, prepared in the office of Corporation el Whalen yesterday. The suit will un early this week, in the Supreme in Albany County. In connection the beginning of legal action, Mr. n has written a letter to Gov. Roose- sking him to withhold his signature letters patent until the injunction served.

is complaint, the Corporation Counsel hat the Commissioners of the Land have no authority to make grants d under water within the city limits wate parties, and that the grant to the company, if perfected, will result reparable loss to the city, and will sly interfere with the contemplated of improvement of the water front. Whalen quotes liberally from the char- o establish his contention that the front of the city is within the con- of the city, subject to the rights of an owners, and declares that the De- ent of Docks and Ferries some hs ago determined that the granting of application of the Astoria company seriously conflict with the rights of lty. Due notice of this determination, ays, was served upon the Commission- f the Land Office, but notwithstanding ity's protest, the Commissioners, on 7, made the grants asked for by the ia company, "upon terms and condi- of benefit to the State, but not in any recognizing any benefit or interest of plaintiff in the premises."

APPEAL TO THE GOVERNOR.

Whalen's letter to the Governor is as ws:

The city has learned unofficially that Commissioners of the Land Office re- ly passed a resolution, and that in fence to that resolution you will be d to sign, and the Secretary of State be asked in turn to issue four grants and under water to a private corpora- known as the Astoria Light, Heat, and er Company, for a trifling considera- ss than $4,000, which is proposed to be to the State for valuable water rights e value of at least $5,000,000.

The City of New York, through its d of Docks and Ferries, received notice hese four applications, and in obedi- e to Section 86 of the charter, deter- ed not only that the issue of such t by the State would conflict with the ts of the city, but that it would othe- be injurious to the public interests, in obedience to the practice in that be- a hearing was had before the Commis- ers of the Land Office, and at that hear- my office was represented by Mr. rles Blandy, one of my assistants. It was vigorously contended by him that never the Board of Docks and Ferries rmined that the issuance of a grant uld conflict with the rights of the city or uld be otherwise injurious to the public rests, that then and in that event the d Commissioners were ousted of the t to make any such grant. In other ds, it is only when the Board of Docks no objection to the making of a grant of d in the City of New York that the Land mmissioners have the right to make such nt.

CITES CHARTER PROVISIONS.

This view of the law is borne out not y by the section of the charter to which ave referred and in the recent decision Judge Merwin in the Whittemore case. It is manifest from the so-called introtory of the very distinguished gentle- n charged with the task of preparing the arter, which will be found in Ash's edi- n of the charter at Pages 136 and 138, in ich they say:

"The charter has been constructed upon the prin- le that it is expedient to give to the city the power necessary to conduct its own af- rs. Similar protective principles are applied the water-front and waters constituting the rbor of New York. The charter recognizes the rbor as the parent of the city's present great- ss, and of her commercial supremacy now and the future. The charter proposed gives to the y, subject to vested private rights, which have en carefully protected, the control of the entire ter front, and of lands under water everywhere thin the city, so far as necessary to secure d develop the commerce foreign and domestic the city.

The city's position, however, has not re- ived recognition by the Land Commission- s. They have yielded to the application this private corporation, and are about receive a gift from the State upon the yment of the mere pittance I have sug- sted of lands under water which belong the city and which in the distant future, not in the near future, would hamper d cripple the commercial interests of the y, which have been intrusted to the man- ement of the Board of Docks and Ferries.

CALLS IT GROSS OUTRAGE.

I desire to raise my protest against s gross outrage, and have already ified a complaint in an action about be commenced to test the validity the Land Commissioner's action, but am apprehensive that before the pa- rs can be served and before I can obtain unctive relief—and I might state in pass- that no ex parte injunction can be ob- ned against a State board—you will be ed to affix your signature to the grant, I am very desirous that that shall not done until the legal questions involved disposed of by the courts.

May I ask, therefore, that you will hold your signature to the letters patent ll the question of an injunction can be mally passed upon by a Special Term ge of your district."

BRAVE LITTLE MARY SANDERS.

Burned While at Play Complains Only Because She Cannot See.

Mary Sanders, five years old, of 344 East Sixty-fifth Street, is lying perhaps fatally burned on a cot in Flower Hospital, as the result of playing "Ring Around a Rosie," the "Rosie" in the case being a bonfire. While playing in a vacant lot at 410 East Sixty-fifth Street yesterday afternoon she approached too near the flames, and in an instant her woolen dress was afire.

One of her companions, seven years old, Tommy McLane of 407 East Sixty-fifth Street, who held her hand, tried to beat out the flames with his hands, but with no effect. A street sweeper, attracted by the screams of the children, hurried to the child and wrapped his coat about her, and Mrs. McLane, mother of Tommy, arrived and applied her apron to the same purpose. Policeman Eisenberg of the East Fifty-first Street Police Station was the next arrival, and he called an ambulance from Flower Hospital.

Mary's father, William Sanders, assistant head waiter at the Manhattan Club, who had been enjoying his day off, arrived at the hospital soon after, and a pathetic scene followed. He fell upon his knees beside the cot. Little Mary did not cry. What she said was: "It doesn't hurt much papa, but I can't see. Why can't I see you?"

SCANNELL AND WHALEN SAIL.

Commissioner Taking Chief Croker's Locomobile to Cuba.

Corporation Counsel Whalen and Fire Commissioner Scannell sailed yesterday for Cuba on the Ward Line steamship Havana. George F. Scannell, Willis Holly, Lewis Nixon, Fire Chief Croker, and Police Captain Price were of the party which went to the pier to see them off.

Mr. Whalen said that he went purely for recreation, and Commissioner Scannell said that while he went also for recreation, he was taking with him the New York Fire Department Manual and book of rules for the inspection of the Havana Fire Department officials. He said that he was not taking any Fire Department equipment with him.

Not as equipment, but for his own use and incidentally for the inspection of the Cubans, he is taking with him, however, the mile-a-minute locomobile, which has been used as a fire wagon by Chief Croker. This was shipped at the last minute. "That machine will go faster than anything they've got in Cuba," said Chief Croker, as the wagon was shipped.

When the machine reaches Havana it will be located at the headquarters of the fire force in the Cuban city. It was said by the officials of the Ward Line that the locomobile would be the first machine of its kind in Cuba.

Chief Croker expects to have another locomobile ready for service in a few days, and meantime he will go to fires behind his old trotter.

COL. GAYNOR NOT WORRIED.

Only Asks a Fair Trial on Indictment for the Savannah Work.

Col. John F. Gaynor of Fayetteville, N. Y., who has been indicted by the United States Grand Jury at Savannah for conspiring with ex-Capt. Oberlin M. Carter and others to defraud the United States Government in the carrying out of contracts at Savannah, when seen at the Hoffman House yesterday was apparently in good spirits. Between puffs from his cigar and looking over his eye glasses he said:

"I don't appear very much disturbed, do I? This indictment does not surprise me. I expected it. But, of course, it was procured on ex-parte testimony. I have nothing to fear in the least, and all I ask for is a fair and speedy trial."

Col. Gaynor, who is one of the prime factors in the Atlantic Contracting Company, which secured the contracts for the Government work at Savannah, is Treasurer of the New York Democratic State Committee.

ARMY AND NAVY CLUBHOUSE.

For a New Building $25,000 Has Already Been Subscribed.

Gen. Willoughby Weston, Secretary of the Army and Navy Club, yesterday announced that $25,000 has already been subscribed to the fund for the purpose of building a new clubhouse in the up-town district convenient to Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue.

"The new building," said Gen. Weston, "will cost something more than $150,000, and as soon as the club fund reaches a sufficient amount construction of the building will be begun.

"The committee in charge of the details consists of Gen. J. Fred Pierson, President of the club; Capt. John M. Golding, Col. William D'Alton Mann, Gen. Gilbert H. McKibben, and others. The reason we require a larger house than that which we occupy at present is that we have a large non-resident membership composed principally of officers in the army and navy, and we want to be able to accommodate as many of them as possible in the clubhouse when they visit the city."

The plans of the new house, the site for which has not as yet been definitely selected, were made by Cable & Lucas, and are on exhibition in the present clubhouse. The facade is dignified and appropriate in design, the materials selected being white marble and red brick. The design calls for a frontage of 30 feet, and the plans provide for thirty sleeping apartments in addition to the reading, library, dining, and other rooms. It was said at the clubhouse last night that work will probably be begun early in the Spring.

MINT ROBBER'S TERM ENDING.

Cochran, Convicted in Philadelphia in 1893, May Be Released To-day.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—Providing he pays a fine of $1,000 imposed by Judge Butler when he was sentenced to seven years and three months in the Eastern Penitentiary, Henry S. Cochran will to-morrow be set free. The gates of the penitentiary may yet open for a few hours before the Mint robber's term expires, for efforts to secure for him a pardon, although they have failed up to the present time, may still prove successful.

When Cochran was arrested in 1893, after forty-three years of service as chief weigher, charged with an enormous theft of gold bullion from the vaults of the Philadelphia Mint, Ellery P. Ingham held the office of United States District Attorney, and his Assistant was Harvey K. Newitt. Now, just as Cochran is rounding out his term, Ingham and Newitt are starting upon their terms for aiding a gang of counterfeiters and bribing United States officers.

Deducting the time commutation for good behavior, Cochran's imprisonment will end to-morrow. Some time ago he made by personal letter an application to President McKinley for pardon. If such pardon is granted, the fine is remitted, and the thirty days further imprisonment which he would have to undergo in default of the payment when his regular term would end is also escaped.

PRINCIPALS ON UNIFICATION.

Discuss the Proposed Educational Bill and Suggest Changes.

ALBANY, Dec. 9.—The Committee on Legislation of the Associated Academic Principals of the State of New York in session here to-day discussed the tentative educational unification bill. The committee is of the opinion that only such changes as are indispensable to the one purpose of unification should be made, and the whole system should be carefully guarded against any possible influence of partisan politics.

After a protracted discussion the committee unanimously adopted resolutions to the effect—

That if there must be a concession to a supposed call for an "infusion of new blood," the number of new Regents appointed should be as small as possible; the precedent of appointing at once so many as nine seems dangerous, and hereafter all Regents should be appointed by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate.

Principals Farr of the Glens Falls Academy and Robinson of the Albany High School were selected a sub-committee to represent the committee at the next session of the Educational Commission, which sits next Thursday.

Sale in Aid of St. Mark's Hospital.

The women of the Auxiliary Society of St. Mark's Hospital have arranged an old curiosity sale of useful articles which have been presented by the many patrons and friends of the hospital. The sale is to take place next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, from 2 to 6 and 8 to 10 P. M.

Father Chidwick Goes to Cuba.

Among the passengers on the Ward Line steamer Havana, bound for Cuba, yesterday, was the Rev. John Chidwick, who was Chaplain of the Maine when she was blown up. Chaplain Chidwick, who is now attached to the Vermont, has been ordered to Havana to officiate at the disinterment of the bodies of the sailors and marines of the BROOKLYN'S WATER SITUATION.

Only Rain Within Ten Days Can Effect an Improvement.

At the Department of Water Supply in Brooklyn yesterday it was said there was no change in the local water situation from that indicated by Chief Engineer Van Buren in his report of last Wednesday. It was admitted that there was imminent danger of a water famine, and that only rain within the next ten days could effect an improvement in the situation.

Inspectors are at work trying to locate leaks, and the department is doing everything possible to prevent waste of water in the borough.

Engineer Van Buren says the great storage reservoir at Rockville Centre contains only 100,000,000 gallons of water. The capacity of this reservoir is over 1,000,000,000 gallons.

THE BROOKLYN WATER SUPPLY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Brooklyn is the danger point in the water supply of the city. That is very evident to any one who has followed the Ramapo water scheme especially those who have studied in detail the annual report for 1898 of the Commissioner of Water Supply. The papers are now telling us that the supply in the Ridgewood reservoir is about four feet, when it should be four or five times as much. I am told that the past few months have been dryer than the same months for 25 years past. Conditions have favored the Ramapo grabbers, and the present condition of the Brooklyn supply would doubtless have been urged as conclusive reason to close the contract, if it had not been for the complete and effectual exposure of the scheme by the newspapers of New York, even the well-timed expostulations of Controller Coler would not have availed without the splendid support given to him by the press.

About Brooklyn. To-day's TIMES says that Commissioner Dalton asks for $10,000,000:

Commissioner Dalton of the Department of Water Supply will soon make application to the Board of Estimate for an appropriation of $10,000,000, to extend and repair water works already in existence and to construct new works. The larger part of the money will be expended in Brooklyn.

Brooklyn ought to have more water, though she already has about two and a half times as much per capita as any of the great cities of Europe, and it is a question whether the very first efforts of Commissioner Dalton should not be applied to preventing the undoubted leakage and waste which now accounts for one-third to one-half of the water which reaches the city pipes, Engineer Birdsall to the contrary, notwithstanding.

Brooklyn will, however, need more water some day, and should soon set about procuring it; the first increase can be had very easily and cheaply. I quote from the annual report of 1898 of the Commissioner of Water Supply, Page 26:

"As to quantity of supply, the present watershed is capable of further development and considerable increase of obtainable supply. * * * A proper enlargement of pumping plant at Millburn Station * * * would alone add over 20,000,000 gallons per day to the present supply, if the conduit capacity west of Millburn is enlarged at the same time. By these and other means the necessity for acquiring additional watershed and sources can be put off for a few years."

Details follow, showing that all of this can be done at an expense of $1,500,000. Whether Mr. Dalton should be granted the $10,000,000 for which he asks is a question which should be carefully looked into, but the early and great relief to be obtained by this expenditure of $1,500,000, which will increase the water supply of Brooklyn more than 20 per cent., should be at once authorized and without a moment's delay. It has been discussed for years, the details are well known, and the engineer's reports, constantly repeated, are exact and conclusive. In The City Record of Aug. 25 of this year, in the quarterly report, it is again urged by Mr. Dalton:

"I cannot refrain from again presenting the urgent necessity of immediate measures to increase the water supply for the Borough of Brooklyn, especially the construction of the additional steel pipe conduit from Millburn to Spring Creek, whereby the supply from the easterly section of the watershed, part of which now runs to waste for want of sufficient conduit capacity, may be fully utilized."

In the Spring of 1897, in a series of articles on the Brooklyn water supply, Col. George E. Waring, an engineer of acknowledged standing, while pointing out the proper remedy, insisted that the chief reason for shortage of water was in the leakage and waste. The articles are too long to produce them at length, but I may quote from them later.

It is noteworthy, in spite of the excessive dryness of the present season, that there has been no complaint of a shortage of water on Manhattan Island.

Now, to my main issue, the leakage and waste of water. The Chief Engineer of the Water Department, Mr. Birdsall, told the Mazet committee that the leakage of water between the point where it crosses the Harlem and the delivery inside the house limits was much exaggerated, not exceeding 5 per cent. If that is true, then New York City is very much better off than any other large city of which records can be had. Mr. Croes, the civil engineer, in his excellent and authoritative article on this question, printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES of Oct. 29 last, said:

"There is no telling how many of the 600,000 joints in the mains and the 130,000 service taps are leaking all the time. Every year over 1,000 leaks in pipe joints and as many more in service pipes become so bad that they show at the surface of the ground and have to be repaired, but until they get as bad as that they go on dribbling away water into the ground and the sewers without detection. * * * The enormous quantity of water which has to be supplied, and which disappears somewhere, nobody can tell where."

For every leak that shows above ground it is safe to say that twenty go on dribbling away out of sight, Col. Waring well said: "Water works are not constructed for the sub-irrigation of the site of a town, but that is their general and increasing function." Private observation fully confirms this. An architect friend tells me he has known personally of many instances. The cellar of a house on Fifth Avenue and another on Madison Avenue were flooded with water, traced to a broken main. A plumber whom I questioned gave the same experiences with buildings down town. In a building near the Post Office of which I had charge, the tenants for years had trouble with the water. Old pipes were taken out and new ones put in, a pump placed to supply the upper floors, but it gradually got worse and the flow altogether ceased. An excavation in the street showed that a mass of loose brickwork rested upon the service pipe below the car track and had chafed till it cut the pipe fairly in two. The plumber told me that the steady flow from that small leak would have supplied five or six houses. The house was metered, and the tenants paid only for what they received, but the leak was outside the meter and the loss was the city's. So much for a small leak, now for a big one, also within my own observation. In the Summer of 1898 a large piece of Ninety-eighth Street just west of Amsterdam Avenue suddenly caved in. The area of subsidence was probably 15 by 20 feet. A very large excavation had to be made, when it was found that the sewer had caved in, caused by the breakage of a thirty-six-inch main which there runs to the pumping station in Ninety-eighth Street, and the writer for days and weeks saw a stream of crystal clear water large enough to float a rowboat flowing rapidly at the bottom of the excavation and disappearing in the sewer. A water main thirty-six inches in diameter would supply a large city, and this leak had been running no one knows how long, and it was not discovered till the street fell in. I am told that two six-inch mains were found in an east side street with ends open and running full tilt into the ground and thence into the river, which was close by. The leak never showed above ground and was discovered by accident, as are most of these leaks.

But must these leaks be left to accidental discovery? Not at all. There are several methods of finding leaks or waste, and then of locating them, and I am convinced from some study of the question that an expenditure of $250,000 per annum for this purpose alone for ten years would practically double the supply by detecting and preventing the leakage and waste. Details of the detecting system must wait for another letter.

Allow me to propound some questions which may be answered in further communications from others or myself. Who believes that every person on Manhattan Island uses or has an average 121 gallons of water per day; that is, that the average family, father, mother, and three children, (for it includes the babies,) received and used, either directly or indirectly, 605 gallons per day in 1898, Summer or Winter? How is the following constant increase of use to be accounted for: 1870, 72 gallons per head; 1880, 77 gallons per head, increase 5 gallons; 1890, 90 gallons per head, increase 13 gallons; 1898, 121 gallons per head, increase 31 gallons, or a total increase of 49 gallons per head, the increase alone being far more than the present total supply per capita of London, Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, Vienna, Liverpool, or Glasgow?

Are water meters a means of economy to the users? Can waste within the house line be lessened or stopped in any other way than by the use of meters? Does the Croton watershed catch or yield all the water we can use for fifty or more years to come, provided leakage and waste are stopped?

SPANISH WAR VETERANS SPLIT.

Call Has Been Issued to Form a New Association.

LANCASTER, Penn., Dec. 9.—William C. Liller of this city, former Adjutant General of the Association of Spanish War Veterans, organized in Washington, D. C., last September, has issued a call for a meeting of all Spanish war veterans, to be held at Trenton, N. J., next Thursday. The object of the meeting is to organize a new association or perfect the existing body.

This movement, Mr. Liller asserts, is due principally to the fact that civilians who did not participate in the war with Spain controlled the Washington meeting. Mr. Liller also declares that "qualified delegates were denied privileges as such" and "attempts were made to place the organization under the control of politicians for the advancement of personal interests."

MONUMENT FOR EX-GOV. CURTIN.

Pennsylvania Plans to Honor Her War Executive.

Special to The New York Times.

BELLEFONTE, Penn., Dec. 9.—It has been definitely decided here this week that a monument will be erected in Bellefonte in the near future to the memory of ex-Gov. A. G. Curtin, the War Governor of Pennsylvania. The Memorial Committee and the personal friends of the late Governor have made a canvass in Philadelphia and found that the warm and personal friends of ex-Gov. Curtin were anxious to contribute to this fund, but would not do so until they saw whether or not the movement would be supported by the people of Centre County.

On May 22, 1895, an act of Assembly was passed providing that in all counties the County Commissioners should appropriate $5,000 for the erection and maintenance of a monument in the county seat to the memory of the deceased soldiers and sailors. In many counties the appropriation has been made and monuments have been raised, but up to this week nothing definite had been done here by those in charge.

At this week's term of court, D. F. Fortney and Senator W. C. Heinle appeared before the Grand Jury and presented a large petition of those favoring the appropriation of $5,000 by the County Commissioners toward the erection of a monument to ex-Gov. Curtin and the soldiers. Yesterday the Grand Jury made a favorable report that the County Commissioners should appropriate a sum not exceeding $5,000. As there are a number of other private subscriptions already received throughout the county, it is expected that this action will be sufficient to prove to those interested in the erection of this monument in Philadelphia and other cities that it is the desire of Centre County to make a suitable memorial to this War Governor and the old soldiers.

The Memorial Committee is expected to have little trouble now in raising the sum necessary before any definite work be begun. The question which is now puzzling those in charge of this matter is, whether or not this memorial can be in the form of a public library, or whether it has to be a monument. From present indications it is expected that those favoring a public library will have to yield their position and agree to a large statue.

Water Tower Runs Into a Cable Car.

While on its way to a small fire at 363 Canal Street last evening water tower No. 1, located on Chambers Street, in charge of Driver John Hoey, ran into a southbound cable car at Broadway and Canal Street, wrecking the rear platform of the car and breaking the pole of the truck.

TRAIN KILLS MAN AND HORSE.

Daniel Donohue Met Instant Death—Companion Mortally Hurt.

HIGHTSTOWN, N. J., Dec. 9.—Daniel Donohue and Otto Cramer this evening attempted to drive across the track in front of a train from New York. The locomotive struck the vehicle and the occupants were thrown a distance of thirty feet.

Donohue and the horse were instantly killed, and Cramer, who is believed to be mortally hurt, was removed to the hospital here. The wagon was wrecked.

NO TIDINGS OF THE NIAGARA.

Consignees of the Steamer's Cargo Have Abandoned Hope.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 9.—There were no tidings this morning from the Canadian steamer Niagara, supposed to have foundered in Lake Erie in the gale of Tuesday, with a crew of sixteen men. The Inland Lloyds have searching parties watching the Canadian shore over a sixty-mile strip, extending to Long Point, where the steamer was last seen. Haines & Co., lumber dealers, consignees of the Niagara's cargo of shingles, said this morning that they had practically abandoned hope for the vessel's safety. The Niagara's cargo consisted of 3,400,000 shingles, insured for $8,200. The vessel was valued at $24,000, and was uninsured.

Capt. MacIntosh of the steamer Majestic, which arrived here to-day, reports passing a quantity of wreckage in the vicinity of Mohawk, mostly shingles. He also saw the top of a deckhouse, bottom side up. The stanchions were painted white, which is said to have been the color of the Niagara's stanchions.

J. Matthews of Toronto, owner of the steamer, has not given up hope of hearing from the vessel. He states that the decks of the steamer had been painted red. Reports of the wreckage found say green-painted planking, small windows, with red painted frames, and the top of a pilot house painted red and green were seen floating with the shingles supposed to have been a part of the vessel's cargo.

Capts. Hutchinson and Frick of the steamers Centurion and Fedora, respectively, who arrived here to-day, reported passing through wreckage and say there is no doubt that the Niagara has gone to the bottom. That is also the general opinion in marine circles.

Lake Steamer Destroyed by Fire.

ST. JOSEPH, Mich., Dec. 9.—The steamer Mary, owned by the Graham and Morton Transportation Company, was destroyed by fire here to-day. Capt. W. A. Boswell of the steamer City of Louisville was asleep on the boat and had a narrow escape. The Mary was recently purchased in Port Huron and was intended for the Chicago-Waukegan-Kenosha route.

Quarantine Against Infected Trees.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 9.—Owing to the possible infection of fruit orchards by the importation from other States or foreign countries of fruit trees infected with worms, scale, or other parasites, the Association of Horticultural Commissioners of Southern California has drafted a bill to be submitted to Congress proposing the establishment of a National quarantine against infected nursery stock of all kinds imported from foreign countries. The bill contains provisions of similar nature to operate as an inter-State law.

Arizona to Fight for Statehood.

PHOENIX, Arizona, Dec. 9.—An enthusiastic mass meeting was held here last night to start a movement to secure Statehood at the present session of Congress. Prominent men from all parts of Arizona were in attendance and took part. Gov. N. O. Murphy was elected Chairman of a committee of thirty which will go to Washington early in January to advocate Statehood.

GLASSMAKERS RAISE WAGES.

Also Reduce the Price of Certain Products—Rate War in Sight.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 9.—After an idleness of more than six months, the window glass workers of the country will go to work Dec. 30. The last settlement of the scales was accomplished last night. Cutters will receive an advance of about 5 per cent. and flatteners about 6 per cent. After the settlement was made, the Directors of the American Glass Company announced that all men going to work in their factories would be given two weeks wages—"market money"—in advance. The settlement will give employment to about 10,000 men who are now idle.

With the settlement comes the announcement by the American Window Glass Company that there is a cut of 33 1-3 per cent. in the price of single strength and 40 per cent. on double strength window glass, effective forthwith and on all orders now on hand. This is a tacit announcement that war is to be waged upon the independent and co-operative manufacturers.

"Auto" Permit for Mr. Seligman.

Park Commissioner Clausen yesterday granted a permit to Jefferson Seligman of 11 East Sixty-ninth Street to drive his electric automobile over the roads of Central Park. The Park police, however, were not notified of the permit in time for it to be read to the squad which went on duty at noon, and when Mr. and Mrs. Seligman approached the entrance of the Park at Sixtieth Street and Fifth Avenue in the afternoon with a view of entering the East Drive, they were stopped by Policemen Keenan and Carey. Mr. Seligman was allowed to proceed, however, when he showed his permit.

Fatal Boiler Explosion in Maine.

KENNEBUNKPORT, Me., Dec. 9.—A large boiler in the yard of Charles Ward, a shipbuilder here, exploded this morning, killing Alden Wildes, engineer, and causing general havoc in the yard. Engineer Wildes was alone when the accident happened. Those who heard the noise of the explosion and rushed to the yard found everything in the vicinity of the steam plant a wreck. Nothing but fragments of the engineer's body could be found. He was fifty-five years old, and leaves a widow. An investigation to ascertain the cause of the accident will be held.

Surgeon's Wife Accidentally Killed.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Mrs. Marie Bradfield, wife of Dr. George M. Bradfield, United States Army Surgeon at Fort Ontario, was found dead in bed by her husband this morning. In the course of the night she accidentally took an overdose of chloroform to relieve a headache. She was twenty-four years of age and a daughter of a former Burgomaster of Brussels, Belgium.

Thieves Strip a Summer Residence.

HUNTINGTON, L. I., Dec. 9.—Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Barclay Ward, owners of the Brandageo property on Lloyd's Neck yesterday discovered that almost everything inside their Summer residence there, including furniture and paintings, had been carried off by thieves. Mr. and Mrs. Ward are now living in their Winter home on West Neck.

Brakeman Killed by a Train.

YORK, Penn., Dec. 9.—Charles E. Warrener of Baltimore, a Northern Central Railroad brakeman, was cut in two by a freight train north of this city early this morning. It is supposed that Warrener slipped from the icy roof of a box car and fell in front of a passing freight train.

VAGRANT ELECTRIC CURRENTS.

Damage Done by Them in Chicago Lead to Official Action.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—The Law Department of the City Government is preparing an opinion as to the power of the city to force street railway companies to provide their rails with proper connections to prevent leakage of electricity and the consequent damage to water and other pipes laid below the track.

A burst in a water main was reported, and workmen found, on laying bare the pipe, that a hole an inch in diameter had been eaten entirely through it, while in other places the pipe was almost as badly eaten away. The leak was nine feet below the surface of the ground, immediately under a street car line. In another street an eight-inch main burst, and when an excavation was made it was found that a large hole had been eaten through the iron. This main was also nine feet below the street car track. The city electrician also has had trouble with electrolytic action on conduits for electric light and telephone wires, and on several occasions has been obliged to tear conduits that were practically newly la

Census Building Nears Completion.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The new Census Building at the corner of B and First Streets, Northwest, is now practically ready, and it is expected that all of the present force will be at work there by the holidays. The building cost $120,000 and the contract called for its completion on Jan. 1, 1900. The force is to be increased in the Spring, by July the entire force of about 3,000 will be at work in the new building.

Ottoe Indians File a Claim.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—A delegation of six Otoe Indians from Oklahoma has arrived here, and to-day filed at the Indian Bureau an agreement drafted between them and Inspector McLaughlin, who accompanied them, disposing of the Otoe-Missouri claim against the settlers. This claim follows the sale of their lands some years ago and the agreement submitted contemplates an award of $110,000 claimed to be due the Indians.

Government Distribution of Seeds.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The Department of Agriculture will begin its distribution of seeds a little earlier this year than last, shipping them South at the beginning of January and perhaps a little earlier. This year the seeds for distribution to all parts of the country will consist of 13,000,000 packets of vegetable seeds and 1,508,000 of flower seeds, besides field and lawn grass seeds.

A Farmer Hangs Himself.

LYONS, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Benjamin Story, a farmer living a mile north of Marengo, committed suicide to-day by hanging himself in his orchard. Some time ago his mother died, and shortly after her death his wife was taken ill and died. Story had been moody since. When all of the other occupants of his house were away to-day he went to the orchard and hanged himself.

Will Quarantine Against Texas Fever.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The usual annual quarantine order against the area where the splenetic or Southern (Texas) fever exists among cattle will be issued shortly by the Department of Agriculture, to take effect Jan. 1. The order will be substantially like that of last year.

Will Oversee Paris Postal Exhibit.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—George W. Beavers, chief of the salary allowance division of the Post Office Department, has been designated to take charge of the postal exhibit at the Paris Exposition.

The Ehrich stores are ready to welcome you in holiday tone. Every effort has been exerted to make the time you spend here an unalloyed pleasure. Of course, we shall be crowded, more so every day, but you can influence that more than we. It's a satisfactory plan to buy early—mutually satisfactory for yourselves and the Ehrich stores.

There's music in the third-floor Toy Store, and Santa Claus is there with a Souvenir Gift for every good child. We also take the Children's Pictures free of charge. It occupies but a moment, and the result is a pleasing keepsake. It's hardly just to call holiday articles bargains, but following items will be found reasonable—far below the ordinary:

Christmas Notes of Good Furniture.

Our large new Furniture Store has been greatly strengthened with a handsome line of Holiday Pieces—such pieces as are at once useful and ornamental. We have told you of the large space devoted to this store. Every inch of it is occupied by values such as these:

CHICAGO BEATS WISCONSIN

Maroons Win the Football Championship of the West.

FINAL SCORE IS 17 TO 0

Victors' Defensive Play a Surprise to the Badgers—Interference Helped to Make the Score.

MADISON, Wis., Dec. 9.—The Western football championship goes to Chicago. Before at least 12,000 persons, the eleven of the University of Chicago to-day defeated the University of Wisconsin team by a score of 17 to 0, in a game that, for desperate playing, for clean, scientific football, has probably never been equaled on a Western gridiron. No flukes marred the victory of the sturdy Chicago players, and to-night for the first time in years, the Maroons can lay claim to an undisputed title to the championship.

It was a game between a team which, in offensive playing was perfect, with weather and wind in its favor, and an eleven whose defensive play up to to-day had been compact enough to protect their goal line from all opposing elevens except Yale. But Chicago's mass plays were irresistible, and, though the Badgers fought until they could fight no more, through the first half, and once in the second half, the Maroon backs plunged through Wisconsin's line until the ball was carried over the goal line.

Only once did Wisconsin have even a chance to score, and that one chance they were unable to improve, as with the ball on their own fifteen-yard line, the Chicago forwards braced so effectively that on four downs the ball was only shoved forward three yards. In this respect the Chicago players surprised their supporters. Their defensive play was far stronger than expected, and even when Wisconsin had the ball, which was seldom, O'Dea was compelled to kick in most instances.

Throughout the whole game the Badgers were on the defensive, most of the time with the ball well into their territory. Chicago quickly located the weak spots in the Badgers' defense. They were mostly on the left side of the line and in the first half Slaker, Fell, Hamill, and Henry, behind interference that was apparently unbreakable, tore through the tackle and guard positions for gains that almost invariably netted the distance.

Curtiss, the Wisconsin right tackle, played a whirlwind game, and he tore through Fell time and again, and in time to spoil the play. He was easily the star of the Wisconsin eleven.

The whirling mass on tackle, the most effective play of Chicago's team, was often directed against him, but it never netted more than three yards, and frequently Curtiss stopped the play before it was fairly started. At the other side of the line it came easier. Flannigan, Webb, and Eldredge held their men safe, and when Slaker or Fell was sent against the line the ball generally found a resting place several yards in advance of where it started.

In the second half Comstock, exhausted and limping, retired in favor of Lerum, and little Tratt also went out, Wilmarth taking his place. But it made little difference. The game had already been won, and, although Lerum made big Flannigan's life a burden to him for the balance of the game, the rest of the team was too exhausted to make any headway.

During the latter part of the second half Chicago played to keep Wisconsin from scoring, and once Kennedy adopted the tactics of Capt. McBride of Yale and dropped back twenty yards to hold the ball.

Chicago's interference was far superior to Wisconsin's, and to this fact more than any other must be ascribed the victory. Once the ball was put in place, every man on the team was pushing, pulling, or helping the runner to keep his feet until the whistle was blown for a down. Even when tackled the Chicago backs and tackles, Fell and Webb, being frequently used, struggled forward until crushed down by a mass of players.

Wisconsin's interference, on the other hand, was more easily broken up, and at no stage of the game was the ball advanced more than ten yards. Two hours before the game a cold, drizzling rain began to fall, and throughout the battle showers fell frequently. The rain did not have much effect on the field, but it was sufficiently heavy to render the ball wet and slippery, and fumbles on both sides were frequent.

When the referee's whistle was blown for the end of the game, nearly a thousand cheering rooters broke out on the gridiron, climb into the waiting carriages. The teams lined up as follows:

Wisconsin.	Position.	Chicago.
Blair	Left tackle	Fell
Chamberlain	Centre	Speed
Rogers	Right guard	Flannigan
Curtiss	Right tackle	Webb
Hymen	Right end	Cassels
Tratt, Wilmarth	Quarter back	Kennedy
Peele	Left half	Henry
Larson	Right half	Hamill
O'Dea	Full back	Slater

Starbuck Is Again Cornell's Captain.

ITHACA, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Raymond D. Starbuck was to-day re-elected Captain of the Cornell football team. Starbuck will graduate next year from the College of Civil Engineering, and will then have played on Cornell's 'Varsity team for four years. His regular position has been at full-back. He entered Cornell from Glens Falls, N. Y. He is twenty-two years old, and is a popular man in his class.

BALTUSROL GOLFER A WINNER.

C. M. Hamilton, the new champion of the Baltusrol Golf Club, Short Hills, N. J., and one of the leading competitors for the chief trophy in the recent Lakewood open tournament, won the lowest gross score prize yesterday in the open handicap match played on the links of the Lakewood Golf Club. His score was 89, and Robert Phifer who won first prize in the handicap, was close to him with 90, the latter's handicap, however, giving him the net score of 82 strokes. Jasper Lynch and W. H. Davis, two of the club's strongest golfers, were absent, being in Atlantic City practicing on the Country Club links there for the Atlantic City tournament, which begins next Thursday.

Fourteen scores were turned in. They are the cards of the first and second in the handicap, and the lowest gross score given in full:

AT SEVENTH REGIMENT RANGES.

Result of the Non-Sharpshooters' and Class Matches.

Thirty-eight contestants were entered in the non-sharpshotters' and class matches shot last night at the Seventh Regiment Armory ranges. The former is open to all members of the regiment except those who in any armory rifle club match, or in any competition for the Abeel trophy, have made a score of 85 points or better. Seven shots are fired standing at 200 yards and seven prone at 500 yards. Six prizes were awarded in the following order:

	200 Yards.	500 Yards.	Total.
Private D. Braidreth, Co. I	33	34	67
Private B. H. Weisker, Co. E	30	34	64
Private W. S. French, Co. E	30	34	64
Private A. B. Wade, Co. K	31	31	62
Private W. O. Raymond, Co. G	31	31	62
Corp. W. S. Covell, Co. F	30	32	62

In the class match all scores having the same numerical value constitute a class. Five prizes are awarded, the first being accorded the contestant making the best score in the highest class; the second to the contestant making the best score in the second class, and in a like manner through the fifth class. Seven shots are fired standing at 200 yards and seven prone at 500 yards. The winners last night were:

	200 Yards.	500 Yards.	Total.
A. Stein, veteran	34	33	67

Private J. P. Fell, Co. G	32	32	64
Private A. C. Briner, Co. G	31	32	63

The following additional qualifications as sharpshooters were made last night:

	200 Yards.	500 Yards.	Total.
Corp. R. McLean, Co. K	33	33	66
Private W. D. Edwards, Co. F	31	34	65
Private D. Brandreth, Co. I	33	34	67

Boxing Tournament in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 9.—The Olympic Club of this city is arranging for a boxing

Invitations have been sent to the following athletic clubs to participate in the contests: New York Athletic Club, Knickerbocker Athletic Club, and Pastime Athletic Club of New York; Boston Athletic Club, Chicago Athletic Club, Denver Athletic Club, Baltimore Athletic Club, Multnomah Athletic Club of Portland, Oregon, and the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

MILLER AND WALLER WIN.

Capture the First Prize in the Bicycle Race, with Maya and McEachern a Close Second.

Sixteen wheelmen, worn down some of them into almost a state of collapse in their long struggle against nature, finished their weary six days' ride in Madison Square Garden last night.

They had ridden as teams for six days, fourteen of them in relays of twelve hours each, in order that a six days' continuous contest, which might still be within the limits of the Collins law, might be held and the other two as individual riders, twelve hours each day, except yesterday, when they had to ride only eleven hours each.

Charles W. Miller and Frank Waller, both veterans at long-distance contests, were the winners; Otto Maya and Archie McEachern were second, and Gimm and Pierce got into third place, and fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh prizes went, respectively, to Fisher and Chevalier, Stevens and Turville, Babcock and Stinson, and Schineer and Forster. For the high individual score, "Bobby" Walthour, the plucky Georgian, whose partner, Jay Eaton, was obliged to quit early in the week, won a prize of $500. He rode 1,402 miles and 8 laps.

The race was productive of a record-breaking score, for up to the present match the record for a one-hundred-and-forty-two-hour contest was 2,190 miles, made by Miller in a continuous ride last year. With Waller this year, Miller rolled up a new record of 2,733 miles and 4 laps.

From the start until the last lap the race was the closest sort of a contest. Only a lap or two of the Garden track held the lead for the team in front, and a spill, or a punctured wheel might at any moment mean the loss of first place to any team. As it was, hard luck probably cost Maya and McEachern, the Canadians, first place. A spill and a puncture, the latter during the day, cost them several laps, and they were beaten by a shorter distance than that.

The crowd that visited the Garden yesterday was the largest of the week, especially at the evening show. There were a number of short-distance events to vary the monotony of the dull, continuous grind, and when the six-day contest ended both balconies and all of the arena seats were crowded, and standing room on the floor inside of the track was at a premium. The score:

Riders.	Miles.	Laps.
Miller-Waller	2,733	4
Maya-McEachern	2,733	2
Gimm-Pierce	2,733	1
Fisher-Chevallier	2,732	9
Stevens-Turville	2,732	7
Babcock-Stinson	2,682	3
Schneer-Forster	2,465	4

MORIARTY'S BROKEN NECK.

Doctors at Yonkers Hospital Uncertain as to His Recovery.

YONKERS, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Bartholomew Moriarty, sixty-five years old, of Dobbs Ferry, who yesterday walked from his home to St. Joseph's Hospital, here, a distance of six miles, having a broken neck, is still free from any ill-effects from his remarkable walk. He is resting in bed as comfortably as possible, propped up with pillows.

The doctor said it was impossible to say at present whether the old man would recover. Dr. O'Neil said that his neck was broken between the third and fourth vertebrae. The pressing of the broken part against his spinal column has resulted in

BILLIARD TOURNEY'S PROGRESS.

Local Players Fail to Qualify for Class B Finals.

The qualifying preliminary rounds in the Class B amateur billiard tournament at the Knickerbocker Athletic Club were finished yesterday. In the afternoon Threshie defeated Tobias, and in the evening Hendrick disposed of Miller. This leaves the two Boston men, Cutler and Threshie, Hevner of Philadelphia, Kellogg of Chicago, and Smith of St. Louis to play in the finals, which will be started to-morrow. None of the New York players succeeded in qualifying.

In the Hendrick-Miller game the final score was 300 to 292. Hendrick averaged 3 42-86, and his highest run was 21. Miller made an average of 3 37-85, his best run being 31. Threshie scored 300 when Tobias had but 140. The former's highest run was 29, and his average was 5 40-52. Tobias made an average of 2 34-52, and his best run was 13.

At Daly's Academy last evening Muldaur and Arnold, the low men of the inter-city and inter-club tournament, were the players, and the former won by a score of 220 to 192. Muldaur made an average of 2 88-77 and a break of 32. Arnold's best run was 17, and his average 2 40-76.

LEXINGTON HORSE NEWS.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 9.—O. H. Chenault has sold to Ferguson & Walker of Atlanta, Ga., fifty-five head of thoroughbred brood mares, the same purchased at the auction sales by the American Breeders' Association. The mares are sold shorn of their pedigrees. They are nearly all with foal to Kentucky thoroughbred stallions. The other horses bought by the association have been sold to Dr. R. W. Bragg of Hot Springs, Ark., and the Sells Brothers' Circus.

W. O. Scully, trainer for Gideon & Daly, left here to-day with two carloads of thoroughbred brood mares for New York. One is Fairy Queen, purchased of Milton Young for a long price.

The Thoroughbred Record Sold.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 9.—The well-known turfmen John S. Wallace and Campbell Scott of this city, son of Joseph Scott, a Lexington financier, have purchased The Thoroughbred Record, a paper published by Willis Field here, and founded by the late B. G. Bruce. The library of the paper is the most extensive and thorough in the world for thoroughbred horse literature. The price is private.

Twelfth Regiment Wins at Baseball.

The baseball game at the Ninth Regiment Armory, in West Fourteenth Street, yesterday afternoon, between nines of the Ninth and Twelfth Regiments, resulted in the latter's victory by a score of 20 to 9. The batteries were: Ninth Regiment—Deegan, pitcher; Ammon, catcher; Twelfth Regiment—Brady, pitcher; Mandell, catcher.

HOME FOR OLD WOMEN CLOSED.

Trustees Opposed to Committee Trenton Ministers Appointed.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 9.—The Kinzie Rowan Home for Aged and Infirm Women is closed to-day because Mr. Rowan, who gave the home to the Methodists of the State, was apparently unwilling to have the institution conducted by young women.

The Home was opened last Tuesday, and five applicants were received. A committee consisting of fifty-five young women was appointed by the association of Trenton ministers to manage it.

When the Trustees of the home appointed by the New Jersey Methodist Episcopal Conference heard of the appointment of the Managing Committee they promptly notified the women that the Trenton ministers had nothing to do with the home, and that the conference Trustees would refer the whole subject of the home's management back to the conference, which does not meet until next March.

The fifty-five young women held a meeting last night. They said that if the Trenton ministers stood by them they would conduct the home despite the action of the conference Trustees. The ministers pointed out to the women that the Conference had title to the property, and that it was best to close the home.

The women decided, however, to retain a lawyer to try and find out just who owns the home.

In the meantime Kenzie Rowen has started for Florida.

EXPLOSION HURTS FIVE MEN.

Dynamite Stick in a Trench Was Struck by a Pick.

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Five men in the employ of Bellow & Merrit, contractors, were badly injured this afternoon while at work on the old Boston Post Road. The men were blasting and had set five sticks of dynamite.

They were touched off and Foreman William McDonald and four laborers went into the pit to resume the work of laying gas mains, which are to connect New Rochelle and Larchmont. Soon after starting to remove the broken rock there was a terrific explosion, and the five men were hurled into the air.

One of the sticks of dynamite for some reason had not exploded with the others, and it was struck with a pick. All the men were badly cut about the face, arms, and legs by flying stones. They were taken to New Rochelle and cared for. None of the injured men are in danger.

Thieves Desecrate Church Altar.

Thieves broke into the Roman Catholic Church of St. Anthony of Padua, West Hoboken, early yesterday morning. They broke open the poor boxes, and also stole a gold cross and necklace from the statue of the Infant Jesus, near the altar. They also attempted to burn an altar card that stood in front of the tabernacle, as was shown by its charred edges and several partly burned matches lying near it.

Sterling Pianos

EXPERT PIANISTS recognize the superior merits of the MODERN STERLING UPRIGHT GRANDS, because of their PURE tone, their easy and responsive action, and their wonderful sustaining qualities.

"They are mechanically perfect, and Artistically beautiful."

RELIABLE PIANOS. When you purchase a piano don't waste your money on the Cheap Unknown Kinds advertised by unscrupulous dealers, and invariably "WARRANTED JUST as GOOD" as the STERLING or other standard makes.

NO REPUTATION WHATEVER. Remember that "GOOD PIANOS" invariably bear the manufacturer's name. Pianos "STENCILED" with a "DEALER'S NAME" are usually of an inferior grade, and are known as MERCANTILE PIANOS, made to sell to any dealer, and ready for any name he orders.

AVOID DECEPTION by purchasing a reliable make of a reliable manufacturer. During our 40 years' experience we have made and sold over 123,000 Sterlings, and in Brooklyn we have sold over 6,500.

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL. Our WHOLESALE and RETAIL warerooms are surely an attraction for piano buyers, for here you can see 300 beautiful upright pianos of every design and quality, and at a saving of $50.00 to $150.00 below dealers' prices.

STERLING UPRIGHT GRANDS, $300.00 to $500.00.
SLIGHTLY USED STERLINGS, $200.00, $225.00, $250.00.

TROUBLE AT KOSTER & BIAL'S.

Just who was in charge at Koster & Bial's Theatre last night was a puzzling question. This uncertainty of ownership, however, did not in any way interfere with the play or the audience. As for the players, they did not care who owned them so long as they were sure of their pay. This last contingency was being looked after by a representative of the members of the company playing "Around New York in 80 Minutes."

About five weeks ago the theatre was leased by the Robert Biel syndicate from Judson Wells, representing the Koster & Bial estate. Shortly after the lease was acquired the lessees made a contract with William A. Brady to become Managing Director.

Mr. Brady at once set about to secure an attraction in place of the vaudeville programme which had been prevailing. In line with this determination, he secured the services of Edward Fales Coward, J. Cheever Goodwin, and J. T. Waldron, who arranged the play now on the boards. From the very first the play was a success.

Notwithstanding this fact, rumors were current on Friday that there were financial troubles. Creditors of the theatre began to ask for their money, and as this condition of affairs did not meet with Mr. Brady's approval, he, after a conference with Simon Dessau, the representative of the syndicate, tendered his resignation.

On Thursday night Mr. Brady had discovered one of the employes of the box office taking the receipts of the evening away in his pocket, instead of placing them in a vault, as Mr. Brady supposed was being done. Mr. Brady at once conferred with members of the company, with the result that a man representing their interests was placed in the box office.

Robert Biel, who leased the theatre, has left the city, and Simon Dessau claims to be in full control of Mr. Biel's interest. Since the play has been put on it is understood the weekly receipts have been between $8,000 and $10,000. It is said that a company is to be organized by Mr. Brady to occupy the theatre.

Simon Dessau is the man who was interested last season with A. H. Chamberlyn in the productions of "The Sorrows of Satan" at the Broadway Theatre, the venture terminating abruptly, owing, it was said, to financial difficulties.

"Dick" Bernard, who plays many of the principal rôles in the piece, stated after the performance last night that on Friday night Mr. Brady came to the company and informed them that he had tendered his resignation as managing Director and thereafter they would have to look to Mr. Dessau for any money the Biel syndicate might owe them.

"This statement," continued Mr. Bernard, "coming from Mr. Brady, caused suspicion in the company, and they forthwith appointed me to place some one representing them in the box office to see that the salaries for this week, due next Tuesday, were taken out of the receipts of every performance up to Monday.

"The box has been done, and when we feel sure of our money we will resume work. It is the intention of the principal

NEW SCHOOL AT SOUND BEACH.

Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod and Others Subscribe to Build One.

Special to The New York Times.

STAMFORD, Dec. 9.—Owing to the efforts of Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, Edwin Binney, and other prominent Summer residents of Sound Beach, that suburb is soon to have a school house which will be a credit to the place. A few weeks ago Mrs. Tod offered to present the sum of $1,200 for the establishment of a kindergarten in conjunction with the school.

The present school house is a typical country one, and is inadequate in size. A district meeting was held to consider Mrs. Tod's offer, and at the meeting Edwin Binney suggested that a new school house be built and that the funds be raised by subscription. This idea met with favor and an adjournment was taken till last night.

At last night's meeting it was evident that the movement would meet with success. In all $10,000 will be required, but it is believed that only half that amount will have to be raised. Among the larger contributors are Mrs. J. Kennedy Tod, $1,200; Commodore Tyson, $500; Edwin Binney, $250; A. A. Marks, $250, and George Marks, $50.

MACFARLANE'S BODY UNCLAIMED

Sudden Death of a Man Whose Name Only Is Known.

The body of J. D. Macfarlane, whose late address is not known, is in Hudson Street Hospital, unclaimed. He died under peculiar circumstances.

Macfarlane was taken from the office building, at 35 Broad Street, shortly after 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in an unconscious condition, and died without recovering consciousness at 6 o'clock. He had been visiting a man named Dinsmore, on the top floor of the building, for about an hour, and came down on the elevator, and stood about the hall as if waiting for some acquaintance.

He was suddenly seized with a fit and fell to the floor in the hall. He recovered from this attack, but was attacked again, and Policeman Nelson M. Hart of the Old Slip Station was called in. He sent for an ambulance, and while waiting for it endeavored to get the man's name and address. "Never mind that," replied Macfarlane. "I'm all right and will go home in a few minutes. There's nothing the matter with me."

He was removed to the hospital by Surgeon Sherrill, who diagnosed the case as epilepsy. There was no money in the man's pockets, and it was stated at the hospital that the papers in his pockets gave his name, but no more information about him.

Union Reform Party to Nominate.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 9.—The Union Reform Party will nominate by direct vote a Presidential ticket in 1900 on the established platform of the party, which consists of a single plank advocating the initiative and referendum method for all legislation, both State and National. This decision was reached to-day by the National Executive Committee of the party at a conference in this city with the Ohio State Executive Committee. A proposition to consider the advisability of fusion with the Democratic Party on Presidential candidates was promptly defeated, as was also a suggestion to enlarge the platform of the party. It was decided to nominate State tickets in every State where an organization can be effected.

Extension of Civil Service Rules.

According to State Civil Service Commissioner Burt, the extension of the civil rules to county offices will not take place until late in January or early in February, although it was expected that the rules would be in operation last month. Numerous difficulties have arisen, Col. Burt said yesterday, which have tended to delay the extension. Chief among them is that caused by the centralization of supervision at Albany. The State Board, which has charge of the supervision, will have to pass on the pay rolls for a dozen counties, and the question of how to obviate delay and friction is one that has to be solved before the plan can be put into operation.

Sudden Death of C. C. Briggs.

ABRAHAM AND STRAUS

BROOKLYN.

Christmas shopping has now begun in good earnest. This store, we believe, has greatly simplified the vexatious problem of "what and where to buy." Our thirty-five years' business activity and experience in catering to the wants of an intelligent and discriminating community has made this store an integral part and a factor in Brooklyn. Our store is indigenous with Brooklyn's growth, and the phenomenal and continuous strides of the business, now by far the largest in Brooklyn, is irrefutable evidence that our methods are right and acceptable. It is not an ephemeral or mushroom growth; it is based on incarnated, solid, square, consistent business principles which have won your confidence and respect, as well as that of all fair-minded competitors, and which we intend to retain. From a small beginning thirty-five years ago our establishment has reached such proportions that we now have over 4,000 employes on our pay roll, exclusive of our factory hands. Every device, however costly, that promotes the comfort of our patrons and lightens the labor of our helpers has been introduced into our store.

We are pardonably proud of our achievements, and our largely augmented holiday business this season is ample attestation that our efforts are not unappreciated.

Important News From Toy Land.

Jewelry for Gift Buyers.

Probably none of the stocks that go to make up our vast aggregation of Holiday Stores, affords su rich a harvest of Gift things as our Jewelry Collection. Certainly it has never been so attractive either in size or merit as it is this year. And if we may judge from the large selections which Christmas shoppers have already made, it meets with your heartiest approval. We have been unusually careful in gathering this collection, and while OUR PRICES ARE DECIDEDLY LOWER than those prevailing anywhere else, every article you'll find here is worthy and desirable, from the silver trinket costing a few cents to the diamond tiara costing more than two thousand dollars. The mention of these two extremes indicates the scope of the variety. No matter how much or how little you wish to spend you'll have no difficulty in choosing something suitable and you'll save money on each purchase.

Cut Glass and Silver for Holiday Gifts.

No one has ever invented anything to take the place of Cut Glass and Silverware. Manufacturers may produce inferior articles, but you don't have to buy them. The "cut glass" that is as dull as lead and the "silver" that's as light as tin tells its own value.

Our Cut Glass and Silverware show at a glance what they are—rich, handsome pieces, expressive of refinement.

Have you seen the Demi-colored Cut Glass? It's a novelty. And so are the French gray bordered Silver Pieces.

CAPITOL CHIMNEYS CONQUERED.

The Wind No Longer Blows Smoke Into the Rooms.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The long struggle to overcome the defects of the old-fashioned chimneys of the Capitol and make them conform to the customs of the end of the century has at last been made partially successful. These chimneys, which number nearly a hundred, were built when open grate fires were the usual means of heating. They do not draw well, and when high winds prevail the committee rooms are frequently ornamented with smoke and ashes. This did not make much difference in the days when the Capitol furniture was plain and simple, but it is a more serious matter now.

Countless devices have been tried, and the struggle between the Capitol chimneys and human ingenuity has gone on for many years. Each chimney has been studied and operated on separately, and different patents have been used. Now a device has been put in which prevents the wind from blowing down the chimneys, and the victory is practically complete.

BIG COAL AND IRON DEAL.

Southern Properties Acquired to Form a Great Manufacturing Plant.

A statement was issued yesterday by J. M. Billups, Jr., of 120 Broadway, to the effect that contracts were entered into and signed at 10:30 o'clock yesterday morning by which some extensive Southern coal and iron properties changed hands. The negotiations were carried through by F. C. Dunn of Chicago, who has been at the Waldorf-Astoria for several weeks.

The properties included in the deal are the Woodstock Iron Company, which is equipped with two blast furnaces; 46,000 acres of coal and iron lands; adjacent lands of the Gurnee Land Company, comprising 20,000 acres; furnaces at Anniston, Ala.; 18,000 acres of coal lands in Tennessee, and the coke oven plant of the Aetna Coal Company. The consideration is said to exceed $1,000,000.

Mr. Dunn, who returned to Chicago last night, has plans pending for the consolidation of these and other coal and iron properties in the South, and the new company is designed to control one of the most extensive pig-iron plants in the country.

Mr. Billups, who gave out the statement, said that he could not give the personnel of the new company, as it might interfere with further plans. Among those who were interested as sellers, he said, were J. D. Probst, Wetzlar & Co., and S. M. Lehman of Lehman Brothers. He denied that H. C. Frick was in any way interested. "The company," he said, "consists exclusively of New York, Chicago, and Southern men."

ALTGELD LOSES HIS BUILDING.

Trust Company Takes Possession of Ex-Governor's Property.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—The Equitable Trust Company is now in possession of the big Unity office building, which was erected several years ago by ex-Gov. Altgeld. The trust company, acting as trustee for the bondholders, decided to take charge, an official says, on account of a delinquency in the payment of the interest, and also because the redemption of the bonds has not been begun according to the conditions under which the bonds were to have been redeemed at the rate of $20,000 a year, beginning in 1896.

Ground rent for six months is also due and the Unity's finances, Mr. Grower says, are deeply involved. Mr. Altgeld says he is willing to do all he can for the bondholders and to give them everything he owns, if necessary, to protect them.

COLLEGE WOMEN'S CLUB.

First Winter Concert at Sherry's—Many Colleges Represented.

The College Women's Club's first concert of the season was given last evening at Sherry's and was a great success, over 300 members and guests being present. The following colleges were represented: Wellesley, Smith, Barnard, Vassar, Evelyn, Wells, Woman's College of Baltimore, Medical College of the New York Infirmary, Buffalo Woman's Medical College, New York University Law School, Radcliffe, and Mount Holyoke. College men are admitted to associate membership in the club, and many graduates from Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, University of Chicago, New York University, Williams, and other colleges were present. A musical programme was rendered by Miss Grace Preston, Miss Anne Hickisch, and Earl Gulick, boy soprano. An address on "The Model European and American Woman" was delivered by Col. Richard Henry Savage, the author. The entertainment was followed by a dance.

The club of which Miss Irwin Martin is President has been in existence for three years, and its success was assured from the start. It has just opened well-appointed club rooms at 49 West Twentieth Street, and it was confidently prophesied last night that by next season the club's cherished ambition will be realized and it will be giving entertainments in its own house.

The objects of the club, however, are not merely social. The chief of them is to help girls who are eager but too poor to go through a college course by advancing them the necessary funds without interest, and on condition that the money is returned as soon as the beneficiary is able to refund it, and so enable another sister to profit by it. Mrs. George E. Dodge, who presented a scholarship to the club last year, has renewed the gift this year. The annual concert for the benefit of the scholarship fund will be given next month.

REMOVED TO AVOID LYNCHING.

Man Who Blinded a Woman With Acid Taken from Macon to Atlanta.

MACON, Ga., Dec. 9.—W. D. Smith, a white barber, was taken from here to Atlanta to-day to avoid lynching. The offense which so aroused the community against Smith was the throwing by him of acid in the face of Mrs. S. M. Hillard, his landlady, and blinding her.

Smith came to Macon from Mississippi several months ago, and with his wife boarded at Mrs Hillard's house, which he had to leave because he did not pay his board.

SICK GERMAN ACTOR IMPROVED.

Prospect for Herr Schweighofer's Debut Here on Time Brighter.

Manager Conried of the Irving Place Theatre yesterday received two cable messages regarding the condition of his star, Felix Schweighofer, which encourages him to believe that the German actor will yet sail in time to make his appearance on Monday, Dec. 25. The first cable received from Mr. Conried's Berlin representative reads: "Schweighofer's state of health greatly improved. To-day physicians in consultation in Dresden. Hope to sail on Tuesday next."

A second message, from a personal friend of Mr. Conried residing in Dresden, the home of the actor, sets forth that Herr Schweighofer's health is much better, and two prominent physicians will consult to-day, and that great hopes are entertained that the actor will leave for America on scheduled time.

Further news from abroad is eagerly looked for by Mr. Conried, and in the meantime the preparations for the comedian's appearance will be continued.

A. M. Garland Dead.

A. M. Garland died yesterday morning in Chicago, aged sixty-six years. He was at one time Secretary of the Illinois State Board of Agriculture, and for a number of years was President of the National Wool Growers' Association, in which capacity he acquired National prominence in the discussion of tariff matters. He was made a member of the United States Tariff Commission, and was an authority on all matters pertaining to sheep and wool, having made a life study of those subjects in this country and Australia.

Pastors Called to Brooklyn.

The Rev. W. Russell Collins has been called to the pastorate of the Reformed Episcopal Church of the Reconciliation, Nostrand and Jefferson Avenues, Brooklyn. The Rev. Mr. Collins has been the minister in charge of the church since Sept. 1 last.

The congregation of Grace Chapel, Flatbush, has called the Rev. Charles S. Wyckoff to the pastorate. Mr. Wyckoff's last charge was a church in Philadelphia.

Seamen Oppose the Hanna-Payne Bill.

CHICAGO, Dec. 9.—Severe condemnation of the proposed Ship Subsidy act, known as the Hanna-Payne bill, was set forth in resolutions adopted to-day at the annual convention of the National Seamen's Union.

HEADLESS SKELETON FOUND.

WOODBURY, N. J., Dec. 9.—While hunting in Ladd's woods, on the outskirts of this town, to-day, Samuel Ellis of Westville discovered the headless skeleton of a man clothed in ragged garments lying among some underbrush. In the clothing he found a gold watch and a pocket knife.

Some months ago a dog belonging to William Dopson of North Woodbury brought to his master's house a human skull, which was given in charge of Prosecutor Storr. The skull is believed to belong to the skeleton found to-day, and Coroner Hunter is making an investigation.

TIDE OF TRAVEL TO PARIS

Steamship Lines Already Overwhelmed with Applications for Berths.

THE RATES TO BE ADVANCED

Preparations of the Big Companies for the Rush—Their Total Capacity 23,200 Per Month.

With the opening of the Paris Exposition yet six months distant applications for transportation from this country in the direction of the French capital during the next Summer and Fall are pouring into the steamship offices in an ever-increasing stream. The local officers of every trans-Atlantic steamship line whose boats touch at English or French ports have for nearly a month past been booking accommodations on outward bound steamers as far ahead as next July. Notwithstanding the fact that but few of the lines have announced their rates for next season, the applicants for staterooms and berths have been content to pay their deposit and secure accommodations, subject to the provisions of a rate schedule yet to be promulgated, knowing that there will be a decided advance. At least one company announces that at the present rate of booking every berth on its steamers will have been secured by Jan. 1 for sailings as far ahead as next August.

It is agreed throughout steamship circles that an unprecedented tide of travel will sweep eastward over the Atlantic from early April until late Autumn, and that there is an absolute certainty of disappointments to many of those desirous of visiting Europe, owing to the simple lack of transportation facilities over the ocean. Nearly every one of the big transatlantic lines, with the exception of the English companies, will have in commission one or two new steamers in time to meet the Summer rush of travel, but, contrary to general expectation, there will be no extra fleets of steamers chartered and pressed into service to meet the rush. Steamship agents say that it is simply impossible to secure suitable steamers, especially in view of the fact that Great Britain is snatching up such as are available for use in the Transvaal war.

EFFECT OF THE WAR.

If the Transvaal war is not ended by next Spring, it will seriously affect the passenger capacity of the Cunard and White Star Lines. The Cunard Line now has six of its steamers in the service of the British Government, and the White Star Line has three, including the big Majestic, with a cabin capacity of 440. The Cunard Line, in fact, absolutely refuses, thus far, in view of the uncertain situation, to even book passengers conditionally or to "talk business" to any extent.

As far as rates are concerned, all the big lines, in view of the failure to reach a joint agreement at any of the conferences held during the past Summer and Autumn, are at sea. Each individual company is going ahead in the preparation of its next Summer's rate schedule, meantime keeping an eye out for what its neighbor is doing. The publication of these schedules is promised by all the lines within the next ten days. It is admitted by agents that even after the schedules are published, if any line finds that its rates are considerably lower than those of its neighbors it will make a proportionate increase. The prospective passenger may rest assured that, notwithstanding the war between the lines, the rates for next Summer will be much higher than for years past. A majority of the agents admit this, and say that about 20 per cent. over last Summer's rates will be declared.

The first rate schedule for 1900 among the transatlantic lines was issued two weeks ago by the Atlantic Transport Company. This company's steamers are ten-day boats, going to London, and carrying only first-cabin passengers. The rates for the Summer season, from April 16 to Aug. 15, are as follows:

PROMENADE DECK.

One person in a room	$150.00
Two persons in a room, (each)	100.00
Three persons in a room, (each)	75.00
Four or more persons in a room, (each)	65.00

SALOON DECK.

One person in a room	$112.50
Two persons in a room, (each)	75.00
Three or more persons in a room, (each)	65.00

THE ADVANCE IN RATES.

This, generally speaking, represents an advance of from 15 to 20 per cent., according to rooms, over the old conference rate which was smashed last February. Last Summer this line had a uniform rate of $60 per person.

Assistant General Manager Thomas of this line said yesterday that the company would on next Summer put one steamer per week with a capacity of 1,0 passengers, and after March the new steamer Minneapolis, just completed, with a capacity of 300, will run monthly. The steamer Monawk, now in South Africa, is expected to go on in the spring, making a total monthly capacity of 1,200. Mr. Thomas said that by Jan. 1 the Summer booking would have been completed.

The White Star Line followed the Atlantic Transport Line's rates with a new schedule presenting an advance of from 10 to 20 per cent. for Summer, according to steamers and quality of rooms, but which is in reality but a resumption of the standard rates which obtained before the reduction in prices last February. The reduction then only affected the minimum prices at which saloon passage could be secured. The maximum saloon rates were not touched. Consequently the present increase of the White Star Line affects only the minimum rates of saloon passage. Last Summer the minimum saloon rates on the Germanic and Britannic were $60; next Summer season they will be $75; on the Teutonic and Majestic last Summer the lowest saloon rates were $75; next Summer they will be $100. The Cymric rates have been advanced from $60 to $75.

Special rates were issued for the Oceanic as follows: Summer season, per berth, $125, $150, $200, and $225; Winter season, $75, $90, $100, $115 $125, $150, and $175. The deck rooms of the Majestic and Teutonic have been placed at $250 and upward, according to the season. A reduction of 10 per cent. is allowed to purchasers of excursion tickets, except at the $50 rate. With its new rate schedule the White Star Line has issued a notice that right is reserved to alter rates without notice.

"This advance," said General Manager Lee, "will be confined to the minimum rates for first cabin passage and on second-class boats, as the rates for the better class of cabins and staterooms, and all cabin room on the first-lass vessels have never been decreased, for the reason that they were always filled and the companies had no reason for cutting. We will not have any new boats in service next Summer, but with our present fleet can carry about 1,300 first cabin and 600 second cabin passengers per month. This includes the Majestic, now in the British service, but which we hope to have back in the Spring. If we don't get her 440 cabin passengers must be deducted from those figures."

Emil Boas, General Agent of the Hamburg-American Line, said: "I don't think the traveling public need fear being squeezed next Summer by the steamship lines and I do not think the rates for the season, taken for all classes of accommodations, will be any higher than they were in 1898. Last February the rate agreement lapsed and there was considerable cutting for certain classes of passage. The minimum rate, for instance, for first cabin was reduced by some lines from $100 to as low as $55 last Summer, but this was for the very poorest accommodation, and as the majority of the booking had been done early in the Spring, before the reductions had been made, the general traveling public got little benefit from it. Next Summer's rates will, I think, represent an advance of from 20 to 25 per cent. for this class of accommodations over those of last Summer, but the general schedule will show little advance over usual years.

HAMBURG-AMERICAN LINE.

"For next Summer's service we will have each month five express steamers, each with a capacity of 300 first-class and 200 second-class passengers; one steamer, the New Deutschland, with a capacity of 470 first and 260 second cabin; four passenger and freight steamers, each with a capacity of 250 first and 130 second cabin, and four steamers, with a capacity of 250 passengers each, making a total of about 5,500 cabin passengers a month. In this fleet three of the steamers will be new. We may add rooms on the main decks of some of the steamers, which will increase the total capacity. We are being flooded with letters from every part of the country inquiring after berths, and we are conditionally booking large numbers for next Summer. I do not think we will be able to accommodate more than three-fourths of the applicants."

Emil Schwab, New York manager of the North German Lloyd Line, said that his line would next Summer take a sufficient number of vessels from its Mediterranean service to establish a weekly service from New York to Southampton and Cherbourg, in addition to the regular Bremen service. These vessels will leave on Saturday. The company will use seventeen vessels in the service during the Summer, with a capacity of 2,500 first-cabin and 2,000 second-cabin passengers. The rates for passage, Mr. Schwab said, would be about the same as those of 1898.

The French Line to Havre, as might be expected, is making extensive preparations for handling the immense traffic from this country. General Passenger Agent Treyvaux said yesterday that the company would add to its fleet in the Spring three new steamers, La Savoie, La Lorraine, and L'Aquitaine. The first two are six-day boats and the latter a seven-day vessel. This will give the company a fleet of seven steamers, each with an average capacity of 200 first-cabin and 300 second-cabin passengers. Besides the weekly sailings, there will be two extra sailings monthly during May, June, and July.

TO SELL HOTEL TICKETS.

The French Line has also arranged with a large number of Paris hotels for special rates, and will sell tickets at the New York office, including transportation to and from Paris, hotel expenses while there, and admission to the exposition grounds. By this system the visitor can arrange here for all the expenses of the trip. The extra price paid will be about $30 per week above the steamship fare, which will include ten admissions to the exposition per week.

Mr. Treyvaux said that while the Summer rates for passage had not been agreed upon, the advance for different accommodations would be about as follows: Second cabin, $45-60; first cabin, $80-$90 and $100-$125, or a general advance of about 25 per cent.

Second Vice President James A. Wright of the American Line said that thus far his line had not arranged for any extra vessels or sailings for next Summer, and had not yet fixed the rate schedule, but generally speaking there would be but slight, if any, increase over the 1898 rates, which were about 20 per cent. higher than those of last Summer. This line is booking many passengers, who agree to abide by the rates yet to be fixed. This line will send two steamers out weekly—one on the American Line to Southampton and Cherbourg and one on the Red Star Line to Antwerp. The cabin capacity will be approximately 540 for the former line and 250 for the latter, weekly, or a total of about 3,200 per month.

The Holland-American Line to Rotterdam, touching at Boulogne-sur-Mer, on the French coast, will add to its fleet one big new steamer, the Potsdam, for the Summer rush. The Potsdam will leave New York every five weeks with 250 first and 150 second class passengers. The regular service will carry 800 first and 550 second class passengers monthly, making a total monthly capacity for this line of about 1,950 cabin passengers. General Agent Wierdsma said yesterday that his line would probably declare a general advance of about 20 per cent. in rates.

General Passenger Agent Floyd of the Cunard Line refused to discuss the probable efforts of his line to meet the rush during the Summer, but it is safe to say that the steamers will carry 2,500 cabin passengers monthly from this port during the Summer.

THE MONTHLY CAPACITY.

To give an idea of the number of passengers expected to be carried out of the country from New York alone in each of the Summer months, the approximate capacities of the lines mentioned above may be presented as follows:

American Line	3,200
French Line	2,400
Atlantic Transport	1,250
Holland-American	1,950
White Star	1,400
Cunard	2,500
Hamburg-American	5,500
North German Lloyd	4,500
Total	23,200

The Paris Exposition opens in May and closes in October, giving about five months during which each of these lines expects to be taxed to the limit of its capacity. This would give a grand total of 121,000 for these months for these eight lines alone. When it is considered that there are many other minor lines crossing to various parts of Europe, whence tourists can make their way to Paris, it will be seen that there is going to be considerable ocean traveling done during the coming season.

THE OLIVE CROP IN DANGER.

A New Pest, the "Oil Fly," Appears in Italy—Harvest Reduced One-half in Places.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Nov. 24.—The agricultural authorities of Italy are at a loss to account for the sudden appearance of what has become in a short period a scourge of a disastrous nature to certain parts of this country, and one which bids fair to ruin a large number of the agricultural inhabitants. This is the "mosca olearia," or "oil fly," which insect is working havoc in the olive groves that form so important a feature in Italy's agricultural industries.

This comparatively unknown insect has invaded the fertile Province of Puglia, and the terrible destruction it is causing there has induced the Ministry of Agriculture to use its utmost efforts toward the discovery of some means of protecting the olive trees from its ravages. No method is at present known to eradicate the scourge, and, although rewards of many thousands of francs are offered for the discovery of a means of destroying the insect or preserving the trees, no one has yet claimed the proffered prizes.

According to the Hon. Signor Mawry, Deputy for Puglia, and one of the leading authorities on the subject, the "oil fly" derives its being from an egg, which is deposited in the trees during the Winter. The egg opens in the Spring, producing larvae and butterflies with marvelous rapidity. The insects are hatched in immense swarms, and in a short time destroy the pulp of the olives. The only cure known at present is very cold weather, a heavy snowstorm or a strong frost being the only means by which the eggs are destroyed before hatching.

The infection appeared for the first time last year in the Province of Leece, and has since developed to a greater or less degree in all the olive-growing districts of Southern Italy, the destruction being heaviest in the district of Puglia, where the Winters are so mild as to leave the eggs unharmed.

In Puglia the olive is the principal object of cultivation, and the making of the new oil forms one of the chief occupations of the inhabitants. Even the poorest and richest ground, incapable of producing other vegetation of any value, possesses a sufficiency of soil for the olive tree, which, furthermore, requires, as a rule, but little care in recompense for its two fruitions per year. In many parts of Southern Italy the production of olive oil surpasses that of wine in value. The Province of Leece, for instance, has generally produced 1,000,000 hectoliters of oil per annum, valued at 70,000,000 of lire, or $14,000,000. The Province of Bari produces, generally, 450,000 hectoliters, valued at 45,000,000 lire. At least half of the population of these two thickly inhabited provinces derives its means of livelihood either directly or indirectly from the cultivation of the olive. The newly arrived pest is rapidly reducing the production of these districts to much less than half of the figures given above, and the poorer classes are the ones to suffer most. In the face of these threatening facts, and in the absence of any remedy discovered as yet, the Italian Government has been forced to look the matter in the face, and with a view to rescuing the poorer population from absolute want, the Ministry of Commerce and Agriculture, headed by the Hon. Salandra, has determined to guarantee the payment of a certain portion of the deficit caused by the depredations of the oil fly.

Only those who have visited certain parts of Italy can realize the vast importance of the olive groves in this country. Not only do they afford an alimentary staple of no small import to the entire Italian people, as well as forming one of the principal objects of exportation, but the cultivation of the olive groves and the gathering of the fruit afford at certain times of the year regular employment, even to those who are not ranked as peasants and agriculturists. In Puglia especially, from November until February, almost the entire population works for the olive, the women and children harvesting and picking the fruit, the men banking up and transplanting trees, transporting the produce, and pressing the oil. May give up the occupations which are their chief means of earning a livelihood during the other months of the year, in order to work in the great groves and plantations with their neighbors and relatives.

IN THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

Sale of Hotel Royal Site Lends Interest to the Week's Business.

DEALS IN APARTMENT HOUSES

Latest Sales by Brokers—Auction Room Promises Little Before Jan. 1—This Week's Schedule.

After having been the subject of countless rumors the final sale of the former site of the Hotel Royal was far and away the most significant of the week's dealings, and, while no decision has been reached as to the future improvement of the plot, it is enough to know that it will be improved and that a prominent corner facing a park will have some more graceful adornment than a multi-colored expanse of theatrical posters.

Among the other transactions of the week, apartment houses, particularly on upper Madison Avenue, have been a conspicuous feature as shown in the sale of Leo Wise's property at the northwest corner of Madison Avenue and Seventy-fourth Street, of Henry Corn's "Lenox Hill" at the southeast corner of Seventy-seventh Street, and of Edward Kilpatrick's seven-story structure at the northwest corner of Ninety-fifth Street, the latter being given in a trade for a row of tenements on Fourteenth Street, between Avenues B and C. While speaking of apartment house deals, mention must also be made of the sale for cash of the Franke estate's holdings at One Hundred and Seventeenth Street and Fifth Avenue.

Vacant property dealings were not large, although having special interest in one or two instances. That Flake & Dowling, who paid $296,000 at the last Eno sale for a plot at Fifty-eighth Street and the Circle, have every confidence in the future of their investment was shown by their purchase of an additional lot on Fifty-eighth Street. A unique transaction in its way was the sale by these same operators to W. P. Eno of the lot at the southwest corner of Broadway and Sixty-ninth Street, which they bought from the Eno estate at auction only two months ago.

Business property showed few signs of life, unless one may include in that category such parcels as 40 West Twenty-eighth Street and 32 East Twenty-second Street, both of which will doubtless be used for business purposes by their recent purchasers. Rumors were circulated yesterday to the effect that 1 to 7 William Street, with frontages on South William and Stone Streets, had been sold, but careful inquiry failed to reveal any foundation for such a report.

Latest Sales by Brokers.

Boehm & Boehm, who last week purchased 119 and 121 West Twenty-first Street, have also bought through A. H. Clarkson the two adjoining houses, 123 and 125, and will erect upon the entire plot, 90 by 92, a twelve-story business building.

John N. Golding has sold for H. McK. Twombly to Charles S. Brown, representing J. S. Kennedy, two lots on the south side of Fifty-fifth Street, 360 feet west of Fifth Avenue, 50 by 100.

Mr. Golding has also sold for the estate of George Kemp to H. McK. Twombly the three-story stable 23 West Fifty-fifth Street, 25 by 100.

Edward J. Dunphy, representing St. Aloysius's Roman Catholic Church, has bought from various owners the six three-story dwellings 209 to 219 West One Hundred and Thirty-second Street, each 16.8 by 100. The purchase has been made as the site for a new church edifice, although it is understood that work may not be begun for some time.

John T. Duff & Co. have sold for John P. Leo 431 and 433 West One Hundred and Forty-sixth Street, two three-story dwellings in a row of seven just being completed by the seller.

Thomas & Son have sold for Ward Wheeler to a Mr. Bellows, for $16,000, the three-story limestone-front dwelling 3,682 Broadway, 16 by 78.

Stabler & Randolph have sold to Mrs. Doty the three-story dwelling, with extension, 21 West Ninety-fifth Street, 20 by 50 by 100.

It is reported that the Hays estate has sold the four-story brownstone-front dwelling 152 West Forty-fourth Street, 20.6 by 100.5.

Charles E. Duross has leased the two houses 110 and 112 West Sixty-first Street to a client for five years at $3,800 per year and repairs; also, to the P. F. Collier Company the store 502 West Thirteenth Street for a term of years.

John N. Golding reports the following residence rentals: 523 Madison Avenue, for Walter Katte, to William Post; 70 West Forty-eighth Street, for Mrs. R. Mayer, to C. W. Wetmore; 126 East Thirty-seventh Street, for Gilbert C. Wood, to Herbert S. Carpenter; 21 Washington Square North, for Charles A. Post, to E. S. Rawson; 9 West Forty-eighth Street, for John G. Ager, to F. Grand d'Hauteville; 25 West Fifty-first Street, for Mrs. Beadleston, to George H. Andrews; 59 East Fifty-third Street, for Mrs. J. Whitney, to R. C. Embree; 46 West Fifty-seventh Street, for Col. K. M. Murchison, to a Miss Burkham.

The Auction Room.

Foreclosure sales of five-story brick flats formed the bulk of last week's business at auction. At executors' sales 497 Broome Street brought $9,550, and 301 West Twelfth Street $12,750, but on the other hand voluntary offerings of 11 West Twentieth Street and 356 West Fifty-seventh Street were both bid in at low figures, and altogether there was little to relieve the uninteresting character of the dealing.

No future offerings of importance are announced by the auctioneers, and it begins to look as though the salesroom will not present any very lively scenes until after the first of the new year.

On Tuesday of this week William M. Ryan will conduct an executor's sale of vacant property in the neighborhood of Third Avenue, One Hundred and Seventieth Street and St. Paul's Place, and Bryan L. Kennelly will offer the twenty-seven-foot flat 2,483 Broadway, near Ninety-second Street. A partition sale for Wednesday by Richard V. Harnett involves the properties 81 White Street and 106 Grand Street, northeast corner of Mercer Street. For Thursday Auctioneer Meyer announces an offering in partition which will include the northwest corner of Ninth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, and eleven lots on Gerard and Walton Avenues, near One Hundred and Sixty-fourth Street.

The three-story private stable property at the southwest corner of Park Avenue and Fifty-first Street, on a lot 25 by 100.5, will also be sold by Bryan L. Kennelly at voluntary sale on Tuesday.

There were recorded last week 373 mortgages for $10,093,582, of which 235, for $1,525,440, were at 5 per cent.; 147, for $6,559,362, were at more, and 91, for $2,008,780, were at less. In the corresponding week last year there were recorded 309 mortgages for $4,136,852, of which 111, for $1,522,346, were at 5 per cent.; 153, for $1,536,906, were at more, and 45, for $1,257,000, were at less. In the totals for last week it should be noted that $5,000,000 represents a single mortgage given by the American Malting Company to secure a bond issue of that amount.

CUBAN NEGROES CONTENTED.

So Asserts Gen. Wood—Little Danger of Any Uprising.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Gen. Leonard Wood was in conference with President McKinley some time to-day. Later he commented on a telegram from Santiago representing the colored Cubans in Santiago Province as incensed at President McKinley's message. Gen. Wood said:

"I have received many telegrams from Santiago Province since the appearance of the message. Some of them came last night, saying that the people are delighted with the message. Even the men of ultra radical tendencies express pleasure openly. The blacks especially show that they are pleased.

"The keynote of the sentiment is that the Cubans surrendered to me in the last month 3,800 arms, and that all of them are friendly. There are too few arms in the province to cause trouble, if it were desired, but the truth is that the blacks are contented and are growing happier and more prosperous every day.

"Gen. Quentin Bandera, the noted black leader, is one of the employes of this Government at Santiago, and is well satisfied with the conditions of affairs."

CUBAN EXHIBITS AT PARIS.

Secretary Root Orders a $25,000 Appropriation to Defray Expenses.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Secretary Root has made an order appropriating $25,000 from the revenues of the Island of Cuba to defray the expense of an exhibit of the products, manufactures, and industries of that island in the Paris Exposition next year. The order places the exhibit under the direction of Señor Quesada, Special Commissioner of Cuba here, with a suitable force of employes. He will receive no additional compensation, but is allowed expenses.

The Secretary of War will name a citizen of each province of Cuba to collect the exhibits and represent it. These will be nominated by the Civil Governors of the provinces, and also will receive only their expenses. Ricardo Albertini has been appointed Secretary to the commission at a salary of $250 per month and his expenses.

BAD STATE OF CUBAN PRISONS.

Their Condition a Legacy of the Spanish Administration.

HAVANA, Dec. 9.—Complaints are made by prisoners of the bad state of the prisons, where, they declare, they are obliged to sleep on the stone floors and suffer many other privations. Señor Mora, the Supreme Court Fiscal, said to-day that the prison system was a legacy of the Spanish administration. The prisons, he admitted, were not in good condition, adding, however, that other reforms for the island demanded more speedy attention.

Señor Mora said that the present state of affairs in Havana demanded firm treatment on the part of the Judges, as at the end of the Spanish administration many confirmed criminals were set at liberty and 400 were brought to the city from Ceuta. Many of these criminals, he said, were now in Havana, and should be treated severely, in order to preserve order.

The prisons of Cuba are now being investigated by a New York police official, who expresses himself as astounded at the condition of affairs.

Rough Riders' Bugler on Trial.

HAVANA, Dec. 9.—The trial of ex-Lieutenant of Police Cassin, formerly a bugler in the Rough Riders, on the charge of murder in killing a Cuban Major in Havana several months ago, is proceeding, and probably will be concluded on Monday. It is believed that Cassin will be convicted, although many Americans who have been present at the trial express doubt as to its result, declaring that there is a strong sentiment in favor of the prisoner. The man whom Cassin killed was popular, and at that time the police force was cordially disliked.

GEN. AINSWORTH'S REPORT.

Figures of Record and Pension Office of the War Department.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The annual report of Gen. F. C. Ainsworth, Chief of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department, shows that the enormous business of the office has been promptly dispatched, more than 96 per cent. of the cases received during the fiscal year, aggregating 183,018, having been disposed of within twenty-four hours after they reached the office, and not one case remained unacted upon at the close of business hours at the end of the fiscal year.

These cases related to the services of volunteer forces of the United States during the Revolutionary War, the war of 1812, the various Indian wars, the war with Mexico, the war of the rebellion, and the more recent Spanish war.

By the reproduction of the records of individual military service, by the index record card system, the application of that system to the current correspondence, and the adoption of other improved methods the business of the office has been greatly expedited, and it has been possible to materially reduce the clerical force. On the recommendation of the chief of the office a reduction of 300 was made in the clerical force in 1894, a further reduction of 50 was made in 1895, and a still further reduction of 25 in 1897. In the estimates submitted by Gen. Ainsworth for the coming fiscal year a still further reduction of 32 is provided for, making a total reduction of 407 clerks, representing a permanent saving of over $460,000 annually in the appropriations for the clerical force of the office.

Adding to this the saving effected in contingent and other expenses, it is shown that the cost of maintaining the office has been permanently reduced by fully $500,000 annually. Gen. Ainsworth says that in all of the reductions that have been made in the clerical force of the office, the selections for discharge have been based strictly upon the efficiency records of the clerks, a liberal allowance being made in the ratings on account of honorable military or naval service.

ARMY PROMOTIONS.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—The appointment of Col. E. R. Kellogg, Sixth Infantry, and Col. G. S. Carpenter, Eighteenth Infantry, as Brigadier Generals of regulars will result in the promotion of Lieut. Col. Charles Minor, Sixth Infantry, to be Colonel of the Sixth Infantry, and Lieut. Col. J. M. J. Sanno, Fourth Infantry, to be Colonel of the Eighteenth Infantry. Other promotions will result in the lower grades, and Majors Charles L. Davis, Eleventh Infantry, and Frank B. Baldwin, Third Infantry, will be made Lieutenant Colonels.

The retirement of Lieutenant Colonel Robert Craig of the Signal Corps will result in the promotion of Major James Allen and Capt. R. E. Thompson one grade each in that corps, and will leave a vacancy in the grade of First Lieutenant, which will be filled by transfer from the line of the army.

Retired Officers as Instructors.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Owing to the fact that there are no active officers of the line of the army available for detached service, the Adjutant General has issued a circular to retired officers of the army below the grade of Lieutenant Colonel, inquiring whether they are willing to accept duty as professors of military science and tactics at various institutions of learning. Under a recent decision of the Controller of the Treasury, retired officers performing such services at colleges are entitled to the full pay of their grade.

Puerto Rican Coffee Firm Fails.

PONCE, Puerto Rico, Dec. 9.—The first failure on account of the hurricane is that of Felici Costa & Co., who have been declared bankrupt owing to action in the United States Provisional Court. Their liabilities are $400,000, and assets $500,000, but the latter consist largely of non-negotiable paper of planters and others. Henry Fritze has been appointed commissioner and Herminio Armstrong receiver. The firm has been established thirty-five years, and did a large coffee and general commission business.

War Material for Colombia.

The British steamer St. Cuthbert, which arrived yesterday morning from Antwerp, had on board about 200 tons of war material, consisting of rifles, ammunition, and explosives destined for Barranquilla, United States of Colombia. The steamer anchored in Gravesend Bay, where she discharged her cargo of war material into lighters for trans-shipment on board the Atlas Line steamer Alene, which sailed yesterday.

MR. AND MRS. REID ENTERTAIN.

Dinner and Reception in Honor of the Commissioners Who Negotiated the Treaty with Spain.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid entertained the Commissioners who negotiated the treaty of peace with Spain, the first anniversary of whose signing is to-day, at their residence, 451 Madison Avenue, last evening. Mr. Reid was one of the Commissioners, and the invitations to the dinner read: "Mr. and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid request the pleasure of your company at dinner on Saturday, Dec. 9, at 8 o'clock, to meet Mr. and Mrs. Day, Mr. and Mrs. Davis, Mr. and Mrs. Frye, and Mr. and Mrs. Gray on the anniversary of the signature of the treaty of Paris."

The dinner was one of forty-five covers, and the guests were Judge and Mrs. Day, Senator and Mrs. Davis, Senator and Mrs. Frye, Judge and Mrs. Gray, Gen. and Mrs. Merritt, Senator Chauncey M. Depew, ex-Gov. and Mrs. Morton, Gen. and Mrs. F. V. Greene, Dr. and Mrs. Schurman, the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Patton, John Bigelow, Rear Admiral and Mrs. Bradford, Mr. and Mrs. Robert R. MISHAPS TO VARIOUS VESSELS.

Shipping Suffers Damage from a Number of Causes.

LONDON, Dec. 9.—The Swedish bark Adele, Capt. Petersen, from Helsingborg Dec. 4 for Wilmington, reported anchored in Elsinore Roads on Dec. 6, has returned to Helsingborg with loss of anchors and chains.

Attempts have failed to float the British steamer Craigneuk, which arrived at Hamburg on Nov. 23 from Galveston, and which has since been reported ashore in the Tyne.

The British steamer Maltby, Capt. Chiswick, which arrived at Liverpool on Nov. 14 from Savannah, and which has since been reported ashore in the Tyne and broken in two, has been abandoned to the underwriters.

The crew have been saved of the British steamer Oilfield, Capt. Shawyer, from Cetto for Novorossisk, reported from Constantinople yesterday to be ashore at Sakareeyab, Assistance has been sent to the stranded vessel.

The British steamer Florence Pile, Capt. Reed, from Hamburg for Savannah, has returned to Hamburg with loss of anchor and chain and with windlass broken. She is repairing.

The British schooner Pride of the West, Capt. Lowry, from Huelva for Falmouth, has arrived at Lisbon leaking.

Schooner Hattie H. Mayo Damaged.

STONINGTON, Conn., Dec. 9.—The schooner Hattie H. Mayo, Capt. Murphy, from Providence for New Haven, loaded with scrap iron, struck the rocks off Haptree Point at 11 o'clock last night. She floated off leaking. She cannot proceed loaded, being badly damaged.

North German Lloyd Steamer Floated.

ANTWERP, Dec. 9.—The North German Lloyd steamer Koenigin Luise, bound for Australia, which grounded yesterday on Walswoords Bank, in the lower Scheldt, and which was thought to be in a critical condition, has been floated and has proceeded on her voyage.

LADIES' DAY AT THE N. Y. A. C.

Forty-five Hundred Young Women Enjoyed the Club's Hospitality.

The New York Athletic Club held its forty-fourth "Ladies' Day" and the first of the present season yesterday afternoon, and before the visitors had departed, according to the terms of the invitation, at 6 o'clock, it was decided that it was the most successful occasion of its kind in the history of the organization, both in regard to the numbers of the fair guests and in the quality and variety of the entertainment provided. It was estimated that not less than 4,500 young women participated in the club's hospitality.

The house was thrown open to the visitors at 11 o'clock. After several hours spent in studying the appointments of the house, a musical performance was given in the gymnasium, in which the following took part: W. H. Reiger, Miss Katharine Isabel Pelton, Mr. Beyer-Hane, Miss Eva Gardner Coleman, Hobart Smock, the Kaltenborn quartet, and the Metropolitan quartet. Other music was furnished by Geisemann's orchestra and the Neapolitan guitar group.

After this the company adjourned to the natatorium, where they witnessed exhibitions by the instructor, Prof. Sundstrom, and a number of his pupils, both young and old, among them W. Swan, Jr., P. Hinton, D. Hennen, and Mr. Dickey. The numbers included such feats as smoking under water, diving for money, and imitations of a torpedo, a crab, a seal, and a porpoise. After this the company broke up into little groups and passed the rest of the afternoon in social enjoyment.

One Girl Prevents a Strike.

ALTOONA, Penn., Dec. 9.—By remaining at her loom in defiance of 800 strikers one little girl prevented a tie-up at the Altoona Silk Mill. One hundred weavers employed at the mill stopped work because their demand for increased wages was refused. A general strike of the 800 operatives had been planned, but when an effort by John Burns, a boy, to throw the belts off the loom at which the one girl continued at work, was frustrated by foremen, 700 employes returned to their work. The 100 operatives who first struck are still out.

Colombian Cable Is Again Open.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—United States Minister Hart, at Bogota, Colombia, has been in cable communication with the State Department respecting some routine matter, indicating that the cable is again open for the first time since Oct. 25.

Fraud in Cherokee Certificates.

TAHLEQUAH, I. T., Dec. 9.—Another fraud in Cherokee certificates has been unearthed in the Senate by Senator Leach, who presented certain National certificates and asked that they be referred to the Committee on Claims. It was found that they had been canceled by the Auditor. Last Sunday night the Auditor's office was looted and a number of certificates were stolen. A fraudulent credit of $4,089 was also entered on the Auditor's books. It is feared thousands of dollars' worth of stolen and forged certificates are afloat.

A Cherokee Mission to Washington.

TAHLEQUAH, I. T., Dec. 9.—The Cherokee Legislature has passed an act employing William M. Springer of Illinois as resident attorney for the Cherokees at Washington for one year. An act was also passed authorizing a delegation of four persons, two of whom must be full-blooded members of the tribe, to go to Washington in the interest of the Cherokee Nation.

RISKS LIFE TO SAVE SERVANTS.

Narrow Escapes from Welling Mansion Burned in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Early to-day fire totally destroyed the Welling mansion, at Fourteenth Street and Welling Place, this city. The loss on the residence was $60,000, and on the contents about $50,000. The house contained costly statuary, many fine paintings and tapestries, and beautiful furnishings.

Dr. L. H. French occupied the residence, and, with his servants, escaped from the building just as the roof fell in. Indeed, in his efforts to save the female servants Dr. French was somewhat burned.

STRICKEN IN NEWARK SCHOOL.

Principal Taylor, Victim of Apoplexy, Will Not Recover.

NEWARK, N. J., Dec. 9.—George O. F. Taylor, Principal of the Central Avenue Public School, was seized with an attack of apoplexy just before school closed yesterday. He was taken to his home, 241 Sixth Avenue, in an unconscious condition. The attending physicians to-day announced that Mr. Taylor's illness was fatal.

Mr. Taylor has been in charge of the Central Avenue school more than a quarter of a century. His family includes Mrs. Taylor, a son, and two daughters.

NEW TELEPHONE COMPANY.

Will Build a Line Along the New Jersey Coast.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 9.—Articles of incorporation were filed to-day with the Secretary of State of the Seashore and Delaware River Telephone, Telegraph and Cable Company. The company is part of a system to be established by the Telephone, Telegraph and Cable Company of America, and is capitalized at $100,000.

The company will build a telephone line beginning at the foot of Morgan Street, Jersey City, and through Jersey City, Bayonne, and Elizabeth, and along the Atlantic Coast to Atlantic City and Cape May, and thence to Camden. The incorporators are James E. Hayes, Camden; George W. Beers, Fort Wayne, Ind., and John B. Stauffer, Philadelphia.

MR. CRIDLER HOME AGAIN.

Found Increased Respect for America Abroad—Other Arrivals.

T. W. Cridler, Assistant Secretary of State, arrived yesterday on the steamship St. Louis. Mr. Cridler went abroad in September and since then he has visited, he said, all of the capitals of Europe. His trip combined official business with pleasure, but of the business he would not speak. He consented to say, however, that the general respect for America and Americans in Europe, which has risen so greatly since the Spanish war, had its effects in the Consular service, and Consular officers are accordingly treated better than ever before.

Casper S. Crowninshield, one of the Commissioners to the Paris Exposition, returned on the St. Louis.

Among other passengers on the St. Louis were Theodor de Markeloff and Lieut. Otton de Richter of the Russian Navy, who brought sixty-five Russ an sailors with them to man and take to Russia the remaining vessel built by the Cramps for the Russian Navy.

Presbyterian Hospital Anniversary.

About 200 persons availed themselves of a general invitation to attend the exercises commemorating the thirty-first anniversary of the Presbyterian Hospital yesterday afternoon. The ceremonies were held in the dispensary, at the Madison Avenue end of the institution. After music by a choir, the Rev. Dr. S. M. Hamilton of Englewood, N. J., led in prayer, and the Rev. Donald Sage Mackay delivered the address of the occasion. He referred to the part the Presbyterian Hospital had taken in the advancement of the science of medicine and in the development of trained nurses.

Matanafa to Raise Cacao.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9.—Mataafa, the Samoan chief, has gone in for cacao raising, and has issued an order to his friends to turn their attention to the same industry. Consul General Osborn has sent to the State Department a report by H. J. Moore, a leading planter of Samoa, on the subject. Mr. Moore says that in 1893 Mataafa set out several thousand trees, but the raiding Malietoans destroyed them all. Now that the war is over, Mataafa has time to turn his attention to the arts of peace, and the result is the order mentioned.

Opinion on the Treaties in Samoa.

BERLIN, Dec. 9.—Dispatches received to-day from Apia, Samoa, under date of Nov. 27, say that the news of the final settlement of the Samoan question has been hailed with keen satisfaction by the German residents and a large majority of the Samoans. The dispatches add, however, that Malietoa Tanus's people are depressed over the matter, and that a majority of the English residents begrudge Germany her success.

HIGGINS & SEITER.

FINE CHINA
RICH CUT GLASS.

MESSRS. HIGGINS & SEITER, Dealers in Fine China and Rich Cut Glass, take pleasure in calling attention of the readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES to the Grand Holiday Exhibit, now on view at Nos. 50, 52 and 54 West 22d Street.—From small beginnings this unique establishment has grown in extent and popularity till it is not only recognized by Metropolitan buyers as affording the widest scope for selection of the beautiful wares of which it makes a specialty, but its reputation, based on the famous policy, "Prices always at least 1-4 less than elsewhere," is as wide as the Continent itself.—Naturally, with all the gift-making potentialities of Glass and China, the great "Present" Store of the United States, with the largest stock of these goods in America, if not in the world, at this season, assumes commanding interest.—Some of the reasons why will be found in the following paragraphs—and prices:

English China Game-Plates

Out of several dozen English china game-plates we would like you to see one set. There is not a duplicate in this entire country. They were painted by the celebrated game and fish painter Mitchell (now deceased.) In time these plates will undoubtedly be worth several times what we now ask for them. Each plate is signed by the artist, has a different subject, and is a work of art in itself. Our price for the 12 plates is $400.00

Teakwood

Many months ago we placed with the largest manufacturers of Teakwood furniture in Canton, China, a very large order for Teakwood to come to us direct by sailing vessel. We thus not only eliminate the usual jobber's or middleman's profit, but effect quite a saving in freight. This shipment arrived several weeks ago and since then our cabinet men have been working day and night to get it in absolutely perfect condition, regluеing, rubbing, polishing, &c. Thus we can now offer you Teakwood that IS PERFECT. Much of the Teakwood is put upon the market and sold without this precaution. To give you an idea of the importance of this sale we mention one only as an example of 50 others:

Hand-carved pedestals thirty-six inches high, eleven inches across, marble top, each $12.00

Mail orders will be filled as long as they last.

Rich Cut Glass

The phenomenal growth of our Cut Glass department must naturally find expression here, and one entire floor is now devoted to this magnificent exhibit—unmarred by a single specimen of anything but the genuine article—no acid-bitten, "processed" work among it. As a special attraction for this sale, we have chosen, among others, our greatly admired "Napoleon" pattern, of which we will sell sixty pieces, as follows: 12 Tumblers, 12 Wines, 12 Saucer Champagnes, 12 Claрets, 12 Cordials; complete, for..... $83

Cut Glass Punch Bowl

Magnificent cut-glass punch bowl, 14 inches high, 14 inches across, heavy glass, deeply cut and beautifully polished. This is called the "Leader." Many of our customers find it hard to decide between this punch bowl and others marked at $60 and $75 each, special at this time $40.00

Cut Glass and Sterling Silver

We have recently made important additions to our cut-glass, mounted with sterling silver. We have a most complete line of decanters, salad bowls, fruit nappies, punch bowls, ladles, bonbons, loving cups, &c.

Sterling Mounted Salad Bowls

Very richly cut and sterling-mounted 8-inch fruit, salad, or berry bowls, instead of $15 ..... $9.00

Special in Dinner Ware Department

Among several new patterns of rich English dinner ware is one of Copeland's, which is pronounced very unique and rich. It has festoons in sage green, artistically relieved by small rosebuds in nautral color of pink and yellow with sage-green leaves, edges in sun-ray effect in best burnished gold. This is an open stock pattern, therefore any number of pieces desired can be purchased. Dinner service sells for..... $266.00

Several new patterns of Limoges china have also recently been received. There are some five or six patterns, each one worthy of special notice. You take your choice of any one you wish, instead of the real value, $38.00, at..... $25.00 complete.

Special in Art Department

We have on hand many articles that might properly be described as works of art, yet we do not make a pretense of conducting a museum. We exhibit and sell these high-class goods on the same margin of profit as we do the less expensive goods. There are arranged on tables in this department, from which you many make your selection, vases, many of which would ordinarily cost $10.00 or $12.00, at.. $5.00

On another table is a special line of rich vases, figures, etc., from which you select, at..... $10.00

Rich English China Plates

It is a remark very often heard that our display of rich English serving-plates is by far the grandest to be seen anywhere in this country. All the celebrated English factories are represented, and almost every style of plate imaginable can be seen here at prices as throughout our entire establishment ¼ less than elsewhere.

Among hundreds of dozens of others equally important are 12 plates just received of the celebrated Doulton china. The centre of each plate is decorated with a portrait, the edge and shoulder is in turquoise with festoon of cream and solid gold edge, heavy raised paste gold decoration throughout, each plate signed by the celebrated artist Sutton, price per dozen $390.00

Fancy Glass

Under this heading we have several novelties. One is the "Twentieth Century." This is green and has an iridescent effect, very artistic shapes, etc.

Another one is the "Cameo." This is a reproduction of the celebrated Cameo Glass, comes in red, green, and pink decorated with white raised work, prices range upward from..... $1.75

Another new style is the "Phenomena" glass. This is also in green with fish-scale effect; prices range upward from..... $3.75

Another new pattern is the "Klondike." This is a brown color. There are many low prices suitable for flowers, etc. Several artistic shapes.

Those desiring to purchase now can have the goods held and delivered at any date desired. Brooklyn deliveries and calls are now made by our own wagons, thus insuring perfect satisfaction to our Brooklyn patrons.

BEDFORD PARENTS' LEAGUE.

Results Accomplished by a Brooklyn School Auxiliary.

A comparatively recent development of the public school system in Brooklyn is what is known as the Parents' League. It is composed of the fathers and mothers of school children whose homes are in the Bedford district of that borough and who attend Public School No. 3. The league was organized in May last, and already has a membership of several hundred. Among those identified with it are the Rev. A. J. F. Behrends, pastor of the Central Congregational Church; ex-Senator George W. Brush, who is Superintendent of Dr. Behrends's Sunday school; Dr. E. F. Smith, and Nelson G. Gates.

The object of the league is to enable the parents of pupils to become thoroughly acquainted with their children's teachers. The dues are 10 cents a month. The league's constitution says that the idea is "to promote social intercourse among the members and to advance the cause of education." Dr. White, Principal of School 3, takes a lively interest in the league and says he finds continual evidence of the need of consultation with the parents of his pupils.

It is said that until the organization of the league the parents of pupils in the Bedford district had only a vague idea of what went on in the schoolrooms during the day. Now, however, at the regular meetings of the league the teachers and the parents are brought into friendly contact and discuss freely and fully questions that affect the education of the children. Suggestions from one or the other side flow from these discussions and are attended by excellent results. The parents have helped to decorate the walls of the classrooms with works of art, and the children's surroundings are more pleasant than they were.

FLINT'S FINE FURNITURE.

ORIENTALISM FOR CHRISTMAS.

King Christmas is returning for his homage. The Yule log is being hauled, the mistletoe has appeared, and our store is an artistically laden Christmas tree to greet him.

Take the Orientals—a fine lot of Guendjis, Carabagh, and Daghestan Rugs at $9.50—some almost square—ideal for Foyer halls. Also rare old rugs for wallhangings and couch-coverings—of marvelous sheen and tonal beauty, with designs that appeal to one's artistic sense as strongly as a painting. Saddle-bags for pillow-coverings—exquisite in coloring and noted for their fine mosaic patterns.

It is still so loaded with furniture beauties that they can warm the hearts of many gift-receivers yet.

MICHAEL BUCENY INSANE.

Man Who Killed His Sweetheart Suffering from Catalepsy.

Michael Bucany, who murdered his sweetheart, Regina Klein, on Sept. 18 last, was yesterday committed to the Matteawan State Hospital for the Criminal Insane by Justice Furman of the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court. When Bucany's case came up for trial Otto Rosalsky was assigned to defend him. Upon visiting Bucany, Lawyer Rosalsky found him to be suffering from acute melancholia, which finally developed into catalepsy. A commission, including Dr. Robert S. Newton examined Bucany, and declared him to be insane.

During the examination Bucany maintained whatever position of the limbs or body was indicated until a change was suggested by Dr. Newton. When first brought into the room he stood like a statue until commanded to relax. One of his arms was extended at a right angle, and remained so for over a quarter of an hour. The same condition was found to exist respecting the use of the eye, jaw, leg, or hand. Hot applications to the skin aroused no sense of pain.

IN MEMORY OF J. C. HOAGLAND.

Directors of the Royal Baking Powder Company Take Action.

As a mark of respect to the late Joseph C. Hoagland, who had for more than thirty years acted as President of the Royal Baking Powder Company, the Board of Directors has ordered the offices of the company closed on the day of his funeral, and has caused the following minute to be placed upon its records:

"It is with deep sorrow that we learn of the death of Mr. Joseph C. Hoagland, formerly President of the Royal Baking Powder Company, one of the founders of the company, and from its incipiency until recently actively associated in its management and to whose untiring energy and business ability are in a large measure due the prosperity of the company.

"We beg to tender to Mrs. Hoagland and members of the family of the deceased our sincere sympathy and condolence, and it is directed that this minute be entered upon our records and a copy thereof be presented to Mrs. Hoagland with the individual expression of respect of the members of the board."

valuable. But such a t for literary review and is only mentioned as a matter by the way in this theatrical chronicle.

To hasten back to our muttons, the art of acting is so closely allied with the personality of the actor and its effect depends so largely upon the mental and emotional quality of his audience, that the reduction of its principles to a theory seems all but impossible. The mere rudiments of it are easily understood; there are intelligible symbols for the expression of the passions and emotions which every student of acting has to learn. But merely a reasonably correct employment of these symbols, such as a student in his novitiate can often master, produces neither illusion nor aesthetic pleasure. On the other hand, the finished actor often produces wonderfully moving effects in scenes of complex emotion without any use of the symbols which the keenest eye can discover. This may seem a paradox, but is none.

If any other excuse is needed for these remarks than their inherent wisdom and the desirability of sometimes getting as far away as possible from the tiresome puffery of actors in these weekly theatrical reviews, they may be found in William Archer's second contribution to The Pall Mall Magazine on the American stage. He has the same trouble that we all have, excepting her half-crazy adulators, in "accounting" for Mrs. Fiske's success in "Tess." He would doubtless be equally at loss to discover the secret of her power in the great scene of "Becky Sharp."

She satisfied no possible ideal of Tess, physically, and in vocal method, variety of tone, and facial expression was manifestly deficient. The stupidest person could see the faults, but the wisest could do no more than admit the pathos and illusion of her acting in Tess's scene of confession and her murder scene. The effect in Rebecca Crawley's scene with Steyne is equally strong and noteworthy. Even if one does not feel it himself, he must note the effect upon the audience. And that is everything.

Without an audience the greatest genius in histrionism cannot act. He plays upon the crowd, and the influence of the crowd stimulates him. The public masters him, as surely as he masters the public. Without the "public" the drama is either literary or nothing. Without the public the stage is a mere platform, the actor powerless. The actor knows this, and so does every sane observer of the drama and dramatic art. Only a very few linnet-headed enthusiasts fancy that plays the public does not care for can be made to interest individuals in the performance. If the plays are really worthy their time will come, as Turner's time came, and Millet's, and Wagner's.

The burlesque of "Barbara Frietchie" at the parody theatre of those illustrious caricaturists, Mr. Weber and Mr. Fields, is the best travesty of a popular play New York has seen in many years. As such it is entitled to distinguished consideration. It is good travesty in its pictorial caricature of the drama in which Miss Marlowe has secured the greatest triumph of her career. In this it is not gross or too extravagant. The spirit of mockery that finds a comic side to everything is happily expressed in the goings on in the street in the Maryland town, in the agony experienced by the neighbors when Barbara plays the piano, in her extraordinary interview with the mad youth, in the proceedings in the parson's house when the two deserters take possession of it, in the droll introduction of the time-honored "slippery day" stairs in the travesty of Mr. Fitch's pathetic third act.

This burlesque will have a long run and will serve doubtless to increase the popularity of its original. A good burlesque generally has that effect. But to be good a burlesque must have a strong subject, full of original ideas. That is the reason, probably, why Edgar Smith has triumphed now in a field in which his efforts, hitherto, have not been brilliantly successful. EDWARD A. DITHMAR.

THIS WEEK'S NEW BILLS.

"Wheels Within Wheels," Mansfield as Beau Brummell, and Two German Plays.

The plot of "Wheels within Wheels," the comedy of intrigue by that smart dramatist, R. C. Carton, which will be produced at the Madison Square Theatre to-morrow night, will be found to closely resemble the plot of "The Liars," in which John Drew and his company acted last season. Instead of a deus ex machina, however, in the person of an amiable and diplomatic baronet, there is a quick-witted and daring "woman of the world" as the central personage, and she, like Sir Christopher Deering, has a little romance of her own.

The scene is laid in the fashionable London of the present hour. To secure from Egerton Vartrey, a gentleman of feeble moral character, a letter which her foolish sister-in-law, Lady Curtoys, has written to him, Mrs. Onslow Bulmer, the self-possessed lady aforesaid, enters that dangerous person's chambers in his absence, by means of a pass key she has stolen, and is, most unfortunately, brought face to face with Lord Eric Chantrell, a sophisticated and entertaining bachelor of large means. This is a dubious position for a lady to be placed in. Lord Eric naturally has reason to be prejudiced against Mrs. Bulmer. Nevertheless, the play shows how he falls in love with her and marries her in spite of her rashness and her previous mistaken engagement to an objectionable man about town, Mr. James Blagden.

Vartrey, called away from home, leaves his chambers in possession of his friend, who discovers the lady burglar just as she has broken open a cabinet and secured the incriminating letter. He is charmed by her unconventionality and willingly burns the letter which she hands to him. They have a pleasant chat, which is interrupted by the arrival of their common acquaintance, Blagden, before whose coming Mrs. Bulmer hides. Blagden's conversation turns out to be most indiscreet and compromising. He wants Lord Eric to say a good word for him to Sir Philip Curtoys, whose sister he wants to marry, and in the same breath puts the aforesaid sister, hiding behind the curtains, in possession of facts about himself calculated to make the most enterprising woman of the world shrink from marrying him. All through this act the lady conceals her identity from Lord Eric.

The action is resumed a fortnight later in Sir Philip Curtoys's drawing room. Here Lady Curtoys promises to elope with Vartrey, not knowing that her incriminating letter is no longer in existence, and thoroughly frightened by the belief that Sir Philip has all but discovered her rash conduct.

Mrs. Bulmer, prevented from explaining the theft of the latchkey and the destruction of the compromising letter, and thus stopping the elopement, receives a note from Veronica announcing her immediate departure. To save her, the sister-in-law determines to hurry off to Beckington to intercept the elopers, and writes a note to Lord Eric asking him to break the news to Sir Philip that she has eloped with Vartrey.

At Beckington selfish Veronica has found what a mistake she is making, and welcomes her sister-in-law, ready to clear up Lady Curtoys's doubts regarding her husband's suspicions, and to balk the lover by acknowledging that Sir Philip is following under the impression that it is his sister who is disgracing the family. Thus beaten, Vartrey allows Veronica to pass through a side door into the garden, and later she reappears by the front entrance to pose as the preserver of Mrs. Bulmer's honor.

Blagden so conclusively shows himself to be a bully and a coward that Mrs. Bulmer has no hesitation in withdrawing her half promise to him and in accepting the impulsive proposal of Lord Eric.

Of course, in a comedy of this sort, characterization and dialogue count for more than plot. Mr. Carton's skill in both of those branches of his calling is well known. The play will call for an uncommonly rich display of feminine dress. The cast promises well. Hilda Spong, who acted so well in "Trelawny" last year, will be Mrs. Bulmer, and Robert Hilliard the vociferous James Blagden, a character said to have been drawn directly from life. The other principal rôles will be taken by John Mason as Lord Eric, Grace Elliston as Veronica, Lady Curtoys; Grant Stewart as Sir Philip; a stranger from England, Philip Cunningham, as Vartrey, and C. W. Butler as Eaves, the valet.

At the Garden Theatre to-morrow night Mr. Mansfield will put forward the long-familiar play called "Beau Brummell" and act the Regency fop. This impersonation was of great value in building up the reputation of this fine actor. It is all his own in conception and execution, and is as nearly perfect in form and substance as a dramatic impersonation can be. The character, though bearing a historic name, is almost wholly fictitious.

The act of self-sacrifice in which he takes part is founded on an anecdote related of the famous Beau Nash, the autocrat of Bath, by Goldsmith, in a footnote in his "Life of Nash." But the deed is highly idealized in the play. It was first used on the stage by Blanchard Jerrold in his two-act play called "Beau Brummell," but not as it is used by Mr. Mansfield.

His play is built up partly on incidents of Brummell's career, narrated by his fulsome biographer, Capt. Jesse, and partly on Mr. Mansfield's own ideas. The character and its development, much of the illustrative "business" and the plot of the play were all formed in Mansfield's mind long before a line of the text of the play was written.

This work was intrusted to Mr. Clyde Fitch, then a novice in the playwright's craft, and, after alterations made by Mr. Mansfield in rehearsals, was produced at the Madison Square Theatre in the Spring of 1890. This production may be said to have begun a new epoch in Mansfield's career. It also began the career of Mr. Fitch, who thereafter gave his whole attention to playwriting, and after many experiments of more or less interest, some resulting in pecuniary success, some revealing intellectual and artistic growth, has produced in "Barbara Frietchie" one of the noblest and sweetest of modern plays.

Coming after his memorable portrayal of Rostand's Gascon Mr. Mansfield's revival of Brummell will be doubly interesting. Its sentiment is not wholly unlike that of Cyrano. But in form there is small resemblance between the two rôles.

Two new plays will be given by the stock company at the Irving Place Theatre this week. To-morrow night "Das Recht auf sich Selbst" ("The Right of the Individual") by Prince von Wrede will be acted. The cast will include Martha Schiffel and Wilhelmine Schluter, Paul Faber, Fritz Hitzgrath, Kierschner, Hersmann, and Klein-Roden. Thursday night a drama by Klaus Arsen called "Am Spieltisch des Lebens" ("The Gamble of Life") will be produced. This is a problem play which has caused a "sensation" in Berlin. The cast will include Frls. Brandt, Schiffel, and Emmy Schroth, Herren Bender, Horwitz, Meyer-Eigen, Olmar, and Seyffertitz.

"THE TYRANNY OF TEARS."

She was massive, morose, masterful, and yet womanly; he was meek, mild, meditative. It struck folks who sat directly in front of them that the man who had this queerly mated couple in tow, and who was plainly an intimate friend of the rather milk-and-watery husband, had a purpose in taking them to the Empire Theatre. He was probably a practical joker. At all events, he was a city man, and it was not the first time he had seen "The Tyranny of Tears." The couple were not of New York.

What a tyranny of tears meant was gradually unfolded in the first act, and the massive matron moved uneasily. A sneering smile was manifest about her mouth as she carefully noted the effects on her mild little husband of the bald revelation of the way in which the wife of the play had managed to have her own way in everything for five years.

"True to life, 'Tom,' isn't it, now?" whispered the city man to his old friend, who was watching with particularly wide-opened eyes the process by which Mr. Parbury was being wheedled and cajoled into letting his wife have her own way in everything pertaining to his life. The tyranny of a woman's tears was being revealed to him for the first time.

"H-m-m-m. It might hit the case of some people—weak-minded, easy-going husbands, you know," responded the man from the country in a whisper, as he glanced rather furtively in the direction of his spouse.

The curtain fell. I consider this thing perfectly stupid!" snapped the woman. "It's silly, senseless, and a waste of time. I wish we had gone to the opera instead!" And she fidgeted about in her seat and had a lot of trouble with her wrap, smiling graciously down on her little husband, while he meekly tried to assist his masterful wife to settle herself comfortably.

"But the opera isn't on yet," replied Mr. City Man, "and as you ladies are all so fond of John Drew, I thought you'd prefer this to anything else in town. Besides, it's such a travesty on one phase of conjugal life. Sort of a relief, too, from the perpetual harping on the mother-in-law as the ruling power in family affairs, don't you know."

"So it is," she replied, "but I so much prefer music."

"I say, Tom, will you go out and have a clove?" whispered the city man to the husband of the woman from the suburbs.

Tom moved uneasily as if about to accept the invitation. Then he glanced at his spouse, who, if she didn't hear, must have suspected the purport of the colloquy. A pleading look was in the eyes of the massive woman. There was just a perceptible nervous tremor of the point of that fat double chin. It was the premonitory symptom that always indicates the coming of tears in femininity.

A trifle sulkily the man from the suburbs settled himself back in his seat as the balky horse sits back in his traces and said: "No, thank you, William, I guess I won't leave Sarah here alone. Some other time I'll join you."

When the curtain fell after Parbury's rebellion against tears, the lady's comment was: "Really, this all seems senseless and stupid to me. I'd much rather see something that's funny; genuine comedy, you know. I don't see the purpose of it all. I'm sure I'm ready to go home now." And she moved her wraps and herself to do it about to put her purpose into execution.

"Wait a while, dear. It rather amuses me, and I'd like to see what becomes of that typewriter woman," said the little man, boldly but quietly.

The massive woman almost snorted—came as near to it as a well-behaved woman could come—and there was a glitter in her eyes as she said: "Very well, Tom, if you are interested in what happens to that little minx, we'll wait and see. I know what would happen if she was your secretary." And she laughed a laugh that seemed to have sharp burrs on all its edges, in spite of her attempt to make it good-natured and merry.

When the curtain fell finally Mrs. Tom breathed a sigh of relief. Tom helped her with her wraps as carefully and daintily as it was manifestly his wont to do, and the trio passed out with the throng.

A TALK WITH MISS MANNERING.

Her Views of Her Calling, Her Early Experiences, the Roles She Likes, and Her Ambitions.

Mary Mannering has the same delightful spontaneity off the stage as she has upon it. Zola has said that art is nature seen through a temperament. Miss Mannering's stage art is human nature shown through a temperament, so that when she was talking about the stage, in her dressing room one day in the first week of "The Manoeuvres of Jane," there was the same "temperament," the same charming smile, the same naturalness of manner, only much nicer with Mary Mannering herself beneath them for real life than in the somewhat turbulent heroine of the play.

Miss Mannering, as every one knows, was married not long after her arrival in this country to James K. Hackett, and since has been much of the time separated from him in her professional work, so that it was natural that in talking of acting the conversation should turn upon the mooted question, Can husband and wife do as well on the stage together as people with no outside associations?

"Is it easier or more difficult to act with one's husband?" was the question.

ACTING WITH ONE'S OWN HUSBAND.

"It is usually harder to act with one's husband," Miss Mannering answered immediately, "for you are likely to give each other a certain consideration that you would no; any one else. You will think perhaps that you will not do this or that because it will give him a better chance in his part, and he will have the same feeling, and will refrain from doing something that would make his part stronger because it will give you a better chance. That would be the case generally, anyway. I don't know that it is with Mr. Hackett and me. We always talk over our parts very carefully together, our ideals are very much the same, and we decide in the first place just what is best to do, and then do it. I ought not to make a difference with people of strong character.

"I don't believe in hugging a part, anyway, and sneaking it behind some one's back. I think every one should have a chance. If I am playing with any one, and he or she has a chance to do some good work, I say, 'That is more your part than mine; do what you think best in it.' I might say, 'Have you considered this or that in connection with it?' and perhaps they have, and perhaps they haven't, and they change it or not, as they like. I always want people to feel that I am at least perfectly fair.

"A woman of the stage who is not in the same company with her husband loses a great deal in her private life. They are naturally separated much of the time, and she has not only the loneliness of being away from him, but she has to miss a great deal of the ordinary pleasures of society that she might have if he was with her. It is a pleasure to know clever men, as well as women, and broadening, and it seems hard to lose innocent amusements, but a woman who is on the stage belongs to the people; she is before them all the time, and she must be uncommonly circumspect, so that no shadow of a reflection may fall upon her, and to do that she has to give up a great deal and live very quietly. That is the great trouble, I think, for all women who support themselves and where men have the advantage."

"How about the people one is called to act with? Does it make any difference whether they are personally agreeable or if there is a feeling of dislike for them?"

"I should not like to have an unpleasant feeling for anyone with whom I was acting," said Miss Mannering. "It seems to me it must show itself in some way, particularly in a love scene. Some people, though, say that they always act better when they have a real dislike for the person with whom they are acting. I always like to have a pleasant feeling toward everyone. There is sometimes, I know, a great deal of feeling between people on the stage. One delightful thing about this company is, that there is nothing of the kind between the members, and everything is very harmonious.

"I have been very fortunate about the people with whom I have had to play, but after the first I do not think it would make so much difference anyway. It might at first when you were not entirely prepared. But when you are you know every little detail that you are to do on the stage and your personal feelings would not make much difference. Of course you have not always reached that stage because you may not have had the time to study, but that is the way it should be. Then, too, you become so much a part of the play that you have the feeling for the person you are playing with that the character you are playing does.

"When I am learning a part I think first just what I would do under the circumstances. Then I think of the girl whom I am to represent, her disposition, and what she would do in each place that I would not, where she would be harder or where she would be this or that. Then I do it as I think she would. Every little detail of the part is decided upon, you know exactly what you are to do in every instance, and when that is learned you put your impulse on the top and then you have it.

"Impulse? Well, perhaps I mean by that dramatic instinct. When a girl goes on the stage and doesn't know anything about acting, if she uses her dramatic instinct she gets on very well. You don't know how to do anything else at first. When I studied with Hermann Vezin, (or I didn't study under him, but I was in the company with him, and he helped me a great deal,) he would tell me how to do different things, but I didn't know enough then to do as he said. Still I would go on the stage, and through my impulse I would do practically the same thing. Then, later, I began to understand, I could see what he meant and do as he said. You could not stand the work more than two or three years if you acted only on impulse.

"But I like to put a great deal of impulse into a play. I never feel really satisfied unless I do. If you have the art of playing and have learned every detail of your part you can do it very nearly the same without the impulse. If I am tired I can go through the part, and very likely people will not see the difference, though it is never quite the same, and I would never feel satisfied myself."

HER EARLY EXPERIENCES.

"How did you happen to go on the stage?"

"Well, I had the measles," said Miss Mannering with a little laugh. "I had always wanted to go on the stage. I was only fifteen at that time, and I came out of school when I was taken ill, and it was not worth while to send me back to finish the term, so that when I was well I went to have my portrait painted. Most of our friends were artists.

"Oh, I said to the artist one day, 'how I would like to go on to the stage.'

"'Would your family be willing?' he asked.

"'Oh, yes,' I answered, 'they would not mind.'

"Well, the picture was finished, and we all went to see it when it was exhibited. In the meantime, the artist had told Edith Chester, who was a well-known actress, what I had said, and I met her at the exhibition.

"'Kyrle Bellew has been looking for just such a girl as you,' she said. You see, they considered that I had a Greek face. 'Would your family be willing to have you go on the stage?'

"'Oh yes,' I said.

"Well, soon I received a telegram from Mr. Bellew, asking to come and see him, and I went, and he engaged me for 'Hero and Leander,' with Mrs. Potter, you know, and she was lovely to me. But no one knew anything about it until I went home then and told my mother.

"'I have no objection to your going on the stage,' she said, 'but you are going to school first.'

"'No,' I said, 'I will go to school whenever I can, but this is my opportunity, and I must take it.' Then daddy came home, and we had a long talk about it.

"'Your mother will always travel with you.'

"'Of course,' I said, 'if I go on tour.'

"'Well,' he concluded, 'I will give you $50, and that is all I will do for you.' In the first year I paid back the $50, and dressed my sister and my cousin, and did ever so many things."

"Was it hard work? Did you have any hard times in your first stage experience?"

"No, I didn't have any trouble. Yes, I had one hard time. It was at the Opera Comique Theatre in London. A friend of mine had been dismissed, very unfairly, I thought, and I did not like it and refused to speak to the star, and at the end of the first week I received my notice of dismissal. I felt dreadfully, and thought that it had ruined my chances on the stage, and that I never should go on again. But it didn't do me any harm. No one knew me then, and it didn't affect me at all. I was only home two weeks when I received a letter from Comyns Carr asking me if I would like to play in 'Sowing the Wind.' Would I like to? Wouldn't I!

"There is a great deal I think, in taking your opportunity when it comes to you. After I finished with 'Hero and Leander' I thought I would play in standard plays and to understudy the seconds. Then one of the 'heavies' was taken ill. They said I couldn't take her part, but I could learn all the parts, and after that I played Helen in 'The Hunchback,' Celia in 'As You Like It,' Hero in 'Much Ado About Nothing,' and the Queen in 'Hamlet.' I was only a little over sixteen then, and I played that part for two months. Then both the Messrs. Frohman saw me, and I came here.

"Why had I studied so many parts? I loved it, and I am always ambitious about my work and ready to do something better as soon as I can. The only way is to be ready to take your opportunities. I tell the younger girls in the company to be always ready to understudy, for that is their opportunity to show what they can do. This year, for the first time in my life, I missed a performance. I said to one of the girls one day that she would have to take my place, I was afraid, because I didn't think I could possibly go on.

"'I can't do it, Miss Mannering,' she said. 'I have never understudied you. They told me there was no need of it, for you never missed a performance.' I told her to get ready as soon as she could, and I went on that day simply because I felt that I must. But Saturday I couldn't go, and she took the part, with the result that now they have given her the part of Lady Babbie on the road."

By that time Miss Mannering was dressed for the street and the maid fastened a pretty string of coral beads around her neck.

"This was one of my gifts on the first night of 'The Manoeuvres of Jane'; isn't it pretty?" she said. "Some of my intimate friends have begun the practice of giving me little gifts instead of sending me flowers on first nights. Acquaintances send me those. Flowers are so expensive and they last for such a short time. Besides these beads I had this little silver belt"—it was charmingly fine silver work, and she had it on also—"a little purse, two brooches, and some French initial handkerchiefs. This little chain bracelet, which has such a pretty tassel to it, was given me on the first night of 'John Ingerfield.' It is pleasant to look at different things and say, 'This represents "John Ingerfield."' 'This is "Trelawney,"' and 'This is "The Manoeuvres of Jane."'

ABOUT HER AMBITIONS.

"The parts I like best? I liked that in 'John Ingerfield.' That was a problem play and not a problem play. There was a marriage of convenience, a woman who thought she could live without love, but she was young and she found she could not do it. She tried in every way to win her husband's love, but without success. He showed that he felt that he had bought her and she need not expect anything more of him. Then her old lover comes back, and she is about to go off with him when her husband shows that there is some real manliness in his nature, she feels that if there is a little there must be more, turns to him, and eventually he loves her devotedly. I like to play a part where a woman grows mentally, morally, and physically in a play.

"No, I don't dislike 'Jane.' I think she improves at last through her love, and she finds she cannot have her way always. I don't like a play that goes straight along. Of course, I never have one; I wouldn't play in that way, but some plays are very hard to break up. I would like to play something serious.

"Of course, you would like to play heavies,' Mr. Frohman says, 'because you play comedy; people always do.'

"That is not it, but I like to play something that will make me think. I like to have more of a part, I am ambitious. I would like to make people cry. I don't know as that is better for the people who go to see the play. I should like to do it selfishly for my own pleasure. I think people should come away from the theatre feeling better, and I always feel better when there is something in the play that makes me cry. I hate to cry, though. I hate to be seen crying. I went to see 'The Elder Miss Blossom' the other day. Mrs. Kendal plays that wonderfully, and when she says so pathetically, 'It came to me so late!' I could feel the great sobs welling up, though we were in a box and no one could see. It was so sad. If I had any tragedies in my life, I think I should be selfish and want something that some one would share with me.

"The worst part of being on the stage," Miss Mannering said, going back to the first part of the conversation, "is that there is so little chance for a domestic life. Everything else about it is beautiful but you have to sacrifice your private life for your profession, and to be separated from those you care most for. It seems to me that my idea of hell is to be alone. My mother was with me at first, and then I was married, and now that Mr. Hackett is away, I feel when I go to my apartment as if I was shut up in a prison, and to have the loneliness broken for a short time makes it seem worse than before. I don't know what I shall do after this year. I don't know whether I shall go with Mr. Hackett or not. If I did we would be in various parts of the country, and it would not be possible to have a home, and I don't know as he would care to have me make the sacrifice. It would not be quite the same thing professionally to play leading parts with him. If I do not star, I may stay in New York and take special parts, and then I can take only those that I like."

VARIOUS DRAMATIC TOPICS.

Paul Wilstach contributes to the current number of The Bookman "Some Footnotes to Cyrano." One of his footnotes curiously and mistakenly identifies de Guiche, called in the last act of Rostand's play Duc de Grammont, and spoken of as a nephew of Richelieu, with the witty and prodigate Philibert, Comte de Grammont, who was one of the gay figures in the Court of Charles II of England and whose published memoirs, though not esteemed a worthy book for general reading, are treasured by historical students. Mr. Wilstach has discovered that de Guiche was born in 1604 and died in 1678. The Count of Grammont was born in 1621 and died in 1707.

Augustus Thomas's new comedy, called "Oliver Goldsmith," which Stuart Robson tried in Albany last week, is in three acts and introduces, besides the author of "The Vicar of Wakefield," Dr. Johnson, David Garrick, Boswell and Edmund Burke. Goldsmith's affection for Mary Horneck, the incident of his obtaining a private house for an inn (which he afterward put to good use in his best comedy) are woven into the play, the villain of which seems to be, appropriately enough, a critic. The scene of Act II. is the Drury Lane stage during a rehearsal of "She Stoops to Conquer."

A niece of the famous Julia Dean Hayne, whom your grandfather, as likely as not, thought the loveliest and greatest actress of her time, has just gone on the stage in St. Paul, Minn., where she was born. She is said to be pretty and clever.

When Edward Marston, the old actor, whose death was announced in THE TIMES a few days ago, was stricken with his last illness, he had just undertaken to give a performance of "Ten Nights in a Barroom" at City Island for a charitable purpose. With this old "temperance" drama, taken from one of T. S. Arthur's innumerable stories, the fame of Marston used to be associated. He is said to have acted Samuel Switchell 1,000 times. With him, in this improvised performance of the old play, were to have been his wife, who used to be a well-known actress, and another veteran, George Maddox. The T. S. Arthur drama somewhat antedates "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Arthur's "temperance" story was published in the late forties. It formed the third volume in his six-volume series, entitled "Advice to Young People." Its popularity as a book and as a play was enormous. In fact, "Ten Nights in a Barroom" still survives on our stage. A new production of the play, with elaborate scenic effects and "specialties," is a "road attraction" this season.

A dramatization of "Quo Vadis" by Stanislaus Stange will be produced in Chicago to-morrow night under the management of F. C. Whitney. Rehearsals have been going on here for many weeks. The scenic pictures of Nero's Rome are expected to be elaborate. The cast will include Joseph Haworth and Rosalie Knott as the hero and heroine, who so greatly resemble the two principal personages of "The Sign of the Cross." That excellent actor, Arthur Forrest, has been secured for Petronius. Alice Fischer will be Poppaea, and Maude Dealey, a handsome novice from Denver, Eunice. Meanwhile another stage version of Sienkiewicz's precious romance, made by Charles W. Chase and produced by Alden Benedict, is "on the road." In this a "novel feature" is the Lord's Prayer recited to music, with appropriate pictorial surroundings. With the "Nunc Dimittis" in "Ben Hur" and the Lord's Prayer in "Quo Vadis" we may confidently look for the Magnificat and the Apostles' Creed on the theatrical stage before long.

Frederick Paulding has been acting Rip Van Winkle in Milwaukee.

"The Adventure of Lady Ursula" will go on tour Christmas Day, with William Morris in the character Mr. Sothern acted at the Lyceum Theatre.

Felix Morris has lately added to his repertory for "continuous performance" Hennes Bouchcault's version of Mme. de Girardin's "La Joie Fait Peur," called "Kerry," in which the old French servant, Noel, of the original, is transformed into an Irish retainer in an English family. As Noel, Constant Coquelin made his first appearance in this country in October, 1886. Regnier used to act the part at the Theatre Français, but there were many cosmopolitan dramatic connoisseurs who used to insist that no other actor ever surpassed the pathos, humor, and exquisite naturalness of Bouchcault's portrayal. Mr. Morris acts the character tolerably well. It is quite in his line.

Theatrical illusion is striven for nowadays in the external affairs of the theatre as assiduously as and often more successfully than on the stage. No play is ever confessedly withdrawn from performance simply because nobody cares to see it, but generally in order to fulfill engagements in other cities, or in the moon, entered into months or years previously. No actor ever is retired from the cast of a play for inefficiency, but always for some amazing reason the statement of which reveals his faith and his manager's in the boundless credulity of the public. If a performance is interrupted or postponed, the excuse given is, in nine cases out of ten, absolutely false. If a "star" parts company with a manager who has mismanaged his affairs, both have themselves "interviewed" in their "favorite journal," which is generally the one which has treated them most severely and unjustly, announcing that the only cause of the separation is the unlimited confidence and esteem each feels for the other. Yet, while theatrical facts are so hard to get, the mail of the dramatic editor of a metropolitan newspaper contains scores hundreds of letters every week from actors and their managers asking for "notices." The expedite of the "profession" for free publicity is unattainable. In view of this, what a pity it is that imagination is not a commoner trait among these folks. The actors and managers seem to lack cleverness of invention as much as most of the playwrights they choose to recognize.

"Susie Forrester" doesn't sound particularly bulky if you say it fast. Yet Susie is probably the largest woman on the vaudeville stage. She was at Proctor's Theatre last week. Herbert Cawthorne being her partner in a "comedy duo," as they style themselves. Susie has a baby face crowning such a bulky frame as is rarely seen in a public exhibition unless it is at a museum, among fat women. Her bulk is a part of her stock in trade and is emphasized by her slim partner in attempts to embrace her in a love-making scene that seems to strike frequenters of "the continuous" as extraordinarily funny. Thus Cawthorne says, when trying to embrace her, "I wonder if I can ever get around that; guess I can if I get a transfer at Fifty-ninth Street." When she steps on his toes in one of their mad embraces, there is, of course, misery for the man and a laugh from the crowd when he remarks as he looks at her, "She must be loaded with pig iron." Laughter peals forth again when the toe-treading experience is repeated, giving the little man an opportunity not only to say, "I'll win her if my feet hold out," but to stand in an empty coal scuttle in order to save his toes from further crushing, and from that point of vantage to carry on his love-making. While that sort of boisterous fun does not appeal to the educated or to the habitual theatregoer, it is a fair sample of the sort of thing that goes tremendously at the vaudevilles. There is a standard all their own at those theatres, and this fat woman who exploits that fatness with a thin man as a foil, is a good type of it.

Charles Frohman expects to produce in New York next March the English adaptation of "Ma Bru," called "My Daughter-in-Law." If he can make the necessary arrangements, Seymour Hicks and his wife (Ellaline Terriss) will come from London to act the principal parts in which they appeared there at the Criterion.

The subscription for seats at the Irving Place Theatre for the six performances of the German comedian, Scheighofer, beginning Christmas night, is very large. The advance sale of single seats begins to-morrow. Scheighofer is the foremost comic actor of this era on the German stage.

Before its first production at the Princess's Theatre, London, Arthur Shirley's Transvaal war play, "For Queen and Country," was renamed "The Absent-Minded Beggar," in recognition of the enormous popularity of Mrs Kipling's latest verses.

The Beetrkabote, an anti-Semitic journal in Vienna, recently described Shylock as Grillparzer's great picture of an evil Jew. A jocular person wrote to the editor that he and not Grillparzer was the author of the play in which Shylock figures, and signed himself "William Shakespeare." Whereupon the intelligent Beetrkabote apologized to "Mr. Shakespeare" for attributing his play to another. Anyhow, they have been circulating that yarn in Vienna.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

NEW YORK THEATRE.—The last week of the Jeffries-Sharkey fight pictures is announced.

KNICKERBOCKER THEATRE.—Mr. and Mrs. Kendal, in their comedy "The Elder Miss Blossom," are receiving their fair share of attention.

HAMMERSTEIN'S VICTORIA.—"The Rogers Brothers in Wall Street" is constantly receiving new additions in the way of songs and jokes.

MURRAY HILL THEATRE.—The Donnelly stock company will revive David Belasco's and Franklin Fyles's play, "The Girl I Left Behind Me."

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—The admirers of Denman Thompson will have a revival of his rural drama, "The Old Homestead" for this entire week.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Way Down East" will begin its fifth week at the Academy of Music to-morrow evening. Although in its third season, it is doing the largest business known in its career.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—"Sporting Life." Jacob Litt's spectacular melodrama, will be presented to-morrow evening with all the realistic scenic and mechanical effects for which it is noted.

DALY'S THEATRE.—Daniel Frohman's company, appearing in Henry Arthur Jones's comedy, "The Manoeuvres of Jane," has proved a success, and bids fair to duplicate its success achieved in London.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—Several changes have been made in the burlesque "Daddy Dotty," which will add to its interest. Manager Teller's efforts to rehabilitate the house and give a good clean performance are meeting with success.

CASINO.—"The Singing Girl" starts on the third month of its career to-morrow night. Company B, Seventh Regiment National Guard, will attend the performance to-morrow attired in full dress uniform.

MANHATTAN THEATRE.—Anna Held continues her notable artistic and financial success in "Papa's Wife," which begins its second month. The house is sold every night and the advance sale extends for weeks ahead.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—An enchanged performance of "Round New York in Eighty Minutes" will be given this week. The pictures of Jeffries and Sharkey, which were shown last week for the first time, have proved very successful.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Miss Annie Russell has passed the one hundredth performance of "Miss Hobbs," and on Dec. 18 Charles Frohman's Duke of York Theatre Company will produce "Miss Hobbs" at the Duke of York Theatre, London.

EMPIRE THEATRE.—John Drew begins the last two weeks of his engagement in "The Tyranny of Tears." The Empire Theatre Company returns to its home in a fortnight to open its regular season with H. V. Esmond's play, "My Lady's Lord."

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.—An evidence of the dramatic season being well advanced is the fact that Miss Fiske will to-morrow night play "Becky Sharp" for the one hundred and first time, when the management will distribute souvenirs of an illustrated book of the play.

GARRICK THEATRE.—William Gillette's success in "Sherlock Holmes" is crowding the Garrick Theatre to its capacity at every performance. It has been decided that after the New York run ends "Sherlock Holmes" and Mr. Gillette will go to London to remain there indefinitely.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—The production of "Ben Hur" has proved a record-breaker in receipts for this house, and up to last night's performance, which was the fourteenth, the box office statement showed receipts of $33,000 since the opening night, an average of $2,300 for each performance, which represents the capacity of the theatre.

BIJOU THEATRE.—The second month of May Irwin in "Sister Mary" goes merrily on. There is no diminution in the large audiences which have marked this engagement. The frequent changes in her song re-

There was one thing the Baltimore Rainy Day Club undertook in which it was not successful. It undertook to help the girls in the shops into short skirts. It is a difficult thing for society women or so-called society women to help business women of any class or kind. They mean kindly and perhaps the business women are a little proud. Very likely they do not like to be helped and improved. Perhaps they think there is a little patronage in the efforts made in their behalf. There is pretty certain to be, as most women who have undertaken to earn their own livings have discovered, when they have accepted little kindnesses, though the intentions may have been of the best.

An exceptionally clever New York woman, not particularly young—that is to say, old enough to be well educated and cultivated—a teacher as it happened of experience, met an acquaintance not long ago in the library of an organization whose sole aim is to help women. Incidentally she remarked: "I come here to the library, but I could never come here for anything else, no matter how much I might want it. There is too much patronage." There was a woman who from the point of ability stood far above the average woman, yet she could not accept any of the privileges offered here with self-respect. She is not the only woman who has said the same thing of that institution, and it is the same with others of a like nature. The Baltimore women went around to the different department stores to see if the proprietors would be willing to have the women in their establishments interested. They were not enthusiastic, but eventually gave their consent. There were 400 invitations sent out to the young women. There was one response. The young woman who answered politely declined to become a member of an associate rainy day club, to pay 50 cents annual dues, and meet with the mother society once a year. Young women who are not in society have much the same feelings of those who are. There is much talk of the personal equation in helping people, but the personal benefit is a difficult, very difficult, one to bestow.

The motor carriages bring foot travelers and the carriage people into much closer—communication, one might say. If some one is almost run over in an ordinary carriage the people in it are hardly conscious of the fact, for there is the distance of the horse between them and the victim. But without the horse it is quite different. Two women were riding in one of the cabs on Twenty-third Street one day last week when at the Fifth Avenue corner there was something of a block, the automobile was moving very slowly, but some foot passengers were undecided as to whether to go in front of it or not. Two women were among them. One of them started to go, stopped again, afraid of the horid thing, which she was not sure might not start off on a tangent at any moment. She decided not to cross at all; then, like a hen, at the last minute, decided she would, in a hurry, and skedaddled across. "Skedaddle" seems to express exactly the half-terrified, half-courageous way in which she ran. The women in the motor cab laughed heartily. They were so near her, sitting securely in their seats, and her fright and haste looked so ridiculous and the woman herself laughed, too, as she waited for her companion to cross leisurely after the cab had passed.

By the way, aren't the automobiles going to alter some of our expressions? We have heretofore been very careful to say that we were going riding when we went out on horseback and driving when going in a carriage. What does the one who rides in the automobile do? Is that going moting?

One of the inaccuracies in a book upon America written by an Englishman recently is the statement that Americans all dine at the ridiculous hour of 2 o'clock. That comes to us while Mr. and Mrs. Kendal are in New York, and they can never bring themselves to conform to the American dinner at night and always dine at 3:30 and take a late supper after the play.

"Wouldn't you believe that some women didn't know anything about keeping house?" queried an old conductor on one of the surface cars. "Now there is a nice-looking woman throwing the little girl's banana skin on the floor for some one to slip on." Then he went in and picked up the skin ostentatiously, and the woman had the good taste to blush.

Mrs. Jennie June Croly is to have a birthday the 19th of this month, and as it is her seventieth the Daughters of 1812 are going to celebrate it with a lunch party at Delmonico's. They are inviting clubwomen very generally to be present. They give the menu in advance to prove that the expense is not going to be great to the individual.

"People have no idea of the discomforts of travel as they used to be, compared to the comforts we have now," said the elderly woman. "I remember one time when I was a girl, up in the extreme northern part of the country, traveling in a stage coach, when we had a troublesome passenger. He was a Scotch minister, but ministers are as human as other people. This one had come over to this country to preach, and he had his sermons with him in his trunk, or box, as he called it, and he was extremely afraid something would happen to them. He was inside the stage, the box being on top with the driver, and to him he kept calling constantly to see if everything was all right. Now the rest of us inside were tired and we wanted to sleep, and just as we would dose off Mr. Campbell—that was his name—would make one of his periodical demands of the driver and waken us. One of the passengers stood it as long as he could, and then he burst out.

"'Look here, dominie, I wish you were an elephant instead of a camel, and then you would have your trunk with you.'

"We didn't have any more trouble that night."

"Well, Helen," said the young woman to the little girl of four who was standing near her, "what are you going to have when you grow up?"

"I know," said the little girl, with a serious air; "I shall have a blouse and a separate skirt."

"Dear me," said the older woman, surprised at this serious idea of dress in the mind of this very young woman, "what do you know about separate skirts?"

"Why, I have seen them in the stores," said the small girl in surprise.

A physician who was educated in Prague, and is practical as well as thorough, says that it is a pity more people do not know the value of catnip tea. When taken hot in the first stages of a cold it will break it up. It must not be taken before going out, however, for it throws the patient into a perspiration.

FEMININE FRILLS.

The opal seems to be having its inning this year. There are many of these stones to be seen among the jewels that people are buying for holiday gifts. A new use of opals is in a necklace, strung like pearls. Opals are beginning to stand by their own beauty in rings, and are mounted alone, large solitaires, and they are very lovely. Occasionally one opal is set its oval length across the ring, a style that is pretty in the ring, but not always as becoming to the hand. Other opals are set plain and have a few small diamonds in the ring on either side, and they are very pretty. Opals are to be seen in watches also, and in some a large circular opal forms the whole of one side of the case, only showing a narrow margin of gold. Another watch has a big heart-shaped opal set in the case. There are many rings with opals surrounded by diamonds, but the other style is newer.

A little woman who has a number of unset turquois says that the change of color in these pretty stones is contagious. She will have a number of turquoises together in a paper, all of them showing the proper deep blue tint, and then all of a sudden she will discover that one is turning the pale green that turquois will acquire after a time. Then she takes it out, or, if she does not, the whole pack will become affected and every turquoise will put on that pale blue green dress which is pretty in itself, but which detracts from the value of the stone.

No one can say that fringe is not fashionable when it is to be found in lamps. A beautiful one which has the bowl and shade set with silver filigree work has around the edge of the shade a chain fringe, each strand of the fringe bearing on the end a pretty silver ball. It is a fringe that but for the actual weight would be charming as an edge for an Eton jacket.

There is a doll amusing herself at the piano in one of the shop windows, actually well proportioned. She is a "lady" doll, fashionably dressed; she has a head the right size for her body, not four or five times too large, as is the case with most dolls, and she has a face which is expressive. There is a gay little smile upon it as she sits with her hat on her head, as if she had just come in from the street, and drums upon her miniature piano. Her realistic appearance is heightened by the eyelashes of real hair, upper and under, which give her a coquettish look.

The dress suit case has an umbrella made on purpose for it. It is an ordinary looking umbrella when in its ordinary ready-for-use condition, but when ready for the suit case it has the handle and ferrule end unscrewed and bent over so that there is only the length of the umbrella part to go into the case. A good silk umbrella can be bought for $5, and is convenient for the trunk as well as for hand baggage.

Many of the most expensive jewels are the most simple in effect. A big gold-brown diamond set with a few small white stones is a pendant for the neck and worn on a slender chain of platinum, which is hardly visible on the wearer, and which gives the ornament the effect of being a plain bit of jewelry, but its price is elaborate. The pins for chatelaine watches when they are studded with gems have a platinum foundation, as in ornaments for the hair and corsage, and which is almost invisible.

There is nothing new in covered clothes hangers for Christmas gifts, but they are so pretty and useful that it is strange that they are not more frequently used. The cheap foundation only costs a few cents, then with a little cotton and a few yards of ribbon they are easily made. The broad flowered ribbons that are sold at such reasonable prices are as satisfactory as anything to cover them. Two widths of ribbon should be stitched together at the edge, leaving a rather wide seam on the outside. The cotton batting with a little sachet is tacked to the wooden frame, the hook wound with a narrow ribbon of some solid color to agree with one of the colors of the flowered ribbon, which is slipped on a little full over the cotton and fastened in place. Some of the hangers have the ribbon put on straight and with a little ruffle left at either end of the wooden rod and tied around with a narrow ribbon and tied again on either side midway between the end and the hook.

Needle books are gifts that are always acceptable, and easy and inexpensive to make. A bit of fancy ribbon is cut into shape, bound around the edges with baby ribbon, leaves of fine flannel are cut to fit and pinked, and tacked in, and another piece of the baby ribbon placed between the leaves brought through the centre of the book and tied on the outside in a little bow. Any one who knows how to handle a needle can make one of these in a short time, and with painting, embroidery and any other kind of pretty work that women do, the covers can be varied indefinitely by more talented workwomen.

Coral has made its way into brooches, big ones, some made of round bead-like pieces of coral in a cluster to match studs and cuff buttons, and the 1890 form coral has taken, and others in heads, some very pretty Egyptian designs. It may be because the season is over, and it certainly is late for cherries, but an uptown store is having a sale of umbrellas with clusters of cherries upon the handles at a bargain. Pearl passementerie and white fringe are two of the prettiest materials used for trimming the delicate pink and blue gowns of crêpe de chine. A pretty fringe that has the advantage of not catching in everything has the body made of a network of silk threads crossed and the pointed edge, the fringe part, is made of short loops of the silk.

A pretty bathrobe is a good Christmas gift for a man. Some swell ones are checker-boarded off in squares of pink and white or blue and white, or some other delicate shades. The warm woolen gloves for country wear of white or red are also attractive gifts.

There are all sorts of pretty soft materials in bathrobes for women, and the "mules" that go with them—low slippers, with only the toe piece so that the foot can be slipped in and out easily—are prettier and more satisfactory than any crocheted slipper that ever was made. There is one thing about them that a woman likes. She is not obliged to wear the large sizes. There being no heel if the slipper is a little short, it is not uncomfortable, does not look small for her and does not proclaim to the world when it is off that she is a large woman and has a large foot.

A great many tabs are to be seen on the new gowns. They button across the fronts of jackets and gowns, they fasten one side of the skirt to the other, and they are pretty overpieces of dark trimmings or fur set into light gowns. Usually they button alternate ways. Bands of fur are exceedingly pretty set into gowns, and fur is used in bands in the usual way around the skirt. They edge the overskirt and jackets of many pretty suits.

WORK OF PARIS SCULPTORS

Dalou's "Triumph of the Republic" Unveiled by M. Loubet.

A VISIT TO THE GREAT STUDIOS

Statue of Dumas Fils—Sale of Sarcey's Books Not a Success—Loie Fuller's Dance.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Nov. 24.—The event of the week has been the unveiling in the Place de la Nation of Dalou's monumental bronze statue, "The Triumph of the Republic." The event was made the occasion for a great popular demonstration in favor of President Loubet and the French Government. For a long time, in truth, the voice of public acclamation and the sympathy of the crowd have been denied both to President Loubet and the Ministry. Ever since the day that Déroulède seized the bridle of Gen. Roget's horse outside the barracks at Reuilly—a spot in curious proximity to the Place de la Nation—and begged him to march on the Elysée, the Government of the French Republic has been eyed coldly by the populace of Paris and has had to put up with no small measure of sarcasm from the greater portion of the French press. With a view, therefore, of giving the people of Paris a chance of showing their sympathy toward the head of the State, and in the hope of securing their plaudits, the Government seized the opportunity, afforded by the completion of Dalou's statue, of organizing a manifestation in favor of itself.

Some days before the ceremony posters had been affixed to the walls throughout the city inviting the citizens to attend "en masse" at the inauguration. As the event proved, they were not backward in accepting the invitation. Over 200,000 persons crowded to the scene and sent up an immense shout of welcome when the Ministerial cortège was seen approaching. The day, in fact, was almost all that the Government could have desired, and the ovation which M. Loubet received was a great one. It is true that at the end of the proceedings, and as the President was about to retire in his carriage, some inimical shouts were heard. Here and there a red Communist banner or a black Anarchist flag fluttered in the breeze. But these symptoms of hostile demonstration were quickly suppressed, and the disorder never became dangerous. It would seem that under the crisp air of the bright November sky the populace felt too exuberant for anything but mirth.

The chief interest in the proceedings, from the spectacular point of view, lay in the picturesque sight afforded by the various processions—municipal and otherwise—which marched to the scene of the unveiling, amid the waving of thousands of banners and the shouts of great crowds. Representatives of many leagues, delegations from Masonic lodges, from the flowermakers of Paris, from the house painters, from the market gardeners of the suburbs, from the irrepressible "Dames de Halles"—a body of whom, in red bonnets, excited much enthusiasm—all wending their way by different streets and boulevards, marched to the monument and there took up position. At least 50,000 persons must have joined in the various processions.

On the arrival of the Ministers, among whom MM. Waldeck-Rousseau, Leygues, Millerand, Baudia, and Decrais were conspicuous, the bands played the usual orchestration and a many-hundred-voiced choir sang a "Hymne pour une fête républicaine." This was followed by speeches by the Prefect of the Seine and various town councilors, which none but those in the immediate vicinity of the orators could hear, and then the sculptor Dalou was presented to the President and formally invested with the order and insignia of a Commander of the Legion of Honor.

The monument itself is vigorously executed, but from the point of view of general conception shows a considerable falling off in the sculptor's powers. The figure of a female who has seen her best days personifies the republic balancing herself on a globe, a very shaky position, by the way, which can only be satisfactorily maintained in a circus, and she and the globe are placed upon a triumphal car, flanked by lay figures. Since Dalou returned from exile and gave up his Communist theories for moderate republicanism his artistic methods have become painfully official.

IN THE SCULPTORS' STUDIOS.

While the republic was triumphing in the Place de la Nation the German Emperor was embracing his grandmother, and thus adding a new torch to the fire of hatred and jealousy which the French have cherished against Great Britain. This fire grows hotter every day, and if bad words could break bones there would be a declaration of war to-morrow between the two countries. A comic paper called the Rire, which is as a rule full of brilliant things, published a supplement yesterday which is one long series of atrocious insults against the English. The text is by a gentleman named Pawlowsky, while the drawings are by Willette, that spoiled Pierrot of Montmartre, a genius with his pencil, but a wayward, naughty gamin of the Paris boulevard, all the same. What the two of them combine to say about England and English men and women could not even be whispered in any decent society outside of France. The publication is an indelible disgrace to the country where it is possible and to the Government which tolerates it.

In one of his essays on the French Nation Matthew Arnold has made the remark that France would always be saved by her minority. Despite the agitation of the streets, despite sullen and ever-recurring rumors of revolutionary plots, there is always to be found in Paris a band of people—the great art workers—who pursue the even tenor of their way, their minds unruffled by any cares other than those of giving visible expression to their dreams of beauty. A visit at present to the studios of some of the great sculptors acts as a palliative on the nerves of one who has been living amid the lurid excitement of recent political events.

In the quiet of the atelier life once more becomes a dream—a dream of splendid idleness, where great thoughts lie low. In the workshop of Barrias and Rodin there may now be seen many beautiful things. The former has well-nigh completed his Victor Hugo, and the latter is engaged on a multitude of disquieting but exquisite female figures. Perhaps the most interesting studio just now is that of René de Saint-Marceaux. In the Avenue de Villiers. This sculptor has just brought to completion his rough model for the statue of Dumas fils, and he has had the satisfaction of finding his work acceptable to the Directors and Commissioners of the Beaux-Arts.

Dumas fils will always be regarded as the great confessor of woman. His dramas form a long series of feminine wail and confession. And it is in this light that Saint-Marceaux has decided to regard the dramatist. The sculptor has seated the master on a pedestal, clothed in that costume of gray flannel which those familiar with him know him to have ever worn when at his morning work. With paper and quill in hand, he is represented in the act of meditation, musing, it well may be, on the ideas which he had disclosed in his "Idées de Madame Aubray." Around him there rise, in graceful groups, a number of charming modern-like sylphs, each bearing a certain facial resemblance to some of the most eminent of the characters scattered throughout his dramas. There, it may be imagined, is Francillon and La Femme de Claude, here Diane de Lys and l'Etrangère. One figure rises higher than the rest and almost approaches the level of the master's ear. Doubtless Saint-Marceaux intends it for that of Marguerite Gautier, that Dame aux Camélias, whose story of love and suffering has been acted on most of the great stages in the world by Eleonora Duse and Sarah Bernhardt.

"LE FAUBOURG" PRODUCED.

M. Abel Hermant, whose "Transatlantiques" was so great a success at the Gymnase last year, is the author of the new piece just produced at the Vaudeville. It is entitled "Le Faubourg," and deals with the foibles of aristocratic society in Paris. Its psychology is somewhat complicated, but the public applauded it nevertheless, and it is assured of a long run. Some of the spectators saw in certain of the scenes a clear reference to well-known personages and recent scandals. This will not make the piece less attractive. There is a Prince who might be the Prince de Chimay and a Princess whose methods are not altogether foreign from those of Miss Clara Ward. Rigo is a young Count not of the best faubourg noblesse, whose father is a Limoges porcelain manufacturer and has been made a Duke by the Pope for special services—in this case a dinner service. Finally the curtain falls on the Prince and Princess, who part woefully convinced that neither can live with the other. The appearances, however, are saved. Gentry was the Prince and Mlle. Theo the Princess. The staging is admirable.

I met Loie Fuller last Sunday at the house of that charming American lady the Marquise d'Oyley. With the glamour she is now obliged to wear, Loie is not easily recognizable off the stage. She suffers from her nerves, the result of dancing as she does in an ocean of conflicting electric currents. The electricity was bringing her hair off, loosening her teeth, and turning her blind and deaf. She is getting better now owing to careful treatment, and her conversation is still sprightly and witty. On the first of next month she is to appear at the Olympia in a new dance, which is supposed to take place not, as one New York reporter has said, in Hades, but in the middle of the earth.

SARCEY'S BOOKS BEING SOLD.

A very interesting collection of rare books is now being offered for sale at the Hôtel des Ventes. It belonged to the late Francisque Sarcey, the famous Parisian dramatic critic who died a few months ago. Francisque Sarcey, it will be remembered, had been the dramatic critic of the Temps for some thirty years, and had a great hobby for books, both ancient and modern. He possessed one of the finest private collections in the world, and yet none of the books have sold for very good prices, most of them going for a few hundred francs. A copy of Lafontaine's "Contes et Nouvelles," 1762 edition, which is one of the few scarce books in the collection, was bought for 42?. The "edition Nationale," in forty-three volumes, of Victor Hugo's works, which is said to be worth 1,500 francs, went for 730. A copy of "La Dame aux Camélias," with an envoi written by Alexandre Dumas, was sold for 36?. Altogether the first half of the sale has realized 35,000?. R. S.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

RUSSIA AND THE PERSIAN GULF.—A fortnight ago a Russian cruiser was ordered to leave one of the Indian ports and to proceed to the Persian Gulf. In commenting upon this increase of naval force along the coast of Persia, the Rossija of St. Petersburg says: "There can be no doubt that the Russian flag appears in the Persian Gulf without any offensive intention and without any desire to appropriate territory. At the same time there can be no doubt that Great Britain will scarcely dare to make any annexation in the presence of a Russian man-of-war. From many points of view the appearance of the Russian flag in the Indian Ocean and in the Persian Gulf, especially in the present state of affairs, must be welcomed gladly."

The article in which the above passage appeared was telegraphed at London by the St. Petersburg correspondents, and its publication tended to allay the apprehension that the report of the augmentation of the Russian naval force in the Persian Gulf had aroused. The Chino, the principal organ of the Japanese Government, takes a serious view of the matter, and one that is expected to attract the attention of the British Foreign Office. Says The Chino, in that part of the paper exclusively devoted to articles inspired by the Government:

"The problem which is now attracting the attention of every Nation is that of the Far East. Russia is seeking to spread out its wings over Eastern Asia, and Germany wishes to create an independent territory in that region. France is stretching out its hands thither, while Italy is casting envious eyes upon China. However, if the attention of Great Britain is claimed to such an extent by the condition of affairs in South Africa that it cannot make its influence felt in the Far East, then the equilibrium at present existing between the powers will be destroyed, and the inclination to make the most of the opportunity will not be confined to one or two powers.

"Will not Russia wish to snatch some colpn of vantage on the Persian Gulf? Will Russia not attempt to carry out its long-cherished project for constructing a railway to Pekin? Will Germany find nothing which it can claim? A speedy victory for Great Britain in the Transvaal will be the best guarantee of the maintenance of peace and justice in the Far East."

GERMANY OUTWITS FRANCE IN CONSTANTINOPLE.—The Sultan's grant of the Bagdad railway concession to a German banking syndicate in Constantinople, news of which was cabled to this country recently, has created some excitement in European diplomatic circles, particularly in Paris. There the action of the Sultan is regarded as a sharp rebuff to France, and the conviction prevails that British capitalists will be induced to take in hand the construction of the railway. Everywhere great importance is attached to the transaction, both from a political as well as from a commercial point of view. In Berlin and London attention is called to the political and economical change that has come over the Sultan's views, and the fact is emphasized that the change is worthy of the attention of financiers and others who try to make remunerative investments of the capital in concessions for big industrial enterprises.

Unlike the present time the Sultan has shown his disinclination to make any concessions which would give property rights to the concessionaires. In the case of the concession granted for the quays of Constantinople, for example, the Sultan is endeavoring to purchase them before the expiration of the delay agreed to in the convention, with the object of making the State the proprietor of the land on which they are built. At present, however, there is no money available with which the purchase can be made, but the Sultan hopes that the commission he has appointed for the purpose will find some combination to arrange a loan guaranteed by the working of the quays. It is said in Constantinople that in the case of the Bagdad Railway property rights go with the concession.

THE FINANCES OF EGYPT.—The Egyptian Budget for 1900 has just been submitted to the Council of Ministers in Cairo. It is expected that Great Britain will pay, as she did last year, the expenses involved in the military operations against the Dervishes. Owing to the insufficient Nile flood last Summer, which was the lowest recorded, the receipts from the land tax and railways are estimated, respectively, at over £200,000 and £100,000 below normal. But the actual expenditure shows an economy of over £100,000 upon the budget estimates of 1899 due to the reduced railway expenses and the abolition of the salt monopoly, which has been transferred to a private company.

On the expenditure side there is placed the sum of £800,000 which the Government, under the international convention, must hand to the Commissioners of the Public Debt. The Soudan deficit is estimated as the same as last year's, or about £100,000. It is estimated that the imports for the present year will amount to a third more than last year, or to about £15,000,000, while the exports will climb very near £20,000,000. Nearly one-half of the latter go to Great Britain. No curtailment of expenditure is deemed necessary, and no new credits have been accorded to departmental budgets, as has hitherto been customary. Under the circumstances the equilibrium between receipts and expenditure is considered very satisfactory. It is pointed out, moreover, that the water supply has been so deficient that if the same thing had occurred before the British occupation it would have entailed grave disasters.

FALLING OFF IN THE NUMBER OF FRENCH CONSCRIPTS.—This year's contingent of French conscripts, popularly called "les bleus," are now joining their respective regiments. Many hundreds of them are obliged to pass through Paris, where they appear in small squads in charge of Corporals or Sergeants, and present in their civilian clothes and with bundles under their arms anything but a military appearance.

The total number of conscripts this year shows a reduction of nearly 13,000 from that of last year. This marked decrease has caused the Nationalist press to lay the blame at the door of the present Cabinet. The fundamental cause of the diminution is due to the stationary state of the population, but Gen. de Galliffet, the Minister of War, has caused the medical examination of conscripts to be much more severe than was formerly the practice. It may be recalled that in 1890 Gen. Mercier, then Minister of War, alarmed at the dwindling of the annual contingent, ordered the military medical boards to pass men who, though they would not be fit to make active soldiers, might yet be utilized for duties that do not involve actual fighting.

Paris contributes this year about 10,000 conscripts. Among them are 600 young men who are to be sent to do garrison duty in Africa. They are vulgarly known as "les petits joyeux," and have nearly all received the hospitality of the State in one of the prisons or reformatory schools of the Department of the Seine. All of them have been condemned by the courts for some offense against the laws, many of them, however, having only committed some slight misdemeanor, were at the time of their condemnation allowed the benefit of "la loi Bérenger," or First Offenders' act, in order that they might not have to go to prison and so become contaminated through contact with habitual criminals. Becoming conscripts, however, they are thrown in the very company of the men from whose influence the First Offenders' act was intended to free them. In the "Petits Joyeux" regiments discipline is very severe, and in case of war in tropical countries these men are the first to be sent to the front.

A RUSSIAN SEQUEL TO THE DREYFUS CASE.—A St. Petersburg paper reports that M. Zakrevsky, an eminent jurist, ex-Procureur General of the Russian Court of Appeal, and member of the Imperial Senate, has been discharged from his official position. Last year M. Zakrevsky aroused the ire of President Faure's Government by contributing to the Law Journal of St. Petersburg a series of articles on various matters connected with the Dreyfus case, in which he expressed his disgust at the efforts of the French Generals to prevent the truth from becoming known, and, shortly after the conclusion of the trial at Rennes, in a letter published in London, he denounced in the most vigorous language the verdict, for which he declared that not only the officers who formed the court-martial and the chiefs who inspired them, but also the great majority of the French people were really responsible. The anti-Dreyfus press of Paris called upon the Russian Government to punish the Senator who had dared to attack the ally of his own Emperor.

Finally, an attempt was made to expel M. Zakrevsky from his club. It is thought unlikely that the Russian Government would have taken action in his case if he had not in a subsequent article condemned the Franco-Russian Alliance and charged the French nation with having "sunk amorously into the arms of a country which represents and practices more than ever principles entirely opposed to those which France boasts of holding."

The dismissal of M. Zakrevsky from the Senate was preceded by several inspired articles in the principal organ of the Czar's Government, in which it was said that the disgrace of a high official was contemplated, as it would be felt that whatever opinion a high Russian official might hold as to the innocence or guilt of the French captain, Dreyfus, (the Russian Minister Polliadowsky also expressed his belief in Dreyfus's innocence) he could not be justified in attacking the policy of the Russian Government and belittling Russian civilization through the medium of a foreign newspaper.

Church News and Notes.

The Rev. Dr. L. W. Batten will preach this morning in St. Mark's Church on "The Holy Scriptures."

The Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke will preach a farewell sermon to the students of New York, at the Brick Church this evening.

The Rev. Dr. M. H. Harris will speak this morning, in Temple Israel of Harlem, Fifth Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street, on "Responsibility."

The Rev. Dr. Joseph Silverman will lecture this evening in the Temple Emanu-El, Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street, on "Hypocrisy in Religion."

"He's Coming to Judge a World" will be the subject of the Rev. Stephen Innes's sermon in St. Ambrose's Church, Prince and Thompson Streets, this evening.

President Charles Cuthbert Hall will preach this afternoon in Adams Chapel, Union Theological Seminary, 700 Park Avenue.

A memorial tablet to the late Rev. Dr. Albert D. Vail will be unveiled at this morning's services in the Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Rev. George P. Eckman will speak this evening in St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-sixth Street, on "Gospel Falsehoods."

Henry Frank of the Independent Church of the New Thought will speak in Carnegie Lyceum this morning on "The Psychological Cure of Pain; or, Was Jesus a Mesmerist?"

Mrs. Percy Widdrington of London will speak before the Society for Ethical Culture in Carnegie Hall this morning on "The Moral Issues of the War in the Transvaal."

The Rev. Dr. Edward H. Krans, rector of St. Matthew's Church, West Eighty-fourth Street, will preach this morning his third sermon on "The Ten Commandments." His evening subject will be "The Teaching of Events."

The Rev. Dr. Steele will speak this morning in the Willett Street Methodist Episcopal Church on "The Truest and Best Friend," and in the evening, for the Epworth League, on "Lift Up and Look Up."

Christian Scientists will hold a mass meeting in the Metropolitan Opera House this afternoon. Former Judge Ewing of Chicago will speak on "Christian Science, the Religion of Jesus Christ."

The First Place Methodist Church of Brooklyn will celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of its founding, beginning to-day, and lasting through the week.

The Rev. Dr. Roderick Terry will preach this morning in the South Church, Madison Avenue and Thirty-eighth Street, on "Mind to Work." In the afternoon the cantata of "The Holy City" will be rendered, and Dr. Terry will preach on "Heaven."

The Rev. Dr. D. S. Mackay, in the Fifth Avenue Collegiate Church this evening, will speak on "The Problem of Incongruous Christians, as Illustrated by Christ in the Parable of the Great Net." He will preach also at the morning service.

A memorial service will be held in St. Ann's Church for Deaf-Mutes, West One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street, today at 3 P. M., in honor of the birthday of Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, the founder of the first schools for deaf-mutes in this country.

The Rev. Dr. John Balcolm Shaw will preach this morning in the West End Presbyterian Church, which is said to have now the largest membership of any Presbyterian church in the city. To-morrow evening C. N. Howard will speak on "Temperance Reform."

At the Baptist Church of the Epiphany, Madison Avenue and Sixty-fourth Street, the Rev. Howard L. Jones will preach this morning and evening. In the evening he will preach on "How to Test Your Creed." On Tuesday evening John Barrett, ex-Minister to Siam, will speak on "America in the Philippines and the Far East."

The sixty-ninth anniversary of St. James's Methodist Episcopal Church, Madison Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, will be celebrated to-day. In the morning Bishop Hurst will preach the sermon, and the evening sermon will be preached by the Rev. Dr. George P. Mains.

The Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters will speak this morning in the Bloomingdale Church, on "Napkins," and in the evening on "Deborah, the Ancient Forerunner of the Modern New Woman." In the afternoon he will speak in the Ninth Regiment Armory on "Sowing Wild Oats."

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Eaton will preach this morning in the Church of the Divine Paternity, Central Park West and Seventy-sixth Street, on "What Is a Christian Church?" In the evening there will be a special music service, with an address by Dr. Eaton upon "America and the Religious Life."

But as I have studied musical history pretty carefully and found that it repeats itself with the same regularity as political history, I fear that the future historian wil be more likely to accuse us of overrating our men than of underrating them. And, verily, in that day it were better for the average English musical critic that a millstone were tied about his neck and that he were cast into the sea.

The old story of the preference of Gretty for Mozart ought to warn persons who are in the way of making such comments as those to which I have referred, that the mistake is usually that of taking some one for a genius who is not. How many critics have declared that Joseph Rheinberger was a genius of the first order? And is there a composer in France to-day who has not at one time or another been hailed as the legitimate successor of Lulli and Rameau? Is it possible to forget that at one time Rossini was esteemed a greater man than Verdi, and at another time Cherubini was regarded as the equal of Beethoven?

Indeed, if the writer in The London Standard will take a careful survey of the criticism of various periods of music he will find that to their contemporaries more than one-half the composers who ever lived seemed to be geniuses. One thing I must say for The Standard man. He showed great cleverness when he pointed to 1850 as a time when I would have had as much difficulty in finding any evidence of a new composer as I do now. Verdi's "Rigoletto" was produced in 1851, but I doubt if we should have seen a genius in it. That was, indeed, a time when the horizon seemed to be somewhat dark. Yet it hardly seems conceivable to me that a real critic could have missed all of the significance of the early works of Wagner. He might have felt that this young composer would not prove to be a man of deep power. He might have accused him of mere eccentricity. He might have called him an empty poseur and seeker after effect. But he could not have failed to discern that he was doing something different from his contemporaries, and treating opera in a novel manner. That at least should have warned an experienced critic to keep his eye upon the man.

But at the present moment there is no one, of whom I know anything, who is doing work so different from that which is already in existence as to call special attention to him. The Standard man talks of Richard Strauss, but what has he done except to carry out to its furthest limit the theory of the programme music writers? He has done no more than Wagner did when he tried to make music depict purely intellectual processes.

The article in which I took a survey of the field of musical productivity was not intended to convey the idea that I feared that the composition of masterpieces was at an end because some one did not produce one every year. I distinctly repudiated any such position. The art of music is still very young. It is so young that it was only ninety years ago that the establishment of the fundamental principles of form was completed. Something like nine centuries had been consumed in this labor, a very long time, indeed, yet not too long when one comes to consider that the whole art had to be manufactured out of the inner man without help from the outer world.

It was only with the middle period of Beethoven and with the songs of Schubert and the operas of Weber that the art of composition found itself so well equipped with materials that it could begin to strive deliberately and continuously to explore the communicative powers of music. In the first rush of the struggle for free expression the old forms were brushed aside, but the old principles had to be preserved because they were fundamental and the structure of music could not stand on any other foundation. The romantic forms of Chopin, Schumann, and Liszt rest upon the same principles as the sonatas of Mozart and Beethoven. The clear intellect of Brahms discerned that the sovereignty of these principles made it as easy to write romantic music in the sonata form as in any other, and so he became the conservator of the sonata, pouring into it all the wealth of the new romantic expression.

His works are in the nature of a point of repose in the march of musical development. Having seemed to burst the trammels of the classic forms, we suddenly find that we have only been running around a circle and that in music one can most successfully put new wine into old bottles. What the next step will be no one can tell. But it is not a thing to cause either astonishment or anxiety that the present moment should seem to be barren of vital works. Music in her onward march has but paused to take breath.

The story of the fight of the Roman Catholic Church against the employment of florid music in the mass, which is published on this page to-day, is only a chapter in a long and bitter struggle. The downfall of the pure old church style may be traced almost directly to the introduction into the mass of the materials used in the theatre. The vitiated taste of a public which sought attractive music in the church and demanded that it should be like that heard in the opera house, and the desire to hear the famous soloists of the early days in the sanctuary led to all kinds of abuses. The Church had already had its first fight in this field. The old polyphonic composers had elaborated their method till the words of the mass were altogether indistinguishable, and when one part of the choir was singing "Gloria tibi" another was singing "Et in Terra pax." Florid counterpoint became intolerable to the more pious of the fathers, and the movement which was so powerfully aided by the masses of Palestrina took place.

The music of the Church was, in the Palestrina period and in that immediately following him, the noblest that it has ever had. The heritage of the Roman Church in this is as rich as its heritage in Gothic architecture. To part with such music for the works in which the orchestra is allowed to dramatize the "Ben tremendae" or the soprano sfogato to embroider the "Salutaris" with trills and roulades is something against which the fathers may well fight. It is not saying that Haydn and Mozart were not great masters to pronounce their masses unsuitable to the needs and inconsistent with the spirit of the Church. A return to the plain chant does not seem to the present writer to be necessary. That would be to do away with artistic music altogether, and surely there is a place for music in worship and in the ritual. If the fathers will return to the masterpieces of the Palestrina era and adhere to them or to music written in their style, they will have music which for ecclesiastical purity and spiritual contemplativeness cannot be excelled.

THE OPERA HOUSE CONCERTS.

At the Metropolitan Opera House the second of Mr. Wolfsohn's concerts will be given to-night with a combination of artists and a programme equally as interesting as the one of last Sunday. Schumann-Heink, Campanari, Vladimir de Pachmann, and Walter Damrosch and his efficient orchestra of seventy-five all in one evening. Schumann-Heink will sing an aria from Mozart's "Titus," Schubert's "Allmacht," and a waltz with orchestra, (new.) Campanari will sing an aria from "Herodiade," and de Pachmann will play Chopin's "Andante Spinate and Grand Polonaise," with orchestra. Among Mr. Damrosch's orchestral numbers will be the following: Overture, "Tannhäuser," Wagner; overture, "1812, (in commemoration of Napoleon's retreat from Moscow,) by Tchaikowsky; Poco Adagio from Saint-Saën's "Symphony in C," for orchestra and organ, and some small numbers, such as "Elegy by Miersch," (new,) gavotte by Bach, waltz, "The Beautiful Blue Danube," &c.

The Castle Square Opera Company will, commencing next Monday night, Dec. 11th, give a "Repertoire Week" at the American Theatre. Four of the most popular productions of the season will be presented, the casts employing all the favorites of the organization, assisted by the great singing chorus of sixty and an augmented orchestra. The presentations have been arranged as follows:

Monday and Tuesday Nights—Verdi's "Il Trovatore." Miss Golden, Mme. Kronold, Miss Niven, Miss Holmes, Mr. Sheehan, Mr. Berthald, Mr. Mertens, Mr. Luckstone, Mr. Knight, Mr. Clark.

Wednesday Matinée and Night—Gounod's "Romeo and Juliet." Miss Golden, Miss de Treville, Miss Mattfeld, Miss Niven, Mr. Davies, Mr. Sheehan, Mr. Luckstone, Mr. Elder, Mr. Clark, Mr. Knight, Mr. Belcher, Mr. Walling, Mr. Veron.

Thursday and Friday Nights—Bizet's "Carmen." Mme. Kronold, Miss Golden, Miss Mattfeld, Miss Holmes, Mr. Berthald, Mr. Sheehan, Mr. Mertens, Mr. Luckstone, Mr. Ranney, Mr. Knight, Mr Veron, Mr. Walling.

Saturday Matinée and Night—Verdi's "Aida." Mme. de Treville, Mme. Kronold, Miss Holmes, Miss Niven, Mr. Sheehan, Mr. Davies, Mr. Luckstone, Mr. Mertens, Mr. Belcher, Mr. Clark.

The Christmas week attraction will be Milloecker's tuneful comic opera, "The Beggar Student," which will be presented with a cast of light opera favorites, special scenery, and new costumes.

LEO SCHULZ'S MORNING CONCERTS.

Mr. Townsend H. Fellows and Mr. Leo Schulz will give their fourth chamber musicale at the Carnegie Lyceum next Wednesday, Dec. 13, at 11 A. M. The soloists for the coming musicale will be Miss Mabel Phipps, pianist; Mr. Richard Arnold, concert meister of the Philharmonic Society, violinist; Mr. J. Altschueler, viola, and Mr. Leo Schulz at the 'cello, as usual. Mr. Francis Rogers, the baritone, who was heard so favorably by a large gathering of musical people at his recital at Mendelssohn Hall last Wednesday, will sing a group of songs. Mr. Bruno S. Huhn will be the accompanist. At this musicale the Arensky trio, D minor, Opus 32, and the Saint-Saëns quartet, B flat major, Opus 41, will be given.

WOMEN'S STRING ORCHESTRA.

The first concert of the Women's String Orchestra will take place at the Waldorf-Astoria on Saturday night. The programme:

Concerto Grosso.....Handel
Songs—
Caro mio Ben, (1753).....Giordani
Rondel de l'Adieu.....de Lara
Bonjour Suzon.....J. B. Faure
Serenade de Don Juan.....Tchaikowsky
Emilio de Gogorza.
Thema mit Veraenderungen, Gigue...Rheinberger
(Violin and organ.)
Miss Branth and Mr. Gaston M. Dethier.
"Aufblick Zu Den Sternen," Nocturne..Blasser String orchestra and two harps.
Prologue, from "I Pagliacci".....Leoncovallo
Mr. de Gogorza.
Berceuse.....Hartmann
"Vendredis".....Sokolow-Glazounow-Liadow
(New, first time in New York.)
Bourree.....Bach

MR. PADEREWSKI'S RECITALS.

Mr. Paderewski, the famous pianist, will give two recitals at Carnegie Hall, one on Tuesday and the other on Saturday, at 2:30 P. M. The programmes have not been received, and for that reason cannot be published. Mr. Paderewski's managers, Hugo Görlitz and J. C. Tryer, who will conduct his entire American tour, are naturally of the opinion that there is no general curiosity about the programmes, because almost all of the seats for the first recital are sold and the subscription for the series is enormous. This, it may be remarked, is not a "press agent's notice," but a little suggestive information from the musical editor of THE TIMES to the readers.

NOTES OF MUSIC.

There will be no concert at Carnegie Hall this evening. Manager Thrane has arranged that the next Kaltenborn Orchestra concert will be given Dec. 17, when Mark Hambourg and other eminent soloists will be on the programme.

Mr. Henry K. Hadley, the gifted young composer, will conduct an orchestral concert at the Waldorf-Astoria on the evening of Jan. 16, 1900, when his latest compositions will be given an initial hearing. Mr. David Bispham will assist, and the orchestra will be made up of selected musicians.

Mlle. Elsa Ruegger, the young Swiss 'cellist who has filled a phenomenal number of engagements with orchestra since her arrival in America, plays this coming week in Pittsburg at the Apollo Club, and will fill other Western dates before returning to New York.

Mlle. Frances Saville, who has obtained an eight weeks' leave of absence from the Imperial Opera at Vienna, sailed Wednesday from Southampton for a brief concert tour in America under the management of Victor Thrane. Mlle. Saville is due to arrive in New York about Dec. 14.

The first concert of the Musical Art Society occurs on Thursday evening, Dec. 21. The "Missa Brevis," by Palestrina, will be given for the first time; also some beautiful Christmas music. Mr. Bispham will be the soloist. The two concerts given each season by this society afford lovers of choral music the only opportunity of hearing the capella works of the great masters.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The seventieth and seventy-first performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in this city are announced for next Wednesday afternoon, Dec. 13, at 2:30, and the following Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at Carnegie Hall. These two performances are notable from the fact that both the soloists and the composer of one of the solo numbers are from the ranks of the orchestra itself.

Mr. Charles Martin Loeffler, the composer of "Nights in the Ukrain," a concert piece for violin and orchestra, to be played by Mr. Kneisel Thursday evening, was born at Muhlhausen on Jan. 30, 1861. Mr. Loeffler is one of the original first violins of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, playing at the same desk from the beginning with Conductor Gerrit Smith, and one of whom we are especially proud to make a first appearance under at least six years' training. Having remained throughout the last century almost exclusively in the hands of the Italians, We English, however, may boast that if Italy gave us a Scotze and a Catalani, we returned the compliment by sending to Paris, Venice, Rome, Vienna and Dublin Mrs. Billington, who pottered in Italian and who created a furore wherever she appeared. Since then we have held our own fairly well, and it is only within the last fifteen years that we have been obliged to yield the palm in this branch of art to our American cousins.

MUSICAL MATTERS ABROAD

Still another volume of Liszt's letters—the fourth—has just been issued by Breitkopf & Hartel. It is edited by La Mara, and contains two portraits. The letters are all addressed to the Princess Caroline Sayn-Wittgenstein.

Wilhelm Tappert has been collecting for thirty years musical settings of Goethe's "Erlking." He has as many as fifty-nine, and he suspects that there is another, by Meyerbeer, which the heirs of that composer are, however, keeping in the dark.

Felix Weingartner's opera, "Genovefa," has been produced at Leipsic, under the energetic direction of the composer. According to the Musikalisches Wochenblatt, the work was well applauded, yet not with sufficient enthusiasm to lead one to expect a long run.

Lilli Lehmann has translated Victor Maurel's "Dix Ans de Carriere" into German and had it published. In a preface she is lost in admiration at the artistic profundity and devotion of the French baritone, who feels and thinks about all of her rôles exactly as she herself does.

A German correspondent declares that during the last decade only three operas have been produced in Germany which yielded their composers a handsome profit—Humperdinck's "Hansel and Gretel," Kienzl's "Evangelimann," and Goldmark's "Cricket on the Hearth," to which may now be added as a fourth Siegfried Wagner's "Barenhauter." The Berlin Opera pays composers only 7 per cent. in royalties, while others give still less, and the composer has to share his scant profits with the librettist, and sometimes also with the publisher of the expensive score.

In the volume of Wagner's letters to Emil Heckel, recently translated into English, occurs the following: After discussing with Liszt the rendering of a fugue of Bach's from the "Wohltemperirtes Klavier," Wagner played it with convincing emphasis on his particular reading. Beyond the family only Frau von Meysenbort from Weimar, my wife, and myself were present. Wagner and Liszt fell to reminding each other of the best waltzes written at the time of their youth. Liszt played from memory those of Strauss, and Wagner those of Lanner. We danced to them. "Herr Heckel," said Frau von Meysenbort, "never have I danced to such good playing. Wagner and Liszt as dance musicians!" The word was taken up by both the masters, and unforced gayety prevailed the evening long.

Mr. Grau is already making engagements for the next Spring season at Covent Garden, London, and as these engagements may be repeated for the following Fall in New York, some information about them may have interest for the readers of this paper. He has made a contract with Imbart de la Tour, tenor of the Brussels Opera House, and has also secured our old friend Krauss and Herr Slezak of Breslau. Neither of these tenors has as yet been heard in London. Two other new acquaintances for the English capital will be Frau Reuss Belce of Baireuth, and Miss Edith Walker, mezzo soprano, of the Vienna opera. Mme. Melba will be re-engaged, and will be heard in "La Boheme," as well as in "La Tosca," which is to be produced in Rome on Jan. 6. This, by the way, is the only novelty announced for the London season. Other members of the company will be Mme. Gadski, Mme. Schumann-Heink, Mme. Susanne Adams, Mme. Louise Homer, Edouard de Reszke, Plançon, Journet, Salesa, de Lucia, Gilbert, and Scotti. The array of tenors is particularly large and imposing.

By general consent, the performance of Berlioz's "Prise de Troie" at Paris has been pronounced to be portentously dull and long. Many of those who had been at the rehearsal left after the first act, returning in time for the dramatic finale. The celebrated wooden horse—the wonder of our schooldays when we were wading through our Virgil—made the scenic sensation of the evening. Originally the management had intended to have it quite small, and kept in the background. But finally they decided to have it of massive proportions. It was drawn on to the stage by thirty men, and was large enough to have held a hundred soldiers. But even a wooden horse cannot make an opera dramatically interesting. Some of the music we know through the medium of orchestral selections; the score is, in the main, however, is long-drawn-out and tedious.

The Berlin papers are enthusiastic about the singing of a young Swedish soprano, who hails from the Court Opera in Stockholm. Her name is Fräulein Ingeborg Ballstrom, and she is favorably compared with Christine Nilsson, who, by the way, is said still to possess more than a "benefreste" of her wonderful voice.

M. Saint-Saëns has completed a volume of reminiscences which will shortly be published in Paris. These should be of exceptional interest, as M. Saint-Saëns has had throughout his life a mania for foreign travel. This is precisely the one form of mania which rarely attacks a Frenchman.

A splendid gift has fallen to the free libraries of Manchester. Dr. Henry Watson, a professor of the Manchester Royal College of Music and Musical Director of the local vocal society, the Glee Club, and various other choirs, has presented his complete musical library to Manchester, the bequest to take effect after the donor's retirement from public life, an event which, as Dr. Watson is now under fifty-four years of age, will probably not be very soon. The library which will eventually come into the hands of the corporation is, however, a most valuable one, for it includes a considerable number of seventeenth-century Mss., besides books printed in the early part of the seventeenth century, a very large collection of madrigals and the complete compositions of most of the great masters. There is also a big collection of part songs with the parts for a choir of two hundred voices, which will be extremely useful as the nucleus of a lending library, a thing much wanted by the smaller choral societies.

M. Lamoureux has had to move this year from the—thanks to him—now celebrated Cirque d'Eté to the east-end quarters where he began his career as a conductor eighteen years ago. He is a victim of the mania, for so-called improvements which has taken possession of the Municipal Government of Paris. The approach of the Exhibition is the reason assigned for making Paris absolutely uninhabitable just now. Among the many "improvements" which are making the Champs Elysées hideous is the pulling down of the dainty Cirque d'Eté to make way for a much larger edifice, and thus M. Lamoureux has been compelled to leave the neighborhood of his clientèle of distinguished music-lovers, and to seek refuge in the Theatre de la Républiques in the far distant Rue de Malte, which is equivalent to exchanging St. James's Hall for some transpontine theatre. But there is generally compensation for everything in this world, and the unsavory theatre in question happens to possess remarkably good acoustic properties.

The Cape papers give full accounts of the interesting incidents at Elandsdgaate on the eve of the battle. How General Kock received the miners with a grilled chop or chops in his left hand, which he gnawed like a dog, and a huge slice of bread in his right hand already been told. At the "singsong" which the Boers gave at the station the Commandant called upon an Englishman named Gasthorp, who had been brought down as a prisoner, to preside at the piano, which he did with the greatest good humor, and sang "They all take after me," the Dutch and English all joining in the chorus. Field Cornet Pienaar called for drinks all round, and said, "This is a funny world. Here we are in the midst of war—Englishmen and Dutchmen—and yet we are going to sing together."

The late Mr. Planché was very proud of his "Oberon" libretto and his collaboration with Weber. But, by all accounts, the German Kaiser does not share the author's enthusiasm, and there is talk of a new "book" to Weber's music prepared at the instigation and probably with the assistance of Emperor William. The new work is to be tried at Wiesbaden.

Mr. Tivadar Nachès has received from the Sultan the Commander's degree of the Medjidieh Order.

In a few days the final touches will be given to the handsome encasement of the organ of Westminster Abbey, appropriately marking the twenty-fifth anniversary since the reconstruction, in 1884, of the splendid instrument. When the bicentenary of Purcell's death was commemorated in 1895, it was felt that a fitting tribute would be to provide the organ with the oak facing which it needed to bring it into artistic accord with its surroundings. The Queen, as visitor of "the Royal and Exempt Peculiar," the Prince of Wales, and the Empress Frederic all subscribed largely, and the sum of £1,100 was raised, sufficient to inclose the portion on the north side immediately above the great composer's grave and Dryden's beautiful epitaph thereon. A few months ago the Dean appealed to all lovers of English music for funds to carry on the undertaking. About £200 was contributed toward the £1,100 required, and the chapter will also give as liberally as its not very large resources allow, but some further funds are still wanted, it appears, to entirely remove the debt. The case is from designs left by the late Mr. John Pearson, R. A., and in general style to Gothic. Expert craftsmen have carried out the elaborate carvings and little remains now to be added save the two armorial shields to correspond with those bearing the arms of the Abbey and Dean Bradley on the north side. These will probably show the arms of Edward the Confessor and Purcell. The back casing toward the south aisle has been given by Miss F. A. Heare as a memorial of her brother-in-law, both of Mr. Arthur Clarke, a devoted musician, who bore the cost of the celestial organ added a year or two ago to the main instrument, which may now be regarded as absolutely perfect and complete.

Sir Arthur Sullivan has intimated in a letter to Mr. F. R. Spark, Honorable Secretary of the Leeds Musical Festival, that he should be unable to accept the conductorship of the next festival, supposing the post were offered to him.

With reference to Sir Arthur Sullivan's resignation, The Yorkshire Post says: "It is impossible not to feel some regret at the severing of a connection that has been maintained for so long, but it would be affectation not to recognise the fact that the change was bound to come, and that soon. Sir Arthur Sullivan's health has been far from good for some years past, and his interest in the Leeds Festival has of late hardly been as strong as it used to be, so that it is not very surprising if he finds the labors incident to a great musical festival are more than he can undertake. This has been so evident for some time past that it may be considered as at least doubtful whether, even if he had not taken the initiative, the position of conductor of the Leeds Musical Festival would have been placed again at his disposal. He had many of the qualifications of a conductor, but since he first took up the baton at Leeds the art of conducting has assumed a very different character in this country from what it was twenty years ago. It will undoubtedly be a relief to him to give up an arduous task, but it may be not altogether to the disadvantage of the Leeds Festival that he finds himself compelled to do so. Still, he has done much for Leeds in his time, notably in producing for it the most successful festival commission of recent times, and he will be missed for his eminent social, as well as artistic, qualities."

Here is some interesting Brahms criticism from the London Daily Telegraph: "It cannot be too strongly insisted upon that Brahms was a composer in whose equipment the intellectual almost exactly balanced the emotional. Some may question this emotion, because the master's works are free from the ranting and the raving, the spume and froth, the noise and bluster which in modern music passes for the highest expression of feeling. But there is the strength of the deep and quiet river. 'Strong without rage, without overflowing full,' as well as of the noisy mountain torrent, and the emotionalism of Brahms is like the first. Certainly it has no sort of resemblance to the second. The existence of Brahms's intellectual force no one disputes, the only question being as to whether there is not too much of it. We find the truth perhaps in a well-nigh ideal balance as between the two great factors in the creation of music. But liability to disturbing influences is in the very nature of an equipoise, and there can be little doubt that, in the case of Brahms, when the balance was upset preponderance lay chiefly on the side of the intellectual."

The programme of the fourth Berlin Philharmonic Concert, under Arthur Nikisch, last Monday night, was as follows: Wagner's "Eine Faust," Mendelssohn's violin concerto, Ritter's symphonic poem, "Charfreitag und Frohnleichnam," a toccato by Bach, and Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathetique." Fritz Kreisler was the soloist.

MUSICAL MATTERS AT HOME

The Chicago Tribune's comments on the grand opera failure are not kind. Here are some of them: "It is needless further to discuss the reasons for the slump, though when reduced to the last equation it is likely they will be found close at the door of Mr. Grau himself. Post-mortem examinations are not pleasant. As to the future, we have Mr. Grau's assurance that as Chicago wishes a rest he will give it one, which is kind of him. We fear, however, that somewhere about Thanksgiving time in 1900 Mr. Grau will have a collection of artists whom he will wish to exhibit here, and that when the announcements are made it will be Eames, Nordica, De Reszke & Co., and the repertory will include such novelties as 'Romeo and Juliet,' 'The Huguenots,' 'Barber of Seville,' 'Trovatore,' &c., and that the outcome will be the same artists, same operas, same audiences, same box office account, same complaints of bad business. This is what we expect, for much as Mr. Grau may complain and threaten he is fond of Chicago, where he had his first lessons in management, and it will be difficult for him to stay away. But if he is really in earnest and won't play in Chicago's yard any more, why then—

"'Fare thee well, and if forever,
Still forever, fare thee well.'"

A movement is on foot to establish a symphony orchestra in Nashville, Tenn. It is to be hoped that the project will succeed, Nashville has a small band of earnest music lovers who are working hard for the spread of appreciation of the tone art.

The Cincinnati Enquirer is somewhat astonished that M. Saleza should have declared his conviction that Jean de Reszke is a great man. The fact is that all the tenors of the Metropolitan Company admire M. de Reszke. M. Van Dyck's admiration finds issue in witty and sometimes spiteful remarks—but it is admiration none the less.

Washington has organized a Musical Art Society. The cardinal principles of the new society as set forth in its circulars are: First, a high musical standard of membership; second, a membership representative of the musical life and work of the District; third, the predominance and control in the organization of the younger musical element; fourth, the study and public rendition of the choral works of the masters; fifth, Sunday performances if sacred oratorio be selected, and while the present conditions as to available music hall continue; sixth, social features to a degree and extent that may be desired by the membership.

The Board of Management, consisting of eleven members, is as follows: President—D. O. Pfeiffer; Vice President—W. Silas Sheets; Secretary—Eugene E. Stevens; Treasurer—Jacob Schaff; Financial Secretary—P. C. J. Treanor; Chorus Secretary—Miss Elizabeth Tyler; Librarian—E. H. Parry; Mrs. H. H. Mills, Miss Jennie Gleason, Mr. Charles F. Roberts, and Miss Eleanor Simonds. Mr. William Waldecker was chosen as musical director, and Miss Gleason as accompanist.

The Musical Art Society has for its chief aim the accomplishing of two purposes. These are two of Washington's needs in the musical line which it may surprise some to realize or learn—a symphony or[illegible] in the National Museum and a music hall.

Mme. Patti Sings Beautifully Yet.

Adelina Pa made her début in grand opera at the cademy of Music in this city in November 1859. She has been a prima donna for f years, yet when she sang in Albert Ha London, the other day, she called forth ch criticisms as this: "Last night's appe ance of the great artist was, indeed, very e many others of late years, with the ex ption that the programme was rather ore interesting than usual, and that t public—possibly owing to the patriotic character of some of the songs—was, if an hing, more enthusiastic than ever. The nu bers set down for Mme. Patti in the prog amme consisted of Bellini's "Casta Div Donizetti's 'O luce di quest' anima,' and e Bach Guonod 'Ave Maria,' but in addi to these she gave as encores Guono 's 'Serenade,' Mozart's 'Voi che sapete' nd the air 'Pur dicesti' ascribed to L ti. All were sung with the matchless e le and beauty of voice for which the s ger is still unrivaled, but in the two las named songs Mme. Patti almost excelle herself, and one could only regret that the one artistic seems so little chance that the operatic fiasco of the future will be equal to those of the past. Holt & Wheeler, will be seen again on the stage. In bravura parts such a Rosina or Linda, Mme. Patti might find e strain too great, but she sings Mozar better even than Rossini or Donizetti, a it may surely be permitted to hope th if the Cycle of Mozart's operas, said to be under consideration at Covent Gar n, takes place next year, she will be hear at least in 'Don Giovanni' or in 'Nozzi d Figaro.'" Wonderful voice! Wonderful woman! Mme. Patti has not led the life of nun, yet she has cared for that marvel gift of nature, her voice, as few other p sess have in the world's history. Her n e will be one of the immortal few in the mals of song.

Musical Pitch.

From Chambers's Journal.

The questi is once more being raised in this country of the desirability of a uniform music pitch. Some years ago the Philharmoni Society in London decided to lower the p h of its orchestra to that universal on t Continent; and, although there was a ne confusion at first, the wisdom of the movement is now acknowledged. The great bar to the common adoption of the lower pitch is that its acceptance would nder necessary the provision of new instr ments by the various military bands throu out the country, and the alteration at a eat expense of organs, both in concert hall and in churches.

Pianoforte manufacturers have hitherto held a pos al position in this matter of alteration o pitch, but now, on the initiative of Me s. Broadwood & Sons, they are nearly a expressing their willingness to adopt the pitch, provided that the movement i general one. The exact pitch of a sound can be accurately measured by its number vibrations per second; thus, the old pitc would mean for the note A a piano wire ving 454 vibrations at a temperature of degrees Fahrenheit, while the lower pi h which it is proposed to adopt this Autum would mean only 439 vibrations for th same note. The matter is one of great in ortance to singers, who have now to stra their voices in order to reach a higher al ude than that intended by the composer w ose works they interpret, for those comp sitions were written when the pitch was on lower than that now to be adopted as e standard.

Although the young English Duke, who some weeks past has been here on news- per business, will not be in the cast of e musical burlesque, "The Lady from icago," to be presented by the Strollers -morrow in the Astoria ballroom, owing his having sailed yesterday for home, absence will probably not affect the cial and financial success of the affair. e advance sale of seats has been large ough to bring in double the amount of ex- nses, which are estimated at $10,000, for e various charities for which the bur- sque is to be given. Although the demand r seats has been large, the price has been pt to $2 and $3, instead of $6, as erro- eously announced. The coming-out receptions which have been such a feature the last fortnight, will now diminish in number, but Saturday next will bring several, including those of Miss Katherine F. Crimmins, daughter of Mr. John D. Crimmins, at 40 East Sixty-eighth Street; of Miss Edith Carpender, daughter of Mr. William Carpender, and whose mother was Miss Ella Floyd Jones, at 16 East Fortieth Street; of Miss Bertha Schefer, daughter of Mr. Carl Schefer, at 40 West Thirty-seventh Street; of Miss Louise Aldrich, a daughter of Mr. Spencer Aldrich, at 27 West Seventy-second Street; of Miss Alice Van Doren Ripley, daughter of Gen. Ripley, at 76 Park Avenue, and of Miss Eleanor Green, daughter of Mrs. W. R. Green, at 80 Madison Avenue. Mr. Amedee De Pau Moran will give a reception at his residence, 16 West Fifty-sixth Street, on Tuesday afternoon next to introduce his daughter, Miss Maria L. Moran. There will be other receptions during the week, notably those to be given by Mrs. Walter Watson, Jr., the second of two on Tuesday afternoon; by Mrs. Arthur and Mrs. Sanford Bissell on the same afternoon; by Mrs. Robert Hoe for her daughters, Mrs. Samuel Morley Adams and Miss Ruth Lawrence Hoe, on Thursday afternoon, and by Mrs. John H. Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Bronson and Miss Bronson have decided to spend the Winter abroad, and will soon sail for England. This decision is rather a surprise to Mr. and Mrs. Bronson's and their daughter's friends. Mr. and Mrs. Louis J. There is little that is new to be said this morning regarding the Assembly ball, which will be the chief event of the week to the dancing element. The ball promises to be the usual beautiful affair and will be attended by a larger number of débutantes than for many years past. There will be handsome favors in two figures of the cotillion. Mrs. Joseph T. Low of 57 West Fifty-second Street will give a dinner of twelve covers on Dec. 15 to Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Juilliard, Mr. and Mrs. John Hone, Mrs. Alexander T. Van Nest, Mr. Charles Godfrey, Dr. Wyckoff and Mrs. Wyckoff, and Dr. Edward L. Keyes and Mrs. Keyes.

This coming week, with the exception of the Assembly ball, will not be very rich in entertainments. On Friday Mrs. Church's dancing class will meet, and there will be a number of dinners and receptions—in fact, small events. The wedding are very few, and it looks as if the week would bedevoted to Christmas shopping and a preparation for the opera.

The list of patronesses of the Friday or Mrs. Church's dancing class practically remains the same. They will be Mrs. Benjamin Church, Mrs. John Clarkson Jay, Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish Morris, Mrs. Prescott Hall Butler, Mrs. Arthur J. Peabody, Mrs. Henry R. Beeckman, Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster, Mrs. George Schieffelin, Mrs. Howard Curtis, Mrs. James Higginson, and Mrs. Walden Pell. Among the members of the class are the Misses de Peyster, the Misses Delafield, the Misses Bowers, Miss Angelica Church, Miss Louise Gallatin, Miss Dorothy Schieffelin, Miss May Beeckman, Miss Marion Curtis, Miss Eaton, Miss Dix, Miss Hagerman, and Miss Lentilhon. Mrs. Snediker's class meets on Friday nights, also at Sherry's; Mrs. Dallas Pratt's juvenile class in the afternoon, and on Thursday the first dance of the organization known as the Bachelors and Spinisters.

Every ship which sails for Europe takes a number of well-known people, but society is now so large that the number is hardly missed. In the set in which Mrs. Mills and Mrs. John Jacob Astor are prominent, this is an off year. Mrs. Mills will bring out her daughters next Winter. Mrs. Lloyd Bryce, contrary to report, will only bring out one daughter this season. Miss Twombly and Miss Webb are the possible Vanderbilt buds for next year.

Yesterday afternoon Mrs. Frederic J. de Peyster of 7 West Forty-second Street gave a reception to introduce her youngest daughter, Miss Ella M. de Peyster. Among those who received with the débutante were the Misses de Peyster, Louise Gallatin, Helen Kountze, Lucy Kearney, Augusta Shippen West of Philadelphia, and Miss Harris. The reception was followed by a dinner. Mrs. de Peyster was attired in black velvet with spangles, the débutante was gowned in a white brocade of a small pattern trimmed with chiffon; Miss Helen de Peyster wore an extremely handsome gown of guipure cloth of the palest shade of gray, the under dress being of orange silk, which flashed through the cut-work of the cloth like sunlight through a pearly cloud. Miss Helen Parsons wore a costume of pale gray guipure cloth over orange colored silk. These gowns were brought from Europe by the de Peysters on their return from abroad last Autumn. The decorations were palms and pink roses. The reception was largely attended.

Miss Mabel Martin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Townsend Martin, and niece of Mr. Bradley Martin, was introduced at her home in Albany Wednesday afternoon with her cousin, Miss Hannah Townsend Anderson. Assisting in receiving with Mrs. Martin and Mrs. Townsend were Miss Jane Pruyn, Miss Mary Spring Gardiner, Miss Daisy Douglass, Miss Lillian Towner, Miss Katherine Hun, Miss Cornelia Warren, Miss Cornelia Youngs of Oyster Bay, and Miss Mary Cobb. Mrs. Benjamin McAlpin of New York and Mrs. Edward Murphy, second, of Troy, sisters of Miss Martin presided over the tea room, while Miss McClelland was at the sherbet table, assisted by Miss Kreamer of New York and Miss Mary Anderson.

Now that the first bachelor's cotillion or Monday german in Baltimore is over, the débutantes there are fairly launched. It is hard to say who is the most popular at present, as "honors," like rain, descend upon the "just and the unjust," or the "adored or the unadored." Miss Charlotte Lindsay, Miss Laura Patterson Swan, Miss Lily Munnikhuysen, and Miss May Brown vied with each other at the german as to who had the most flowers. Miss Brown, however, seemed to carry off the glory, as she had far more roses than either herself, chaperon, or maid could manage. Miss Brown is the daughter of ex-Gov. Brown, and is a jolly bright young girl, with plenty to say. Miss Swan broke the regulation rule of débutantes' attire, and appeared in a pretty red silk gown, whereas her young rivals were all in white. Miss Lily Munnikhuysen is a popular young woman. She will entertain largely. She is the daughter of the late Howard Munnikhuysen, and her mother's family are the Pancoasts of Philadelphia. Mrs. Munnikhuysen is going out again after a long period of mourning.

Mrs. John M. Robinson was at the german with three of her daughters—Miss Lota Robinson, Miss Champe Robinson, and Mrs. James McShane. Mrs. Robinson was handsomely gowned in satin and spangled net. Diamond sunbursts adorned her bodice, and she looked unusually well. The Robinsons are going abroad in February for a long stay. Young Mrs. Boykin, who was to have been a débutante this season, but preferred matrimony instead, does not seem to care for going out at all, and has been nowhere this Winter. The Lyman Josephs have come from Newport, and are again at their Charles Street home. Mrs. Sherwood and her daughter, Mrs. Picking, the widow of Admiral Picking, will spend the Winter abroad, where Mrs. Picking's little boy Sherwood will be educated. Mrs. Van Bibber has returned from a visit to Mrs.

theatre club this Winter. Each week a party will be made up and will return to supper afterward at one of the member's homes. Mrs. Clarence McDowell is at the Stafford this season. She has recently returned from New York. Mrs. T. Harrison Garrett gave another dinner to débutantes this week at her country home. The Maryland Society of Colonial Dames now serve tea every afternoon in their rooms. This is supposed to be a great convenience for country members who are in town doing their Christmas shopping. Later on there will be a number of more formal entertainments.

One of the most attractive dinners given before the cotillion on Monday last was that of Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Buckler, the first of a series. The guests of Monday were Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Winans, Dr. J. Duncan Emmet of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Tagart Steele, Dr. and Mrs. William Osler, Mrs. Walter Brooks, Miss Buckler, Mr. William Manly, Mrs. Van Bibber, and Mr. Charles Winder. After dinner the host, hostess, and guests adjourned to Lehman's for the cotillion. Mrs. Jesse Tyson is quite noted for her collection of turquoises. She has great chains of them, and pins galore. Mrs. Alexander Brown has, among other handsome jewels, a coronet of diamonds, also a belt studded with fine stones. Mrs. W. S. G. Williams is the possessor of a galaxy of diamond stars. Mrs. John M. Robinson also has a number of fine sunbursts.

Mrs. Ross Winans has, besides a fine collection of diamonds, some awfully good rubies and emeralds. Mrs. Robert Garrett has a magnificent diamond necklace, also large ropes of pearls. Mrs. David Stewart owns some very good diamonds in ornaments for corsage and hair, and a few bracelets. Mrs. Stilson Hutchins, now of Washington, but formerly Miss Rose Keeling of Baltimore, has diamond buckles, tiaras, necklaces, and bracelets, also a number of pearls and turquoises.

The wedding of the week in Baltimore was that of Miss Emily Mactier Latrobe and Mr. John Hand Browne, formerly of Baltimore, but now of Pittsburg. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Stewart Latrobe, and a niece of Mr. Ferdinand Latrobe, who has been Mayor of Baltimore so often and is now elected to the Senate. The wedding took place at Christ Church on Wednesday afternoon, the Rev. Mr. Niver officiating. The maid of honor was Miss Edna Latrobe, and the ushers were Mr. James Piper, Mr. Douglas Turnbull, Mr. Champlain Robinson, Dr. A. S. Duvall, Mr. Graeme Turnbull, and Mr. William Hilles. After the ceremony a supper was given at the Latrobe home, to which only the families and a few intimate friends were invited. Miss Charlotte Latrobe gave a theatre party and supper in honor of Miss Laura Swan on Tuesday. Mr. and Mrs. Sherlock Swan chaperoned it. The other guests were Miss Munnikhuysen, Miss Doris Stewart, Miss Peter, and the Messrs Harry Lehr, Smith, McKim, MacPope, Willie Lehr, and Max Muller from Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. Raoul Paar of Baltimore are congratulating themselves how nicely they have fooled their friends in regard to their wedding trip, for the much talked of visit to California and the Yellowstone Park was really only the honeymoon spent at their country place in the Green Spring Valley. On Friday, for the first time since the marriage, Mrs. Paar came in town to a luncheon given her by Mrs. John M. Robinson. Among those asked to meet Mrs. Paar were Mrs. Taggart Steele, Mrs. Tunstall Smith, Mrs. Thomas Whitridge, Mrs. Julian de Bullett, Miss Bonsal, Miss Loulie Jenkins, Miss Morrison, Mrs. Charles Field, Mis Brandt, and Miss Beachy Brown. The engagement of Mr. Harrison McK. Birckhead and Miss Mollie George has just been announced, though it is no surprise to their friends, as Mr. Birckhead has been attentive to Miss George for quite a while. She has lately been ill with typhoid fever and is only now recoveving slowly. Mrs. Alexander Brown is spending a few days in New York.

The past week in Philadelphia, with its round of gayeties, was more like the end of the season than the beginning. Although the season is a long one, it has begun extremely early, and already invitations to many of the big balls are out. During last week, on Thursday afternoon, the two most conspicuous débutantes made their bow, Miss Ellen Drexel Paul, niece of the beautiful (late) Mrs. William Waldorf Astor, and Miss Florence Cramp, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edwin S. Cramp. Miss Paul has been abroad for the past two years, and the event of Thursday afternoon has long been looked forward to by her friends. The hall and drawing room of Mr. Paul's house were filled with flowers and potted plants, and on the table were placed the many bouquets which were presented to the fair débutante. She received in the front drawing room with her father. She wore a gown of white, without any ornaments. She is a granddaughter of the late A. J. Drexel. The large porch at the back of the house was inclosed and filled with flowers and plants, through which numerous electric lights cast their shaded glow.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul were assisted in receiving by Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel, Miss Mary Paul, Mrs. George W. Childs Drexel, and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer. The others who received were Miss Violet Whelen, Miss Ethel Crothers Heberton, Miss Edith Stotesbury, Miss Hope Binney Tyler, Miss Minnie Drexel Fell, Miss Virginia Campbell, Miss Lillie Rhoades, and Miss Rhoda Howe.

On the same afternoon Mrs. Edwin S. Cramp introduced her daughter, Miss Florence Cramp, at a tea, followed by a dinner dance at the Acorn Club. Miss Cramp, who was dressed becomingly in white, welcomed her guests at the door of the ballroom, and was assisted in receiving by her aunt, Mrs. Daniel Karsner, and Miss Loose of Virginia and Miss Clough of Boston. The dinner was served at small tables. During the evening the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Cramp's dinner at the Bellevue came in and joined in the gayeties.

On the same day a luncheon was given by Mrs. John G. Watmough in honor of her niece, Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel. Mr. and Mrs. Anthony J. Drexel will sail for England on Dec. 13 on the Oceanic, and will go directly to Morris Castle, where they will remain until April 1.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Furness of Philadelphia have sent out invitations for the marriage of their daughter, Annis Lee, to Mr. John Kearsley Mitchell, second, on Wednesday, Dec. 20, at 12 o'clock, at St. Luke's Church. Mr. and Mrs. George W. C. Drexel will close their country house, Wooten, on Dec. 20, and will move into town. Mrs. Arthur Biddle gave a tea on Wednesday afternoon at her residence in honor of her daughter, Miss Edith Francis Biddle. Early in January Mr. Lyman Biddle will give a ball for his niece at the Horticultural Hall. Yesterday Mrs. John M. Keating gave a tea for her daughter, Miss Elizabeth Keating, who is one of the season's most attractive débutantes. A number of Mrs. Keating's relatives from New York were present, and nearly all the débutantes assisted in receiving. The tea was followed by a dinner and a dance. Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer will give a ball on Jan. 2, 1900, at Horticultural Hall, in honor of Miss Ellen Drexel Paul. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Megargee Wright and Miss Maie Rodney Conover will give a tea on Saturday, Dec. 16. The card of Mrs. Henry Cadwalader Chapman is inclosed. The Philadelphia assemblies will be held this year in the foyer of the Academy of Music, and the dates are Friday, Jan. 12, and Friday, Feb. 23. The following ladies have consented to act as patronesses: Mrs. William Platt Pepper, Mrs. Morris J. Lewis, Mrs. A. J. Dallas Dixon, Mrs. R. H. Bayard Bowie, Mrs. James Large, and Mrs. William H. Hart. The assemblies will be under the management of the following gentlemen: Mr. Richard L. Ashhurst, Mr. Henry B. Coxe, Jr., Mr. Owen Wister, Mr. J. Percy Keating, Mr. John Cadwalader, Jr., and Mr. John S. Newbold.

Society at Ottawa will be very gay this Winter. Lady Minto has returned from her short European trip. She brought with her Lady Victoria Grey, one of the young belles of last year's London season. A number of entertainments have been arranged for Lady Victoria Grey, and later in the Winter there will be an ice carnival, to which a number of New Yorkers have been invited. Lady Minto made a great many friends when she was here on her visit at the time of the international yacht races.

There has been much comment in New York society recently upon the abuse by quite a number of people who ought to know better of titles when addressing foreigners who have "handles" to their names. Some men made themselves absolutely ridiculous by addressing the young Duke of Manchester as "Your Grace." This feriors, and never by social equals. The same mistake has been observed in the greeting to the Earl of Cassilis, who has been present at a number of the dances and teas of the week. Several men who ought to have known better continue, in speaking to him, to call him "Your Lordship." These persons would no doubt address the Prince of Wales as "Your Royal Highness." In England that personage is spoken to as "Sir," the Queen as "Ma'am," and a Duke as plain "Duke," or, if you know him quite well, as, for example, "Manchester," he is always referred to as "the Duke" or as "Manchester." The same applies to an Earl. The Earl of Cassilis is also a Marquess, and he can be addressed by that title, which, by the way, is only a courtesy one. Nearly all the English Earls have the title of Marquess. Sir Thomas Lipton was addressed as "Sir Thomas," and so on down the scale. The terms "Your Grace," "Your Lordship" are used in England by the same class of persons who address the civilian American as "Boss," and his wife as "Lady."

Lady Sarah Wilson has sold her London house, formerly the property of her mother, the dowager duchess of Marlborough. Lady Wilson, according to dispatches, is a prisoner in the Boer country, and her faithful maid is with her. Much excitement in the Churchill family and their friends has been the result of this news. Lady Tatton Sykes has just sailed for Natal, and has not yet appeared on the scene of action. Lady Randolph Churchill will take out with her one of the young daughters of Sir George Warrender. In fact, there is almost as much of a rush to South Africa in England as there is to Egypt and the Riviera in this country, and many women are going out to be near their husbands and brothers.

As yet there is hardly any difference in the gayeties of Paris, which is enjoying quite an Autumn season. Mrs. George Law has made her reappearance at the Hotel Ritz. The Infanta Eulalia has also given several parties there, at which were present a number of Americans. The Grand Duke Alexis, who is remembered as a lion and a celebrity in this country nearly thirty years ago, has been much feted in Paris and at the neighboring chateaus. Mrs. James P. Kernochan was still in the gay capital at last accounts, and none of the American colony had left.

It is very difficult to write of the social situation in England. There will be no hunt balls this year. "Every one," says a correspondent, "writes dismally from the country because there are no men left. Except at Melton, the fields are woefully small and people can't get guns for their shooting parties. The few men who are at home look ashamed and are apologetic because they are not making human targets of themselves in Natal." At the Quorn many of the huntsmen are Americans, and the list includes Mr. James Van Alen and Col. De Lancey Kane. Mr. Luis Onativia is also a member of one of the fashionable hunts. But London and England seem practically just now given over to Americans.

The same correspondent waxes a bit sarcastic when alluding to the reigning fads in London and in the country. Her innuendoes are interesting to Americans. "We are living in an atmosphere of charity entertainments, for which the war is responsible. The wounded, the widows of those killed, the wives of those on active service are all supposed to be comforted and assisted in some miraculous manner by entertainments, the expenses of which more often than not far exceed the takings, and generally leave the promoter in serious financial straits. In London we have an American beauty or actress as promoter. We have Albert Hall or Claridge's. The performers are selected from among the leading artistes of the day. The audience is composed of millionaires, who give 50 guineas for a programme and twenty-pound tips to the waitress who supplies them with a cup of tea, for which they have already been paid in solid banknotes. Walk up, ladies and gentlemen! Here you will see the living mutoscopes of 'Vanity Fair,' with American jockeys bestowing 'tenners' and ladies craving for them, peers working for their living, and outsiders getting into society by ostentatious benevolence. Here is degenerate republicanism attending on aristocracy, for the belles of New York are serving cocktails to peers and short drinks to royalty. Finally, behold the heir to the throne sipping tea between an actress and a Duchess—no deception. Blessed are the arts of advertisement, and thrice happy 'Tommy Atkins,' the object of so much disinterested devotion."

The Maine, of course, has been the chief topic of interest in London the past week. Lady Randolph Churchill, Mrs. Blow, Mrs. Ronalds, Mrs. Arthur Paget, Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin, and the entire "colony," who have now adopted Mrs. Brown Potter, are enthusiastic over their success. Lady Cunard returned from America with large contributions, and the list of subscribers contains the names of the majority of people prominent in New York society. There seems to be a certain strain of jealousy in England, and the press has not been very enthusiastic concerning the enterprise. The Americans have had the assistance of the Prince of Wales and the wealthy members of his set, and the entertainments have become for the time the mode.

The following from an English publication will amuse New Yorkers as an epitome of a career. It is apropos of the recent chantant at Claridge's: "Mrs. James Brown-Potter, who organized the successful Maine fête at Claridge's last Saturday, has shown pluck in a very adventurous career. She began her career as a New York society beauty, and her amateur theatrical triumphs occasioned a difference of opinion with her husband. Then she made her professional début in London, and the critics voted her a 'lovely failure,' to quote Mr. Clement Scott. Three times she toured round the world, acting to California miners, to Indian Rajahs, to Australian settlers. All the while she was learning her art and being taught by Mr. Kyrle Bellew. Then she came back to take London by storm as Miladi in 'The Musketeers.' She lives in the north of the metropolis, is very witty, has a botanist's knowledge of flowers, and a wonderfully shrewd acquaintance with life."

Recent letters from London bring the information that to Mrs. A. A. Blow the honor and credit of the movement for the American hospital ship Maine are really due. She and Mrs. Ronalds have been the most enthusiastic workers, and at the concert at Claridge's the Prince of Wales paid particular attention to Mrs. Blow, and had her sit beside him during the performance. Mrs. Blow got up the whole thing, it is said, and has been from the beginning the head and front of it. This news will be read with surprise here, where it was generally thought that Lady Randolph Churchill was the dea ex machina of the hospital ship movement.

Notwithstanding the depletion of London society by the number of men who have gone to the war in South Africa, there are still many house parties being given. One of the largest and most recent of these was that of the Earl and Countess of Howe at their country place at Gopsall, Atherstone. The guests included, among others, Lord Curzon and Lady Georgina Curzon, the Countess of Warwick, Hon. Mrs. Greville, Mrs. Charles Wilson, Miss Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Sassoon, Hon. Seymour Fortescue, Hon. John Ward, Chevalier de Carria (the Brazilian Ambassador,) Sir Ernest Cassel, Capt. Bimbert Stuart, Capt. Ricardo and Mr. Reginald Ward of New York.

Mrs. Brown-Potter, as she is now called in England, has been receiving many congratulations for her work in aid of the Maine Hospital ship in the recent concert at Claridge's. A recent London letter says: "I should think some of the narrow-minded people at home would be amazed at what she so easily does here, and with such credit, too. London society is still much excited over the great function which Mrs. Arthur Paget is organizing for the Haymarket in January, 1900. All the royalties are going, and the affair will be equal to a gala night at opera. It will be entirely a society function, as all the talent will be drawn from people in society."

Although many of the Tuxedo cottagers have left, building still goes on, and many new and attractive cottages will be ready for Spring occupation. These are building: The Rev. George William Douglas, Henry W. Poor, and Theodore Frelinghuysen, on Lookout Mountain, near Pierre Lorillard, Jr.'s, residence; Thomas Stokes, Miss Alice Wetmore, and Jules J. Vatable, on the east side of Wee Wah Lake; Price Collier, Charles L. Hyde, and Thomas G. Condon, on the west side of the large lake, and J. Fred Pierson, Jr., George E. Dodge, Amos T. French, and Henry M. Munroe, on the east side of the lake. Others building cottages which will not be completed before next Summer are Charles W. Cooper, F. Abott Ingalls, H. E. Pierrepont, and Amory S. Carhart. Preparations are being made for the opening of the new Racquet and Tennis Club on Jan. 1. English crack tennis players are engaged, and there will be a tournament. Expert players from all over the country will enter for the valuable prizes offered, and the week will be an exciting one in tennis circles.

The annual New Year's ball will take place, as usual, at the Tuxedo Clubhouse. Many rooms have been engaged, and there will be a large crowd, as preparations are being made for accommodations at the club. Some of those who visited the club during the week were Mr. and Mrs. John Jay Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Marion Story, Mr. and Mrs. George F. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederic Tams, Richard Peters, Jules J. Vatable, Howard Nott Potter, George R. Lamb, R. W. G. Welling, H. E. Gawtry, Robert T. Varnum, H. G. McVickar, Dr. J. B. Huber, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Lorillard, Augustus Van Cortlandt, Mr. and Mrs. A. SOCIETY NOTES.

The Emanuel Sisterhood will give their annual ball on Jan. 11, 1900, at the Astoria.

Miss Edith Van Buren is stopping at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, where she may remain all Winter.

Mme. Sembrich will sing at the Freundschaft Club on Dec. 22 in an opera by Donizetti never yet produced.

Mr. Edwin Koehler and Miss Carrie Erstein will be married at 7 P. M. on Christmas night at Delmonico's.

The Harmonie Club will have amateur vaudeville and a minstrel performance as features of their next entertainment.

Mr. Charles E. Schafer and Miss Jennie Tim, daughter of Mr. Sol Tim, will be married at Delmonico's at 6:30 P. M. on Dec. 20.

Miss Sophonisba Preston Breckinridge, daughter of Dr. Theophilus Steele, and Mr. Ralph Freeman Shropshire, will be married at noon on Dec. 20 at All Angels' Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-first Street.

Mrs. Henry Bramble Wilson of 37 West Eighty-sixth Street has cards out for an afternoon reception on Saturday, Dec. 16, and will be assisted in receiving by her daughters, Mrs. Reid Fell and the Misses Wilson.

A performance for the benefit of the Bright Side Day Nursery took place on Friday evening in the parlors of the Hotel Majestic. Some of the patrons who were present were Jacob H. Schiff, the Hon. Randolph Guggenheimer, Nathan Straus, Lewis Stern, Isaac Stern, and Felix Warburg.

Mrs. Morris Lee King received her friends on Monday afternoon at her newly opened gymnasium for women, in the Van Dyck Studio Building. The music of the occasion was rendered by Mme. Schultze-Wichman and her sister, Mme. Lowe, who are about to make their début in New York in folk-song recitals and by Miss Cady, the pianist. Mrs. King's undertaking is decidedly a novel departure in art and education.

A musicale and afternoon tea for the benefit of the German Poliklinik will be given by the Ladies' Auxiliary Society on Tuesday afternoon, Dec. 12, from 3 to 5 o'clock, at Sherry's, Fifth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street. Among the well-known artists who have volunteered their services are Mr. Richard Arnold, violin; Miss Rebecca McKenzie, soprano; Miss Therese Schickler, piano; Mr. Talbot Smith, 'cello; Mr. and Mrs. H. Hovemann, basso and soprano; Fräulein Leonardi, and Herr Gustav von Belfertitz.

Winter season is responsible for some es among the Chicago professionals. Champion Will Smith has just left his or a four months' tour through Cali- fornia and Florida, during which time he expects to visit most of the leading links in those places, play several exhibition matches, and arrange as many games for financial profit with other professionals as possible. It is quite likely that his projected contests with some of our Eastern professionals will not come off until early in the Spring. Alexander Smith has gone to Coronado Beach, Cal., to take charge of the hotel links there for the Winter season. Lawrence Auchterlonie of the Glenview Club sailed for Scotland yesterday, and it is rumored that he will return with a "lassie" from his native heath as his bride. "Sandy" McIntosh of Westward Ho has accepted an offer from an Eastern sporting goods firm to take charge of the manufacture of golf balls. Robert Bolton, who has been with the Riverside Club, near Chicago, during the Summer, will probably go to Galveston, Texas, to take charge of the golf course that has lately been laid out there. Most of the Chicago links will be closed up tight during the cold weather, but the Chicago and Onwentsia courses will at all times be available for members who wish to get invigorating exercise.

Gold is already giving indications of its usual Winter activity in Florida, and many of our Northern professionals have begun their duties on Southern links. The Florida Country Club links at Jacksonville have been visited by a number of players ever since Thanksgiving, and one tournament has already been played. This was for the Greenleaf and Crosby cup. In the final thirty-six-hole round the result was a tie, and nine extra holes were then played, when B. H. Barnett defeated C. H. Brereton by two holes. The new professional is Joseph Mitchell, and he is teaching the game to many newcomers.

Among the championship announcements that are being made from various links throughout the country is one to the effect that the mixed foursome championship of the Erie Golf Club has been won by the Rev. Dr. B. Canfield Jones and Miss Millie Geimer. The Rev. Mr. Noyes of the Newton Golf Club, near Boston, has won his club championship for three years. Many ministers play the game, but it is few who attain championship honors.

Miss Georgiana Wilmerding has won double honors in the women's championship tournament at the Essex County Country Club, Orange. Not only did she win the championship for the second year, but she captured the gold medal given by L. St. Clair Colby for the lowest gross score. Miss Wilmerding occasionally plays on the Baltusrol links, but she confines most of her golf to her home club, and is seldom seen in outside tournaments.

A new club in the Greenwich district of Connecticut has recently been started at South Beach, about five miles from the Fairfield County Golf Club. It is known as the Innis Arden Club, and the nine-hole course, 2,700 yards, is laid out on the property of J. Kennedy Tod.

Interesting accounts of the growth of golf on the Pacific Coast continue to be heard from time to time. The Waverly Golf Club of Oregon is reported to have paid $15,000 for 100 acres of land upon which an eighteen-hole course is to be laid out. The Los Angeles Country Club will hold an amateur championship tournament for Southern California on Feb. 25, 26, and 27. Another tournament for both amateurs and professionals will be held on March 26. The Pasadena Country Club has announced a women's team competition for Jan. 26, each club in the Southern Association to send a team of four women. These contests, with a series of events at the San Francisco and Oakland Clubs, will keep the golf balls flying lively over the Pacific links during the Winter months.

Several interesting contests have recently been played on the Elkridge Club links near Baltimore. One of the chief events was the third contest for the Henry White Cup, given by the Secretary of the American Legation at London to the early Baltimore Golf Club, that has since been amalgamated into the Baltimore Country Club. The White Cup is to be won three times before becoming the victor's property. Ernest Jenkins has held it twice, but he was challenged by Frederick W. Smith, and the latter won the game by a single hole. Mrs. Miles White won the gold brooch offered by Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Buckler. This also is to be won three times. Mrs. White beat Miss Fanny K. McLane. Each has now won it twice, and the prize will probably go to one of them permanently in the Spring contest. Miss McLane won the women's Elkridge Club cup. W. R. K. Taylor won the Thanksgiving handicap cup offered by the Baltimore Country Club by defeating Charles S. Abell. Both men tied in the first match. Baltimore's youngest crack golfer, T. Courtney Jenkins, made the best gross score, 80 strokes, in the Thanksgiving handicap at the Elkridge Club, and Frank G. Riggs won the handicap prize.

Some of the prominent women golfers who play at both clubs are Miss McLane, Mrs. R. Manson Smith, Miss Olive Smith, Miss Louie C. Jenkins, Mrs. Miles White, Miss Louise Bonsal, Mrs. J. W. Blackwell, Mrs. James, Mrs. S. T. Steele, and Miss Nancy Ellicott. Mrs. W. H. Greenfield has won the women's championship of the Clifton Park Golf Club, which is composed of members who use the public course of Baltimore.

Most of the clubs around Boston have closed their links for the Winter, but a few will keep "open house" for their enthusiastic members. The Allston Club has taken the lead in Winter activity and has already announced a medal play tournament for Christmas day.

YACHTS AND YACHTSMEN.

The Knickerbocker Yacht Club is showing commendable activity during the months that the organization will be out of commission. Every evening and Sunday finds a large number of members at the College Point clubhouse, where plans for the coming season are freely discussed. The plans for the new clubhouse are nearly complete, and the new grounds will be equipped with two sets of marine railways, the largest of which is designed to take a sixty-foot yacht. It is said that Commodore Stephen Mason will be re-eleeted as chief flag officer.

Hanley, the designer of the Genesee, champion yacht of the great lakes, is building a twenty-five-footer for Charles Hayden at his shops at Cape Cod.

Clinton H. Crane, manager of the designing department of James & Lemoine of this city, has completed the drawings of a thirty-five foot cruising yacht for Arnold Lawson of Boston. The new yacht, which is expected to be speedy as well as comfortable, is 54 feet over all, 13 feet beam, and 8 feet draught. She will be of composite build, with steel frames and double planking of mahogany. She will be rigged with a pole mast, staysail, and jib. By a novel arrangement a clubtopsail can be set over the mainsail. The new craft will have about five tons of outside ballast, and carry 2,000 square feet of sail exclusive of the topsail. She will have a roomy cabin, stateroom for women, toilet, and galley under the cabin house. The contract for building the yacht will be signed in a few days.

A recent French invention is a yacht gangway, in which the steps are always in a horizontal position regardless of the angle at which the gangway is lowered. When the gangway is hauled up to a horizontal position the steps make the flooring of a platform from which soundings can be conveniently taken.

The Winter yacht work at Lawley's yard at South Boston has begun in earnest. In addition to the keels of twenty-one, twenty-five, and thirty foot racing yachts, the trunk of the sharpie for Dr. Weld has been put on. It is very high and gives the craft the appearance of a houseboat. The lower standing rigging of G. L. Day's new schooner Endymion has been set up and her shrouds are being rattled down. The schooner Fortuna is hauled out on the railway, having new planks put in. The schooner Hildegarde is having her deck recalked.

John Murray Mitchell, New York Yacht Club, has laid up his big cutter Bedouin at Port Jefferson, where she will be overhauled during the Winter. Mr. Mitchell contemplates a long cruise as soon as the season opens. The itinerary has not been arranged as yet.

Commodore Ranhofer of the Hudson River Yacht Club has started on a two months' duck-hunting expedition in his yacht. Among the guests on board are Former Commodore Dean W. Chute, Secretary A. G. Buchholz, and Capt. Donaldson.

Several of the yachts of the Greenville Club are still in commission, and there are impromptu races held off the clubhouse every Sunday. Contrary to the prevailing belief of many devotees of the sport who have never sailed in the vicinity of Greenville, there is a depth of fully four feet of water at low tide anywhere west of the long breakwater, and the anchorage off the clubhouse is one of the best on New York Bay.

At a recent meeting of the Indian Harbor Yacht Club the question of annual dues was brought up. The consensus of opinion was that the present dues—$15 per year—were inadequate, and it was decided to increase them. The members, however, were divided as to whether the increase should be $5 or $10 per annum, and the subject will be finally disposed of at the annual meeting. The Indian Harbor Club contemplates plans for another addition to its clubhouse at Greenwich, as the present structure is far too small to accommodate the rapid increase of members.

The project for a city organization open to members of any recognized yacht club and known as the Yachtsman's Club is in such shape at present as to warrant the committee in charge to announce success assured, and a suitable house will be hired at the earliest possible moment. Already 200 yachtsmen have signified their willingness to join the club. The method adopted to reach the various clubmen was by sending notices to the Secretaries of the various yacht clubs throughout the country, they in turn to notify their members. As a matter of course, this method was a slow one, and there are hundreds of yachtsmen who will doubtless join the new organization as soon as they are notified of its existence. Commodore C. T. Pierce, Chairman of the committee, said yesterday that he expected a membership of at least 600 before Spring. The proposed dues are $25 per year for resident members and $15 per year for non-resident members. These amounts have not been definitely decided as yet.

William A. Hamilton, Riverside Yacht Club, purchased the yawl Regina from Dever H. Warner of the Bridgeport Yacht Club. The sale was made through the brokerage office of Frank Bowne Jones. The Regina was built last season from designs by Crowninshield. She is 75 feet over all, 50 feet on the water line, 17 feet beam, and 7 feet draught.

George J. Bradish, New York Athletic Club, has placed a commission with a well-known builder for a yawl that will be used for cruising on Long Island Sound. The designs show a yacht of up-to-date model, about forty-one feet over all, twenty-seven feet on the water line, and of moderate draught.

Late reports from Scotland state that Will Fife, Jr., has by no means recovered from his illness, although much improved in health and able to sit up each day. The Shamrock will lie at her mooring in the Garelock all Winter.

There is afloat about City Island a vague rumor that in the event of a challenge for the America's Cup for 1900 a defender of the Cartoon type will be built there by F. T. Wood, builder of Syce, Kestrel, Norota, Pyxie, and other fast yachts, from the designs of Gardner & Cox. While the Cartoon has proved a flier, it is doubtful in the opinions of several expert designers whether such a design could be evolved successfully in a ninety-footer.

Read Brothers of Fall River have begun work on an auxiliary schooner for Rear Commodore Homer A. Skinner, Rhode Island Yacht Club, to replace the sloop Ramallah. The new boat is to be 57 feet over all, 40 feet load water line, 14 feet beam, and 6 feet draught. She will be equipped with two gasoline motors of eight horse power each, located amidships. Her interior arrangements will consist of a main cabin 10 feet long and two staterooms with 6 feet 5 inches headroom. Her sail area will be about 1,800 square feet.

The knockabout Pirate, designed and raced by B. B. Crowninshield with much success last season, has been sold to R. C. Robbins.

The New York Canoe Club, whose anchorage is on Gravesend Bay, has inaugurated a new one-design class of knockabouts, which will be raced on the inside course between Fort Hamilton, Sea Gate, and Ulmer Park next season. The principal dimensions of the craft are: Length over all, 28 feet; load wated line, 18 feet; beam, extreme, 8 feet; draught, hull, 2 feet 7 inches; with board, 5 feet 6 inches; displacement, 4,300 pounds; keel, iron, 1,365 pounds; area of mainsail, 358 square feet; area of jib, 71 square feet.

W. G. Newman, the retiring Rear Commodore of the Manhassett Bay Yacht Club, will have an auxiliary engine placed in his knockabout Willada during the season.

George R. Moran of the New York Marine Vapor Company announces that he has received a commission for a twenty-five-foot launch to be carried on the davits of Oscar M. Lipton's steam yacht Lauretta.

Manhasset Bay Yacht Club's Dinner.

A novel feature of the annual dinner of the Manhasset Bay Yacht Club, which was held on Tuesday evening at the Arena on West Thirty-first Street, was an invitation to all yachtsmen who had won prizes in their regattas during the season. After the banquet, which was laid for ninety, the prizes were presented to the successful yachtsmen. Clay M. Greene, the playwright, acted as toastmaster, and he in turn introduced the new flag officers and the other speakers. Among the guests who responded to toasts were Simon Ford and Charles T. Pierce. The growth of the Manhassett Bay Club, since they took possession of their new club house less than a year ago, has been marvellous, and from what was practically a bankrupt organization they have flourished until they are at present one of the most popular of the Sound clubs. Hazen M. Hoyt is the new Commodore and Charles Putnam Tower will again be the Chairman of the Regatta Committee.

AMONG THE OARSMEN.

A bowling league has been organized by the members of the various Harlem River rowing clubs. Nine clubs have already entered teams, and the tournament will begin on Jan. 1. Handsome individual and club prizes will be offered.

The Crescent Rowing Club has finally decided to place its boathouse, located at One Hundred and Thirty-first Street and Park Avenue, on spiles. The house has been in a very dilapidated condition for a year past, and several times last Summer it sank completely. Other repairs will be made, costing in all about $500.

The Nominating Committee of the Dauntless Rowing Club, which is one of the oldest organizations on the Harlem River, has presented the following ticket: For President—W. Waters; Vice President—J. J. Shea; Secretary—W. Huke; Treasurer—E. H. Anderson; Captain—W. Mulcare; First Lieutenant—F. C. Vanderbroght; Second Lieutenant—Charles Warmuth; Directors—H. Lippincott, W. Adee, E. Conlin, James W. Trainer, and Dr. E. W. Knickerbocker.

The Nonpareil Rowing Club has elected the following officers for 1900: President—J. J. Murphy, (second term;) Vice President—E. W. Schum; Financial Secretary—J. L. Alexander; Secretary—F. Haight; Treasurer—J. L. Diehl; Captain—John Canavan; First Lieutenant—E. W. Nicola; Second Lieutenant—George Beck; Board of Directors—Charles Beck, G. W. Welch, John Craft, and the executive officers. The Treasurer's report showed the club to be in excellent financial condition and the membership limit of 100 about reached.

Capt. Jack Smith of the Nassau Boat Club has begun work on several new boats for the club. One of the boats will be a single racing gig, in which he will introduce several ideas of his own that promise much for the ease and comfort of the oarsmen, as well as adding speed and lightness to the boat. Capt. Smith has had excellent luck with all his boats, and the eight-oared barge he built last Winter for the Nassau Boat Club is considered one of the finest and most complete craft of this kind ever built.

There is little doubt that the season of 1900 will be a record breaker in rowing history on the Harlem River. There are several reasons for this. In the first place, the Harlem River clubs are more prosperous, and in better financial condition, than they have been in years; then, two, and possibly three, of the big regattas of the season, including the National, will be held on the Harlem River, and, finally, every club will have an opportunity of entering the event, the winner of which will be sent to the international regatta to be held on the Seine at Paris next September.

The Wyanoke Boat Club has elected the following officers for 1900: President—J. F. Buckley; Vice President—George A. Bagge; Treasurer—E. Kimmelberg; Financial and Corresponding Secretary—W. H. McKlever; Recording Secretary—Henry Ranfft; Captain—J. J. McGuire; First Lieutenant—Otto Feldman; Second Lieutenant—J. O'Brien; Log Keeper—J. A. Gerrie. Board of Trustees—P. J. Reilly, Henry Loewy, Samuel Loewy, and Charles Hecht; Delegates to Harlem regatta and Middle States Association—J. F. Buckley and Samuel Loewy.

Efforts are being made by several Harlem River oarsmen to organize a water polo league among the clubs. Five clubs have already announced their intention of joining if a swimming tank large enough for the men to practice in can be found. It is proposed to play the championship games at the Sportsman's Show to be held at Madison Square Garden next March.

A meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen will be held in this city early in January. The exact date has not yet been announced. At this meeting the place for holding the 1900 regatta will be decided upon, and the details regarding the sending of an eight-oared shell crew to the international regatta at Paris settled. Secretary Fortmeyer believes that it would be a wise plan to row the international regatta about Sept. 18. The races for the championship of France are held at that time, and thus several days' sport would be afforded the visiting oarsmen.

The Waverley Boat Club of One Hundred and Fifty-sixth Street and the Hudson River contemplates making extensive improvements to its boathouse and adding several new boats to its fleet. This club was organized in 1859, and its first boathouse, which was at the foot of Christopher Street, stood high up on spiles, like the habitations of lake dwellers. It is the second oldest boat club in the city, the Atalanta alone exceeding it in age. In 1870 the Dock Department, the chief enemy of amateur boating associations, demanded the space where the boathouse stood in order to build piers. The club therefore moved to the foot of Fifty-seventh Street, and here it built its first float or landing stage.

It was while the club remained at Fifty-seventh Street that it achieved its greatest fame. It was the favorite club of the 400 of that day. When the Grand Duke Alexis came to this city in 1872 the naval officers of his suite were handsomely entertained by the Waverley boys, who were entertained themselves in turn, and at one of these social gatherings the Grand Duke was present. Among the famous oarsmen who have either rowed from the clubhouse or have coached the crews are George W. Lee and the noted Ward brothers of Newburg. Shortly after the Centennial commerce again intruded, and at the behest of the Dock Commissioners the club took up its house and moved to the foot of Seventy-fifth Street, where it remained until 1887. When the Commissioners served their third notice upon the club Trustees they rose in their anger and moved to the present site, the highest north of any boat club in this city.

James Pilkington, who is Chairman of the Harlem Regatta Association's committee, which will endeavor to bring the National regatta of 1900 to this city, will call a meeting of the committee in a few days. He says there is no good reason why the races should not be rowed over the Speedway course, which can be made the finest straightaway course in the country by a little dredging work near Washington Bridge.

BASEBALL PLANS AND OUTLOOK

Meeting of the National League and American Association — Brush and Freedman Reconciled.

The annual meeting of the National League and American Association of Baseball Clubs will open at the Fifth Avenue Hotel on Tuesday morning, and will probably continue for the remainder of the week, as there is much business of importance to be conducted. Indeed, it should prove one of the most important meetings in the history of the League.

One notable feature of the session will be the friendly meeting of John T. Brush of Cincinnati, at present the recognized leader of the League, and Andrew Freedman, head of the New York Club. Mr. Freedman has not been in attendance at League meetings for several years because of his unfriendly relations with the faction that was trying to oust him, and of which Mr. Brush was the leader. The fight against Mr. Freedman was given up by the Brush faction and their former friendly relations were again established. An effort will now be made to eliminate all that is detrimental to the game.

Mr. Freedman's so-called ruinous policy last year was the result of the manipulation by the Board of Directors of the Holmes trouble of two seasons ago, when Mr. Freedman had his team forfeit a game because Holmes was not removed for making an insulting remark. The first decision imposed a fine of $1,000 on the New York Club for forfeiting the game, and a long period of suspension for Holmes. The case was reopened without giving the New York Club a hearing, and Holmes's suspension was rescinded, but the fine stood. This incensed the local club owner. The case will probably be again heard on Tuesday, and the fine imposed on the club remitted. The promise of this is said to have been the cause of the present friendly relations.

A vigorous fight will be begun against the so-called syndicate baseball—that of one body of men controlling two clubs. This is expected to lead to a reduction of the circuit to ten or eight clubs. There are now two clubs that are considered in the syndicate class. They are the St. Louis Club, that also controls the Cleveland franchise, and the Brooklyn Club, also owners of the Baltimore Club. The fight against syndicate baseball, it is expected, will counsel these two clubs to dispose of the extra franchises. To reduce the circuit to eight clubs the Washingtons and Louisvilles would have to be dealt with. No club can be forced out, as the twelve-club agreement, made in 1891, has still one year to run.

It is thought by many that the new American Association, formed in the West last Fall to oppose the National League, will offer the long-looked-for opportunity to reduce the circuit by its being recognized by the League as was the old American Association. The National League made known its intention several years ago to form a new association when the ten years' agreement expired, but if it can be arranged to give franchises in the newly formed league to the Cleveland, Louisville, Washington, and Baltimore Clubs, the reduction of the circuit will be accomplished this year. There was some talk last year of reducing the circuit by the league buying out the several clubs. A majority of the club owners, however, said at that time that such a course would not be pursued, and that they would not pay out a single dollar toward a fund to buy clubs that are a drag to the League. The League, however, has done this very thing before, and as one of the Brooklyn stockholders remarked recently, will do it again if the future success of the game is at stake.

Barney Dreyfus of Louisville, now that he has secured control of the Pittsburg Club, is ready to transfer the Louisville Club to a new association. He will transfer the best Louisville players, and these, with those already in Pittsburg, will form a strong team.

If Baltimore and Washington drop from the League into a new association, the best players will be disposed of to the clubs remaining in the League. All this will tend to strengthen the various teams, and the fight for the pennant would not be so one-sided.

Andrew Freedman has declared his intention to serve up the best possible kind of baseball next season, a capable manager will be secured in place of Fred Hoey, who last year, despite his inexperience in baseball, did good work with the material he had to work with.

The New York club will retain the services of Left Fielder O'Brien, despite reports to the contrary. He was only loaned to the club last year, but a deal for his permanent services had been made. It is likely that Doheny and Warner figured in the deal, Bowerman being the other Pittsburg player in the exchange. The local management will not discuss the deal, but it is known that such a deal was on before the season closed this year.

President Freedman has a strong desire to secure McGraw to play third base and manage the team. An opportunity was offered to secure McGraw last season, but then Mr. Freedman was not purchasing players.

GOSSIP OF THE CYCLERS.

The L. A. W.'s Annual Election of National Officers—McDuffee Motor Pacing Machine.

Now that the division officers of the League of American Wheelmen are installed, the attention of the members is attracted to the annual assembly of the league, at which the National officers will be elected and the various important questions of policy for the coming year settled. The next four months will be taken up with work in the Legislatures. Among the laws that will be urged in the various States are those affecting the carrying of bicycles as baggage by railroads, good roads appropriations, and other laws that will add to the convenience to wheelmen as a class.

Eddie McDuffee has made some remarkable records for cycling during the past season. His work has been interesting, as it related to the development of motor pace. Mechanical pacing contrivances first came into prominent notice last year, when they achieved only limited success. Until this season, trained pacing crews, mounted upon multicycles, were decidedly superior to any motor machine that had been adapted to track use.

In deciding to enter the record-breaking field this year, McDuffee believed that noteworthy success could be attained only through marked improvement in motor pace, for it was evident that the best that human pace could perform had already been accomplished. Early in July he established headquarters in New Bedford, Mass., where the excellent Buttonwood cycle track afforded opportunity for practice behind a steam machine which had been carefully designed and built under his direction; and this machine, with various improvements upon the original model, he has used through the season. The power is steam, and the heat is derived from vaporized gasoline. Six gallons of raw gasoline are carried in a tank in the rear of the steersman. Counterbalancing this tank is one carrying about sixty pounds of compressed air to force the gasoline into use. This fuel is vaporized by heat, and is then forced under the boiler where it is ignited by about 100 jets of flame that pass in and around 300 or more small copper tubes in which the steam is made.

The water which is carried in a tank under the steersman, can be pumped out of this tank or back again. The gasoline flow is controlled by an ingenious device, and the speed of the machine is easily regulated by the engineer on the rear seat. The rear wheel revolves once at every piston stroke, and 2,700 revolutions of the driving wheel per minute are guaranteed by the makers of the machine. The horse power is calculated at four and a half.

McDuffee first gained a reputation when he defeated "Jimmy" Michael in 1897. His records paced by his steam motor machine, are: One-quarter mile, 0:18; one-third mile, 0:27 2-5; one-half mile, 0:36; one mile, 1:21; two miles, 2:54; three miles, 4:22; four miles, 5:31 3-5; five miles, 7:12 3-5; ten miles, 15:18 4-5.

Endorsements.

It is a significant fact that the Pianola is the only piano-player that has ever been endorsed by musicians.

EMIL SAUER,
Concert Pianist.

"It is really wonderful. I can freely say that the Pianola gives me more pleasure than I have had from thousands of so-called treats of pianistic effort.

"I have heard a great many musical inventions, but the Pianola is the first which has a reason for existing.

"It is sure to have a future. This is my candid opinion."

MORIS ROSENTHAL,
Concert Pianist.

"I feel quite sure that nothing has more closely approached hand-playing. I was greatly delighted to hear it play the Chopin Study at my own tempo."

EMIL PAUR,
Conductor Philharmonic Society, New York.

"Nothing of the kind I have heard before can approach the Pianola.

"In the hands of a competent player all the shading, crescendo, as well as modification of tempi, are remarkably accurate."

LUIGI MANCINELLI,
Composer and Conductor, Metropolitan Opera-house.

"I have been astonished at the performance of your Pianola, which differs radically from anything of the kind I have ever heard. It is a wonderful instrument. Nothing I have ever heard before could be called artistic in the true sense of that much-abused word."

MAURICE MOSZKOWSKI,
Composer and Pianist.

"Any one hidden in a room near by who will hear the Pianola for the first time, will surely think that it is a great virtuoso that plays; but after a while he will perceive his error, because your instrument never plays false notes." (Literal translation.)

P. GAILHARD,
Director Paris Opera.

"The Pianola is an admirable instrument by which an amateur, without being a pianist, can play, giving the exact illusion of a virtuoso."

L. BRETTNER,
Concert Pianist, Paris, France.

"Your Æolian is a marvel; the Pianola, a dangerous rival for us."

MUSICAL COURIER,
New York.

"We do not hesitate and cannot hesitate to say that the Pianola must inevitably revolutionize the whole present pianistic situation. It will, in the first place, make the piano a much more interesting instrument, and make it accessible to hundreds of thousands of people who cannot use it to-day."

FRANZ KALTENBORN,
(Kaltenborn Quartette.)

"I have no hesitation in frankly stating my opinion of the Pianola. In the first place, the full appreciation of this instrument is like so many other things—a matter of education. I should advise every one to give it a thorough investigation before deciding on its merits. Before rehearsing I was rather skeptical, but after the first half-hour's work it began to grow upon me, and the longer I play with it, the more wonderful it seems. Of course, for ensemble work it is largely a question of the man behind it. The point is, that given the man behind it, the most astonishing effects are obtainable; a precision and clearness such as few artists can equal, with surprisingly accurate effects of light and shade, rubato, accentuation, and certainty of musical rhythm.

"When one remembers how many pianists set the technical ideal before themselves, and spend their lives in reaching it, these results seem the more remarkable."

PIANOLA IN USE WITH UPRIGHT PIANO.

The Pianola

An Unusually Desirable Christmas Gift

A Pleasure that will afford an endless source of entertainment for every member of the family.

The Pianola is a piano-player by means of which any one can play upon any piano any selection he may desire to hear at any time.

THE PIANOLA is an instrument by means of which any one can play the piano. It is not necessary for the player to have any musical knowledge. A person who has never taken a music-lesson can learn to use the Pianola, and with it correctly play the most difficult compositions at the first attempt.

It is possible to play the piano so well by means of the Pianola that even a critic can not tell the playing from that of a human performer. Without any musical education whatever, any piece of music ever composed can be played, not only correctly, but with expression.

NOT AN AUTOMATIC ATTACHMENT.

The Pianola is not an automatic attachment for a piano. It is not, even when in use, attached to the piano. It is not placed within the piano, to fill up the sounding-space and destroy the instrument's tone. It is placed in front of the piano, so that its fingers rest upon the keys; but it is at all times separate and distinct from the piano itself.

The Pianola brings into use thousands of pianos which are now lying idle. It makes every member of the family a player and master of a repertory which includes the musical classics, both ancient and modern, the latest popular airs, and an endless variety of both song and dance music.

ENDORSEMENTS AND PATRONAGE.

Among lovers of high-class music a decided prejudice exists against what are known as mechanical musical instruments. This prejudice keeps a great many people from investigating the Æolian and Pianola, and giving us the opportunity to demonstrate their merits and prove our claims. The endorsements these instruments have received must impress even the most skeptical; and more significant still is the remarkable list of the Æolian Company's patrons; this includes the names of people conspicuous in almost every walk of life in this country and Europe. Many of them have purchased more than one instrument, some as many as five and six. There can be no better evidence of the instrument's merits or the complete satisfaction that they give through continued use.

Pianola Price $250.

Our instruments are always gladly shown to all who visit our warerooms. The same courtesy is shown to the merely curious that is extended to the intending purchaser. Catalogue upon request.

Æolian Prices $75 to $2,500.

GEORGE J. GOULD AT POLO

His Enthusiasm for the Game Pleases Lakewood Residents.

KEEPS THREE FIELDS IN TRIM

Between Thirty and Forty Ponies Are a Part of His Outfit—Strong Rival to Meadow Brook.

Lakewood has a new amusement this year—polo. George J. Gould is its patron, and he has already given one or two games on his private field, and they have been witnessed by a large percentage of the hotel and cottage community of that popular resort. Weather permitting, it is the intention to continue these games with similar frequency throughout the Winter, and it is quite probable that a polo tournament may be held toward Spring.

The residents of Lakewood are overjoyed at the prospect of a new sport to watch this year. Most of the Winter inhabitants go there to be amused, and what is more exhilarating than a good game of polo, the riders wearing bright silk shirts and dashing, apparently recklessly, hither and thither over the field, while the possibility of a tumble is always present to add a spicy tone to the game? Golf does get rather tiresome after a while, except to those who play it, and to the latter there is no other game on earth worth talking about. A fine, spectacular game of polo is a rare treat after several days of tramping over the links in the hopeful expectation of seeing a forty-foot put or a 220-yard drive.

George Gould, therefore, has done Lakewood and its sojourners a genuine service, and as the well-behaved portion of the community is freely admitted within the gates of his private grounds every one is gratefully inclined toward Mr. Gould for his devotion to polo. The old Lakewood Golf Club grounds have undergone a complete transformation since the club moved one year ago and Mr. Gould purchased the property. Last Winter he had a practice field laid out, and it was there where Mr. Gould learned the game sufficiently to organize the Lakewood Polo Club, join the Polo Association, and play with a fair degree of success in many tournaments during the Summer. It is no passing interest, however, that Mr. Gould has taken in the game, and his enthusiasm, coupled with his ability to aid the sport, has instilled fresh life to polo in local circles.

It is an expensive game, even for those who indulge in it most economically. George Gould has not been compelled to stint himself in any particular. He has about thirty or forty ponies, and not only one polo field but three. He has the most complete polo outfit of any private person in the country. Most of the very few private fields pretend to be nothing more than practice grounds. Mr. Gould, on the contrary, has left no stone unturned to have his best field as perfect as polo science can make it, and when thoroughly seasoned it is said that it will be the strongest rival ever brought against the famous Meadow Brook polo field, which was made for that club by William C. Whitney at an expense of several thousand dollars.

This first field is about 1,000 feet long, and has been made as level as a billiard table. Nearly a foot of top soil was placed over the sandy surface of the Lakewood soil, and it was seeded with the best grass for growing a rich, firm turf. The grass filled out with unusual rapidity, and last week the field was used for the first time. Some of Mr. Gould's guests who played in the initial game were H. L. Herbert, Chairman of the Polo Association; his son, Raymond Herbert, Robert L. Collier, P. Fenelon Collier, Laurence Waterbury, one of the star men of the Westchester team; George H. Norman, Jr., and R. L. Agassiz, two of Boston's ablest polo riders.

The field stood the wear in grand style. The turf is a trifle soft yet and it will probably take another year to give it the firmness of the Meadow Brook field. The large field will probably not be used extensively this Winter, t will be reserved for the more important games. Of the other two fields one is a trifle smaller than the big field, but it has been laid out with the same care and most of the games thus far have been played on it. The other is the practice field. This is the old one, laid out last year, and it is not absolutely level. George Gould and his two boys, Kingdon and Jay, took their first lessons on this practice field last Winter. The Gould boys are as enthusiastic over the game as their father, and they can tell about the points of polo ponies and criticise the game as well as their most experienced elders.

Adjoining the polo fields is George Gould's palatial house devoted to various games and sports. While it combines most of the features of a first-class club, it also possesses the exclusiveness of a private house. Among its attractions are racquet courts, a riding ring, bowling alleys, and a well-equipped gymnasium. There are also a number of suites of rooms fitted up as bachelor quarters, where some of Mr. Gould's guests can be entertained when his friends are too numerous for his own house.

This house is probably half a mile from his own residence. A pleasant, winding path leads to it through the stunted-pine woods, and all the property has been fenced in since last Winter.

Each polo field has separate score boards, bells, and timekeepers' headquarters. The old Lakewood golf house is used as a polo annex and the old golf links present a radical change from two years ago, when the cry of "fore" was heard constantly over the ground from Thanksgiving Day to the advent of warmer weather in April.

The practice which the members of the Lakewood Polo Club will be enabled to get this Winter will make them a strong team early next season, and the buff and black colors of the club will be seen in all of the important local tournaments during the coming year.

THE ONLY HALF-BREED JOCKEY.

Will Ride in San Francisco This Winter and Then Come East with Marcus Daly's String of Racers.

A half-breed Indian, Harry Morgan by name, who came East last Spring with a bunch of horses from the Bitter Root ranch of Marcus Daly, promised to be as sensational a jockey hereabout as the Reiff brothers proved to be in England. Morgan weighed but 100 pounds, and the copper color and the straight hair of the typical Indian, and an amount of courage and cool recklessness about his riding that had not been seen here since the days of Fitzpatrick. There was much in common about the riding of the trio, and there were none of the jockeys with years of experience behind them that Morgan was afraid of. He made his appearance at the Aqueduct track, and opened the eyes of the veterans at the racing game by the fashion in which he handled the horses of the Marcus Daly string, and made the Eastern jockeys look like novices, for he fairly "rode rings around them" when it came to a sharp finish.

Morgan's career was short, however, for in one of the races, in which he tried to force his horse through between a horse that was winning and the rail, he came to grief, and was picked up with a broken collarbone and a badly sprained wrist. There was a long and a slow recovery, and when Morgan was able to be about again Daly's representative had sold all his horses, and the half-breed was left with nothing to do. He disappeared from view, and nothing was heard of him in the East, because he was riding in the races of the Montana circuit—races of which comparatively little is known hereabout, even in the pool rooms. Now Marcus Daly's manager has decided to send a string of something like fifty animals to race during the Winter at the San Francisco tracks, and the papers of the Pacific Coast announce that Morgan will be the chief jockey for the stable.

Mr. Daly later on intends to make an early Eastern campaign on the same lines that he followed so successfully this season. Morgan will then come East and remain for the whole season, riding the pick of the youngsters that Mr. Daly is having developed. Morgan is the only Indian riding as a professional jockey, on the larger race courses of the country at least, and the chances of his success against the best of the jockeys on the big metropolitan tracks are already being talked about among such men as never tire of gossiping about racing from one year's end to the other.

Marcus Daly has been very ill all the Fall, and has been confided to his hotel in this city for many weeks under the care of medical specialists. Absolute rest from the responsibilities that this [illegible] by the fact that he has recently disposed of a portion of his vast mining interests to an English syndicate. He proposes, therefore, to find his recreation this season in racing his horses about the tracks in this vicinity. At one time he had proposed to go to England and try conclusions with the horses there, but this project has now been abandoned.

AMERICAN JOCKEYS ABROAD.

A Remarkable Record for the Year Makes The London Times Believe Lester Reiff Will Head the List Next Season.

Commenting on the riding of the principal jockeys in England during the racing season just closed, The London Times says: "It does not need much perspicacity to see that the highest place in the list (winning jockeys) will be occupied next year by the elder Reiff, if he remains to ride in England, his success this Autumn having been quite as marked as that of Sloan last year, and even better than it is this season. He and his younger brother have both done extremely well this year, but Henry ("Skeets") Martin, who for a time seemed to eclipse the other Americans, has not ridden with so much success of late. Still his average of one win in four mounts puts him on an equal footing with Mornington Cannon, and it is evident that American jockeys will play a very prominent part on English race courses."

The record of winning jockeys has "Sam" Loates at the head of the list with 160 wins in 731 mounts, with O. Madden second with 130 wins out of 807 races, Mornington Cannon third with 120 victories in 463 races, "Tommy" Loates fourth with 112 wins in 693 races, and "Tod" Sloan fifth with 103 victories in but 345 races, making the winning percentage of the American jockey the highest of the party. Morningside Cannon's record is the poorest he has made in ten years. Comparing the riding of British and American lads, The Times says further:

"T. Loates, who has been first or second nearly every year since 1893, is this time fourth, preceding by four the American jockey Sloan, whose average, however, is very much better, for he has not ridden half as often. Speaking of American jockeys, the interest of the racing has been much enhanced by the presence of three or four others, two of whom, the brothers Reiff, have greatly distinguished themselves, the elder winning 55 races out of 184, while his younger brother has secured 27 out of 140, the odds at which their horses started being, as a rule, sufficiently long to yield a considerable profit to those who have "followed" their mounts. It has been the same with Sloan, for, although he rode nineteen successive losers at Derby and Manchester, his victory on Proclamation in the November Handicap leaves a profit of about £37 for every sovereign invested on his mounts during the season. M. Cannon and S. Loates are the only other jockeys of whom the same can be said, and in Cannon's case the margin is much smaller than with Sloan and S. Loates, whose many close "finishes," of which Loates generally had the best, were among the most interesting features of the season. Sloan and the other American jockeys cannot, with their style of riding, have so much command over a horse in a close finish as the English riders, but what they may sometimes lose in this respect they more than gain at other stages of the race; and it seems very clear that their method will be more or less closely copied by the younger generation of English jockeys. Sloan would certainly have occupied a still better position had he not been suspended for disobedience to the starter in the Summer, and been unable to ride during the Liverpool, Goodwood, and other meetings in July and August."

Sloan's record includes, among others, the 1,000 guineas with Sibola, the Newmarket Stakes with Dominie II., the Jubilee Stakes with Knight of the Thistle, and Democrat (the crack two-year-old) in his many victories. His worst fluke was when he allowed Sibola to be beaten in the Oaks by Musa, in which race Madden caught the American jockey napping.

MANY TURF CASES REVIEWED.

Penalties Imposed by the National Trotting Association's Board.

The Board of Review of the National Trotting Association closed its December meeting at the Murray Hill Hotel yesterday morning. During the four days' session it considered 179 new cases and 20 cases that had been continued from the last meeting.

The board yesterday was instructed by the association to prepare and file charges against Frank Shank of Litchfield, Ohio, who, it is alleged, "pulled" the mare Fannie Dillard in the 2:11 pace during the Cleveland Grand Circuit meeting in Cleveland last August.

Fines were imposed on Andrew McDowell of this city, George Tuft of Angola, Ind., and the owner of the bay gelding Checkmate, an Ohio horse, for driving while under suspension.

Applications for reinstatement made by John F. Barrett of Deering, Me., and B. F. Cameron of Cambridge, Mass., were denied. Applications for the reinstatement of the following horses were denied: Hornet, alias Judge Holt, 2:15¾; Morgan, formerly Kalmia, 2:17¼. Through the representations of John Toomey, Oakdale, Mass., Little Pet, alias Uncle Jim, was reinstated.

These associations were suspended for non-payment of premiums: Tri-County Agricultural and Driving Park Association, Johnstown, Penn.; the Meriden Trotting Park Association, Meriden, Conn., and Granite City Driving Park Association, Barre, Vt.

The Nutwood Driving Club of Dubuque, Iowa, C. T. Hancock, President, was suspended until further notice. It was charged that its officers collected suspension fees and did not account to the National Association.

"THE SCULPTOR'S PRIZE."

Mr. Bush-Brown Offers a Special for Show Horse Breeders.

H. K. Bush-Brown, the sculptor, has made a proposition to the National Horse Show Association to offer a prize of the value of $500, to be known as the Sculptor's Prize, to be awarded to the breeder who nominates four horses or more, bred, matured, and exhibited by himself, whose horses shall take the best average of prizes in the several classes for which they are nominated, the competition to be confined to harness and saddle horses. Mr. Bush-Brown also offers to make for the winner of his prize a bronze statuette portrait of the stallion which shall have sired the greatest number of prize winners, either exhibited by him personally or nominated in the entries as of his breeding.

In a letter to the managers of the show Mr. Bush-Brown says he is led to make this offer because there seems to him to have been too little attention paid to the breeder in the distribution of prize money, and even in the arrangement of the catalogue. Names of owners and exhibitors are given, but the name of the breeder, who is, after all, the educator of the horse producer, is omitted, or, at best, rarely given. Mr. Bush-Brown argues, very sensibly, that, as an educational force, the show would be of vastly greater benefit if the man who has worked for years to produce an acceptable type of horse should receive the benefit he deserves by having attention called to the result of his efforts. Breeders want to know blood lines of winners and the ancestry of successful families in order to aid them in their work, which is the production of the types any good trainer or exhibitor can whip into shape for show purposes in a few months. Breeding to a standard is a matter of years, however, and the man who can so breed is certainly entitled to every possible recognition due him for his labors.

So disinterested an offer is one that will unquestionably receive the consideration it deserves from the managers of the show. The wonder is that their attention has not before been called to the advisability of doing just what Mr. Bush-Brown suggests as necessary.

As a breeder, rider, and modeler of the cavalry horse, Mr. Bush-Brown calls attention to the fact that Col. Hein in his decisions as judge of horses of that type awarded prizes to horses with docked tails, a class of animals that are not permitted in the army. This was noticed and noted by critics at the time of the awards, who then assumed that the awards were so made because the docked animals were so superior in conformation to the long-tailed horses that were passed over. Against this custom Mr. Bush-Brown as a horse lover, as well as a breeder and an artist, enters a protest, and suggests that in future such animals be excluded from the cavalry classes, where under army regulations they certainly have no place.

DOINGS OF THE BOWLERS.

nailing game, as is evidenced by the fact that hundreds of thousands of New Yorkers take a turn on the alleys at least once a week. Thousands of women have taken up the game, and as a result there are hundreds of women's clubs in New York that hold meetings at least one afternoon a week. Within the past five years women's tournaments have become quite a fad. In Brooklyn two of these competitions are held annually, while in New York one is held every season. When these tournaments were first organized it was customary to play the old-style game of counting all the pins that fall. The women have become so proficient at the game, however, that in the tournaments this season the regular strike and spare game will be adopted.

New York is the bowling centre of the country. The progress made in the game by local bowlers, particularly this season, is remarkable. Three years ago a team score of 800 or over, or an individual score of 200, was considered a good performance. At the present time a team score of 900 is turned out more than once every night in the various tournaments. Individual scores of over 200 are rolled so often in the various tournaments that they are no longer discussed unless they are over the 250-mark.

Veterans who have watched the progress made in bowling attribute the improvement to the fact that nearly every one can now roll the curve or twist ball; that is, started about three inches from the edge of the alley, curves in and hits the head and quarter pins. This is a very effective ball if properly delivered, and not with too much speed. The ball is apt to cut through the frame of pins if delivered with too much speed, and this causes "splits," although the ball hits the head and quarter pins. The speed with which the ball hits the foremost pins raises the pins and sends over as a result of a ball delivered at a moderate speed. There are many bowlers, mostly old-timers, who deliver a slow ball, straight down the centre of the alley. This is what is known as the slow working ball, and is very effective. It is more difficult to control this centre ball than the curve ball delivered from the side of the alley. There is a natural turn to the wrist when delivering a ball from the side, and the curve can easily be mastered after one learns to grip the ball firmly.

An international tournament will be held next Summer under the auspices of the United Bowling Clubs of New York. Representatives from every State will be invited to compete. Several teams from Hamburg and Berlin are also expected to take part. The United Bowling Clubs at their meeting last Sunday voted an appropriation of $1,000 for preliminary expenses. Some large park will be secured, and twenty regulation alleys will be built. The committee appointed to make the preliminary arrangements consists of Louis F. Schutte, Joseph Thum, L. Haimbach, G. Schenck, and R. D. Deitrich.

COLLEGE ATHLETIC TRAINING.

Too Much of It the Trouble with This Year's Football Teams—Trainers Who Are in Demand.

The reverses in football experienced by some of the prominent colleges in the season that ended last week are attributed in nearly every case to the overtraining of the players. There is this feeling particularly at Princeton. The undergraduates there are clamoring for the services of "Jim" Robinson, who prepared the Yale team. The Faculty, however, is adverse to having Robinson engaged, because of the freedom he allows the men while under his care. The work of Trainer Christie, although Princeton defeated Yale, is condemned by the undergraduates, who persist in maintaining that the team was clearly overtrained a week before the game with Yale and that it was simply a piece of good fortune that the men came around all right for that struggle.

It is evident that every possible effort is being made to bring about the return to Yale of "Mike" Murphy, under whose supervision the Yale athletes formerly prospered. Murphy's contract with the University of Pennsylvania expires next June.

At the University of Pennsylvania the showing made by the football team has caused a great deal of dissatisfaction. The football contingent is in favor of retaining Woodruff as head coach, but he has intimated that he will not accept the position unless he can have absolute control of the men. This appears to mean that Woodruff wishes to have control of both coaching and training. The training systems of Woodruff and Murphy are entirely at variance.

There appears to be no desire on the part of the Yale Athletic Council to lose the services of "Jim" Robinson as trainer. He made a splendid record this season with the Yale eleven, and the condition of the West Point cadets in their game with the "middies" was also largely due to Robinson's methods. The Yale undergraduates would like to see Robinson installed as trainer for the Yale navy next Spring.

Yale's efforts to obtain "Mike" Murphy's services are based on his reputation of being the best developer of athletes in the country, and it may be that he is wanted to take charge of the track and field athletic department, which during the last few years has not been up to the regular Yale standard. "Al" Copland, who trained the team for the intercollegiate games last year, was handicapped by the want of good material. Murphy has a reputation for picking out a raw freshman who may have never worn a running shoe and turning him out a 100-yard champion. He has turned out a championship team at the University of Pennsylvania every year since he has been there. Tewkesbury, Kraenzlein, and McCracken are world's champions whom he has developed.

CRICKET SEASON REVIEW.

The Season of 1899 a Successful One—League Batting Headed by M. R. Cobb of Knickerbocker Team A.

The cricket season of 1899 proved most successful. The closing feature was the tour of Prince Ranjitsinhji and his team of English cricketers, who visited Philadelphia, New York, and Toronto. Cricket is now being played in all parts of the United States, and this year the game reached the remotest sections of the country.

The championship series of the Metropolitan District Cricket League was well contested. The organization comprised six teams this year. The Knickerbocker A. C. placed two teams in the field, and the first eleven led the championship race, while the second eleven was second. The other clubs in the league are the Manhattan, New York, Staten Island, and Newark.

The league batting averages were headed by M. R. Cobb of the Knickerbocker A. team, with a record of 60.50 in nine innings, of which 3 were not out. He was followed by C. P. Hurditch of the same club, whose average was 60.25 for five innings, of which one was not out. The best bowlers in Team A were F. F. Kelly and M. R. Cobb. This pair of trundlers bowled so well that they were seldom changed. No other member on the team qualified by delivering the necessary number of balls.

The Clarke family proved the mainstay of Team B, while at one time "C. H." was a prominent candidate for the league batting prize. His average at the close of the season was 40.75, and he was one of the three men who piled up an aggregate of 300 runs in championship matches. A. V. Clarke headed the bowling averages of Team B with 9.21 for 28 wickets.

The Manhattans enjoyed a successful season and won many victories. J. Adam, who shared with M. R. Cobb and C. H. Clarke the honor of scoring 300 runs, headed the batting averages.

Owing to the fact that their team was constantly changed, the Staten Islanders were not as successful as was expected. The chief work with the bat was done by H. E. Jackson, W. S. R. Ogilby, and G. Quirk. N. S. Walker, Jr., carried off the bowling honors of the team with an average of 10.95 for 20 wickets.

The New Yorks, after taking grounds at Prospect Park, succeeded in defeating both the Knickerbocker A. C. team B and the Manhattans. C. Byers and A. E. Smith were the most successful batsmen, and usually made a good stand for the first wicket. J. E. Roberts proved the best bowler on the team and succeeded in winning the league bowling prize with a record of 5.40 for 22 wickets.

The Newark Club proved very unsuccessful, having gone through the season without gaining a single victory. This may be due to the fact that all its games were played on the opponents' grounds. The Backus brothers proved the best batsmen

30,000 rounds will be expended. The recent staff appointments of Col. Bates are said to be excellent ones. Quartermaster Sergt. John Beatty, appointed Battalion Quartermaster, served with distinction in the Cuban campaign, and previous to joining the Seventy-first was a well-known member of the Twenty-second. Drs. Lowald and Van Wagenen, appointed Assistant Surgeons, and W. H. Whitan, appointed Battalion Quartermaster, are all said to be officers of ability. The Assistant Surgeons have both served in the United States Army.

A committee of Captains has been appointed in the Seventy-first Regiment to nominate a candidate for Lieutenant Colonel. In this connection it is said a lively scandal is likely to ensue should a certain officer be nominated who is obnoxious to a number of active and veteran officers of the regiment.

The Thirteenth Regiment will have a "relay meet" under the auspices of the regimental Athletic Association February, open to intercollegiate, interscholastic and military athletic leagues and Young Men's Christian Association members. David M. Demarest, an old member of Company B, who served from an enlisted man to Captain, has been elected a Lieutenant of Company B. Company L will have a bicycle meet, with five events, under the auspices of the National Cycling Association. A dance will follow next Wednesday at the armory.

Col. Jarvis of the Eighth Regiment has detailed Capt. Locke of Company G Acting Regimental Adjutant in place of Parrish, resigned. The First Battalion drilled on Wednesday under Major Kirby, and the Second Battalion drilled on Thursday under Major Edwards, with great success. Col. N. B. Thurston of Gen. Roe's staff gave an interesting lecture to the officers and "non-coms" at the armory last Friday night on rifle practice. William Weidon, an ex-featherweight champion prizefighter, has been engaged as boxing instructor, and has been given charge of the regimental gymnasium. Classes of instruction are to be formed. Company K has elected J. Dood from civil life to be Second Lieutenant. The following "non-coms," recently appointed, have passed the examining board and have received their warrants: Sergt. Langfield and Corp. McCauley, Company H; Corps. O'Brien, Straus, Kessler, and Isaacs of Company K.

Commissions for newly elected and appointed officers of the Second Brigade have been received as follows: In the Twenty-third Regiment—Capt. George W. Kayser, Company C; Second Lieuts. George Ball and William A. Stopford of Companies F and E. In the Fourteenth Regiment—Capt. Gustav Bruckmann, Company C. In the Forty-seventh Regiment—First Lieut. and Battalion Quartermaster Fred H. Hobby. Lieuts. Ball and Stopford were sworn in last night by Col. Smith. A full and honorable discharge has also been received for Capt. George R. Jennings, late Commissary of Subsistence, Fourteenth Regiment, and for First Lieut. and Assistant Inspector of Small Arms Practice George L. Gerould, Forty-seventh Regiment.

The First Regiment of Colorado has just received from the State the handsome bronze statue "Pro Patria," by Tiffany & Co. This trophy, which was won by the regimental rifle team at Bath on Sept. 9 in the Third Brigade match, will be kept at the headquarters in Mount Vernon.

In the Fourteenth Regiment an election held in Company L for First Lieutenant has resulted in the choice of Sergt. Charles Kimball. The following non-commissioned officers have received their warrants: Sergts. T. W. Stringham, G. A. Rosquist, Company I, and Corp. Brathuller, Company B.

In the Twenty-third Regiment Howard M. Field passed the regimental board for First Sergeant of Company B, and Col. Smith has appointed A. C. Van den Scheidt Battalion Quartermaster Sergeant. Company A, Capt. Praeger, will have a drill and guard mount, followed by a dance, at the armory Wednesday night.

Troop C, Capt. Debevoise, has unanimously elected Commissary Sergt. Paul Groot Junior Second Lieutenant.

The non-commissioned staff of the Ninth Regiment is now fully organized. Its officers are Sergt. Major W. H. Van Vleck President, Quartermaster Sergt. Frank J. Higgins Treasurer, and Ordnance Sergt. B. Monteverde Secretary. The rooms of the association have been finely fitted up. The veterans are collecting the photographs of the officers who served in the Spanish war in the Ninth Regiment, and purpose getting up a photographic souvenir. Sergt. Harris of Company A has been deputed to receive applications for membership in the garrison of the regular Army and Navy Union, which is composed of those who served in the late war and includes regulars and volunteers. Second Lieut. James Lynch has been elected First Lieutenant of Company K, vice Byrne, promoted Captain. The indoor baseball team of the regiment has been organized with John J. Hyson of Company G Captain. It played the Twelfth Regiment team last night, and will meet the Thirteenth Regiment team the coming Saturday night in the Ninth's armory. In Company G Sergts. Michaels and Gilbertson have received their warrants, as have Corps. Murray, Van Arsdale, and Radloff.

The Non-commissioned Staff of the Twelfth Regiment held an enjoyable dinner last Tuesday evening, which was the first social gathering that body has held since the return of the regiment from Cuba. The members present were Sergt. Major J. S. Adair, who presided; Battalion Sergeant Majors L. V. Meehan, and R. Strauss, Color Sergeant John McDermott, Drum Major A. Menzies, Commissary Sergeant J. P. Fennell, Ordnance Sergeant John Carrie, Quartermaster Sergeants Colee and Irwin, Hospital Steward Goodall, Sergts. Dolan, Traugott, Mahnken, Bajart, Burchell, and Bandmaster Frank. Among the special guests were First Sergt. Murphy, Quartermaster Sergt. Wood, Corps. Pfonthelmer and Conway. The bill of fare was elaborate and fitting the occasion, as were the speeches. A string band furnished music during the dinner.

Company C, Ninth Regiment, has unanimously elected First Lieut. Charles A. Meyer, Jr., of Company I Captain, vice Quinby, dismissed. He served with the volunteer regiment in the Spanish war as a Lieutenant. His first military experience was as a private in the Twenty-second NATIONAL GUARD NOTES.

An officer of the First Brigade who has been analyzing the figures of rifle practice for the past year brings out the fact that if the three brigades in New York City are figured according to the regiments in each that entered the United States service during the Spanish war, the First Brigade, commanded by Gen. Butt, will be in the lead. There are only three regiments in the First Brigade, and all these entered the United States service. In the Second Brigade and also the Fifth Brigade, there are four regiments in each, but the Twenty-third in the Second Brigade and the Seventh in the Fifth Brigade were not in the United States service, and consequently their numbers were not depleted like organizations serving in the volunteers. Now, omitting the two latter regiments, each brigade will have three regiments that served during the Spanish war, and, figuring on this basis, the records are as follows:

FIRST BRIGADE.

	Experts.	Sharp-shooters.	Marksmen.
Ninth Regiment	5	18	330
Twelfth Regiment	12	25	278
Twenty-second Regiment	10	34	389
Total	27	77	997
SECOND BRIGADE.
Thirteenth Regiment	8	28	263
Fourteenth Regiment	3	13	333
Forty-seventh Regiment	6	6	186
Total	16	47	782
FIFTH BRIGADE.
Eighth Regiment	3	13	262
Sixty-ninth Regiment	4	11	216
Seventy-first Regiment	17	39	475
Total	24	63	953

It will be seen from the above that the First Brigade war regiments lead the Fifth Brigade by 3 experts, 14 sharpshooters, and 44 marksmen, and the Second Brigade by 11 experts, 30 sharpshooters, and 215 marksmen. First Brigade headquarters are also proud of the fact that it has 3 experts and 5 sharpshooters, while all other brigade headquarters combined—Second, Third, Fourth, and Fifth—have only 2 experts and 3 sharpshooters.

Company A, Twenty-second Regiment, Capt. Murphy, will hold an informal reception and hop at the armory to-morrow night. The programme of the evening includes a drill at 8:15 o'clock, dancing after 9:30, and refreshments at 11:30. Tickets for the review by Gov. Roosevelt on Dec. 21 at the armory have been issued, and are in great demand. After the ceremonies the officers of the regiment will be presented to the Governor, who, however, will be forced by other engagements to remain only a short time at the armory.

First Sergt. Reilly of Company I has been elected Second Lieutenant. He served with the regiment in the volunteers as Sergeant. There will be a rifle contest for teams of eighteen at the armory range Dec. 23 for the Moore Trophy. Company G won the team-of-six match, shot at the armory range a few nights since, on a score of 243, beating its nearest competitor, Company I, by 21 points. The names and score of the winning team are: Capt. Slaytor, 50; Corp. Levien, 56; Private Blessinger, 59; Private Stewart, 56; Corp. Swanski, 55; Private Levien, 58; total, 243. The stag of Company K, scheduled for Dec. 21, has been postponed on account of the review. The company will hold an election for First Lieutenant next Thursday night, the only candidate being Second Lieut. Walter E. Harding.

There will be another review of the Twelfth Regiment, Col. Dyer, at the armory during the present month, to be followed by a reception. The reviewing officer is to be Major Gen. Daniel Butterfield, and the veterans of the regiment are to be invited. The exact date of the review at this writing has not been determined. W. Babcock, from civil life, has been unanimously elected Second Lieutenant of Company E. The members of Company C have decided to hold a neck-tie party at the armory after the holidays. First Sergt. Charles M. Smith of Company B has won the first "expert" badge for armory marksmen this season by a score of 72 out of 75 points. The smoker given by Company F a few nights since was a very successful event. There was a well-arranged programme of boxing, singing, &c., and the master of ceremonies, Sergt. Murphy, was complimented for his success. Another smoker is to be given in January. Corps. Saunders and Fields of Company G have been promoted Sergeants.

Second Lieut. Louis E. Potter has been unanimously elected First Lieutenant of the Thirty-second Separate Company of Hoosick Falls, to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Lieut. Walter A. Wood.

The prone, class, and non-expert matches will be shot on the armory rifle range of the Seventh Regiment next Saturday night, and a large attendance is expected. The members of Company G, Capt. Underwood, have decided to hold a mess dinner at the armory on Monday evening, Dec. 18. Before the dinner the company will have an outdoor drill, leaving the armory at 6:30 in the evening and returning at 8:30, when dinner will be served.

The completion of the work of enlarging the new drill hall of the Forty-seventh Regiment will be celebrated on the evening of Dec. 20 by a review and dance at the armory. Major Gen. Roe, it is expected, will be the reviewing officer. Lieut. Col. William Cary Sanger has been inspecting the books and papers of the regiment. First Lieut. and Battalion Quartermaster Frederick H. Hobby has received his commission. Capt. Charles L. Gerould, former A. I. S. R. P., has received a full and honorable discharge. The proposed trip to Baltimore has been informally discussed. The plan at present in favor is to leave Brooklyn on a Friday night in the first or second week of April, have a parade on Saturday, devote Sunday to visiting the various places of interest in the city, and return home on Sunday night.

Brig. Gen. George Moore Smith will review the Seventy-first Regiment at its armory on Tuesday evening, Dec. 19, and a reception will follow. This will be the first appearance of the newly elected Colonel, William G. Bates, in command of the regiment since he was commissioned Colonel. Sergt. Tabbert, who has charge of the "Fall of Santiago," to be produced at the armory on Dec. 28, 29, and 30, states some novel souvenirs will be presented to the guests. He has secured parts of the interior woodwork of all the sunken Spanish ships, also of the Merrimac, and the surrender tree. He is having these woods made into fancy articles. A historic museum will also be a feature, showing relics

HOW THEY ARE CONTRACTED

BRONCHITIS, PNEUMONIA, AND CONSUMPTION.

Diseases That Destroy Over Three Hundred Thousand Lives Annually.

GERMS WHICH CAUSE THEM

Found in Every Breath of Air we Inhale.

THEY LODGE IN THE AIR PASSAGES.

Congested and Inflamed by Catarrh, Coughs and Colds

THE HEAT OF THE BODY

Soon Restores Them to Animation, and They Multiply with Astonishing Rapidity.

During the coming winter thousands upon thousands of men, women and children will die from Bronchitis, Pneumonia and Consumption; thousands of others will contract these diseases by neglecting coughs, colds and catarrh, and become victims of these terrible scourges. To think of all the misery and suffering which this will occasion is appalling, especially to those who know that nine-tenths of all this could be avoided if people would only use a little care and common sense in looking out for themselves. How many there are who think nothing of a cold or slight attack of catarrh, and, in themselves they are not dangerous; but every person who walks the streets, goes to church, uses the street cars, or attends the theatre with the delicate membrane of the head and throat inflamed, is taking a greater risk than they who enter a pest house; for Consumption is no longer considered hereditary, but infectious, and the bacilli of this disease are found by thousands in all the air we breathe. Carried to these sore spots, these bacilli find a place of refuge, and immediately begin to grow and multiply, unless destroyed. Heretofore it has been impossible to kill them, because nothing but a dry air germicide could enter the bronchial tubes and lungs, vapors, sprays and douches of carbolic acid, ammonia, menthol and other liquid germicides have been tried by the medical profession for years without any results whatever, except perhaps to wash the germs of catarrh into the stomach and there produce a disease (catarrh of the stomach) which is far more dangerous than catarrh of the head. Until four years ago there was no remedy for diseases of the respiratory organs which could be inhaled in the air we breathe. Then Hyomei, the new dry air germicide, was discovered. That it has proven a success cannot be doubted by any one who reads the reports of the Boards of Health in all cities where Hyomei is used; for without a single exception the death rate from consumption alone in those places has been reduced over thirty per cent. annually.

HYOMEI, AND HYOMEI ONLY has accomplished this. To be sure quacks and advertising specialists have put inhalers on the market by the score, yet there is not one among them all in which Hyomei is used, and fifty-nine out of sixty-one have gone to the wall within twelve months; the others are fast losing ground, even with all their tremendous advertising. Of course this has prevented the universal use of Hyomei to some extent, and no doubt leads many to lose their faith in cures by inhalation; but every day the public are finding out that through Hyomei alone cures by inhalation were made possible, and when they have been taught the danger of neglecting colds and cat

AN UPRIGHT JUDGE.

The decision of the State Board of Election Commissioners in Kentucky to give a certificate of election to Mr. TAYLOR, the Republican candidate for Governor, is a right decision reached in circumstances of difficulty and trial. It is due to the courage and rectitude of Judge PRYOR, a Democrat, who voted with the Republican member of the board to make the needed majority.

It is plain from the terms of the decision, written by Judge PRYOR, that he has the heartiest condemnation for some of the tactics of the opposite party, and especially for those of Gov. BRADLEY and of the Circuit Court in Louisville. But he takes the plain ground that this action cannot be considered by the board sitting as a Board of Canvassers, and that its clear duty is to give the certificate on the returns as they stand. Whether the case will be brought before the Commissioners as a Board of Contest, or before the Legislature, is not determined by the present action, but the present action is a sure guarantee that whatever is done will be done in order, fairly and in accordance with law. Considering the heated feeling that has prevailed and the violent threats that have been made, this result is most important and salutary.

It must be remembered that the Election Board was the creation of GOEBEL, the Democratic candidate for Governor and for some time the acknowledged boss of the State, and that all the tremendous pressure available under such conditions was brought to bear on Judge PRYOR. We are in the habit of thinking the partisanship of Kentucky Democrats to be of an extreme sort, and some of us have rather plumed ourselves that nothing so violent could exist in our own advanced State. But, Judge for Judge, PRYOR is a better type of citizen than MAYNARD. The country is sounder, stronger, and safer for every such demonstration of moral courage and manly fidelity in the discharge of judicial functions.

"SEA POWER" AND INVASION.

In our columns the other day a retired officer of the Royal Engineers disputed the conclusions which Capt. ZALINSKI had already announced to our readers concerning the importance of completing our seacoast defenses and of manning them with artillerists instructed in the use of the delicate machinery of modern high-power guns. The argument of the British engineer was, of course, that the true national defense of a maritime power is its navy. This seems equally to hold of a detached island like Great Britain and of the unquestionably "paramount power" of a continent like ourselves.

We have no intention of taking part in this discussion, so far as it relates to national defense. It is a kind of "Anglo-Saxon" tradition, on both sides of the ocean, that the true defense of the nation is a powerful fleet. This has been the case on the other side ever since "the wooden walls of England" began to be celebrated. It is now a commonplace of British politics that the British Navy must be as strong as the combined fleets of any two other powers, and there is no limit to the expense which Parliament is willing to incur in order to maintain this superiority. On our own side, also, it is a common saying, since the Spanish war, that the navy can have at Washington anything that it may desire. And yet the showing, alike of our Spanish war and of the war which England is now waging in the Transvaal, is that it will not do to trust to the navy alone, and that wars may break out at any time which may require the co-operation of a strong and readily mobilisable body of land troops.

Such wars need not be offensive wars in the objectionable sense of that term. There are very few Americans who will admit that we had any choice except to go to war with Spain after she had shown her incapacity to keep the peace in Cuba. There are, to be sure, a larger number of Englishmen who deny that it was necessary to go to war with the South African Republic, and who insist that the settlement of the dispute could safely have been left to time, and would not have been so left for a very long time. But at any rate our own little war with a fourth-class power showed the necessity not only of a reform in the organization of our army, but also of an increase of its strength. It showed that the army was in more urgent need of enlargement than the navy, which was ample for its work.

The same lesson is still more impressively inculcated by the conflict of the mighty British Empire with two of the smallest States in the world, two States which between them cannot muster 50,000 fighting men. It may be, of course, suffice to finish up the war. But it is evident that all the available British Army is on the scene of action. It is very much easier to talk about sending another corps, or even another division, to the Transvaal than it is to send them. And it is evident that reflective Englishmen are by no means satisfied that the force now available, even with the garrison of India and the garrison of the British Islands stripped to the limit, if not below the limit, of safety, is adequate for the work in hand. The enormous superiority of Great Britain in every element of strength is in great part counterbalanced by the long lines of land communication necessary to be kept up, and by the fact that the navy is not directly available against these mountaineers, except through a detachment, which has been doing excellent service. It is true, on the other hand, that no other nation in the world could have approached the British record in transporting its army of invasion from Great Britain and India to South Africa. The possibility of accomplishing this feat the empire owes to its merchant marine, but by the aid of the navy it could equally have been accomplished against a naval enemy.

The moral of the British campaign in South Africa is the same as the moral of our campaign in Cuba, where every man of the regular army we could lay our hands on was not more than enough for the comparatively small work in hand. It is the moral that Secretary ROOT has drawn in his forcible saying that "the chief use of the army is to provide for war." So long as the British Parliament or the American Congress insists upon limiting the army to the minimum required for its police duty in time of peace, so long such a Legislature is engaged in preparing disagreeable surprises for its country in time of war.

A GOOD WORK WELL BEGUN.

The New Yorker who visits the Grand Central Station after the work of reconstruction now going on there has been completed might easily imagine himself in Boston or Philadelphia or some other wideawake and advancing city. The good things come to us late in Manhattan, but when we get them they are altogether "up to date." The use of the horse for tramway purposes continued to be common here long after even the little towns had turned the noble but obsolescent animal out to grass. Yet now that the change is made we find our surface roads equipped with the underground trolley or with air power, the very model and perfection of traction apparatus, while the public highways of other cities are cluttered up with the hideous rigging of the overhead trolley. Look at Boston or the Borough of Brooklyn.

Experience and invention have evolved a structural plan for large terminal railway stations that is accepted all over the world as serving best the needs of the railroad company and the convenience of its passengers. There is first the large waiting room, with windows for train tickets, the through traffic and the local traffic having each its own; for parlor and sleeping car tickets, the telegraph, telephone, and express offices, the baggage master, bureau of information, and newsstand. Through doors ample in number and width passengers have access to the general train platform running at right angles to the tracks and waiting trains, each of which has its proper gate where tickets are examined; and the route and starting time of each train is unmistakably indicated by signs—illuminated at night—so that all but the blind and illiterate can find their way without asking foolish questions.

The transforming work now going on within the Grand Central Station will produce a station of this kind. The waiting rooms of the Central and the Harlem roads, as well as that of the New Haven road, will be on the Forty-second Street end of the building. The enlarged room, some 150 feet in depth, will run entirely across the building, and the approach to the trains will be as convenient as it is in the Broad Street Station in Philadelphia or in the new Boston union station.

The managers of the three roads that enter the Grand Central Station will have the cordial thanks of the community. The city will have a passenger station that its people can view with pride and use with comfort. Let it be duly grateful.

Now for the next improvement. Is it too much to ask the Central, Harlem, and New Haven Railroads to discontinue the use of coal-burning locomotives in the tunnel? Is it going to be necessary to appeal to the Legislature to compel them to employ electric motors, as we had to do to make the Manhattan Company light its cars at night? We think the answer to both these questions should be no.

These great and rich railroads ought to have business pride as well as business judgment. They really ought to be ashamed at this late day and at this stage of the development of electrical science to make the passengers entering or leaving New York breathe the deadly fumes of their locomotives, when the substitution of electric motors would entail neither large expenditure nor appreciable delay in the train service.

One coal-burning locomotive engine consumes the oxygen of the air and returns to it hurtful gases to an extent equal to the results of the breathing of 70,000 persons. The consequences of combustion in the tunnel are maddening to the healthy and dangerous to the weak and delicate. It ought to be stopped—by the companies, if they are willing; if not, then by a law of the State.

In a few years at most the companies will probably find it to their interest to run all their local trains to points within city. The loss of time involved in uncoupling the steam locomotives and coupling on an electric motor at Mott Haven on the other side of the Harlem would then be confined to the express trains. Three minutes ought to cover it, allowing for the slowing up and getting headway again. If it required five minutes it would be abundantly justified. The most desperately hurried passenger would rather lose five minutes than be asphyxiated.

It is a great privilege for these railroads to have their termini in the very heart of the city. It is a monopoly privilege, for no other road will ever have a station on Manhattan Island. The voluntary abolition of combustion in the tunnel would show a beautiful spirit of appreciation on the part of the companies. If they will not show this spirit and get the grateful acknowledgments of the people of the city, then the Legislature must do its duty.

DISCARDING A BOSS.

It must be plain to all that it is for the Republican organization of the Empire State seriously to consider whether the Hon. THOMAS C. PLATT is longer desirable as its authoritative leader. It is not necessary to give in detail the why and the wherefore of this particular duty; it is manifest without specifications.

As a leader Senator PLATT has possessed qualifications of the very highest grade. It has come about that he is weighted with disadvantages always dangerous to a party, and, under the ordinary state of partisan divisions, likely to be fatal.

A change of leadership at a time of responsibilities such as now confront the New York Republican organization is not an affair of light moment, or to be entered upon without the most careful forecast of the consequences. What would come after it? What man of influence would take Mr. PLATT's place? Lacking a certain degree of promise of betterment it might be better to tolerate what is than to resort to uncertain experimentation.

But the New York Republicans must hold their eye upon the facts and take counsel among themselves as to the method for best dealing with them, now or in the future.—The Sun.

This is late, but it seems to be sincere. It is certainly sensible. We congratulate our neighbor, we commend its judgment. It is bad for the Republican Party to have PLATT as its boss. He wins no victories in the State that the party would not win without him. The city organization grows smaller and less reputable under his demoralizing sway. His boss-ship is a tactical mistake and a moral damage. Every intelligent Republican ought to cry out, with The Sun, "away with him."

It is a complete waste of time to speculate about the succession. Bosses are not appointed. They impose themselves. They come to the fore, or to the top, by the might of their own brains and the push of their own genius for politics and organization. It will be a great and praiseworthy work to get PLATT out. The succession will take care of itself, but we gravely doubt whether QUIGG is the man. Probably our neighbor The Sun would agree that he is not the man.

A "TENDERLOIN" SYMPOSIUM.

The other evening the personal and political friends of the Republican leader in the district that includes what is known in police circles as the "Tenderloin" gave to that gentleman a dinner, a lot of advice, a tea set of silver, and a chance to make a speech. He was told what a good leader he had been for his party and what a great party it was; he was instructed as to the proper policy in the Philippines, and what to do with the New York charter; and he repaid the compliments and the counsel with a glowing recital of the advantages and the charms of the Tenderloin district.

After-dinner oratory is not to be judged by too strict a standard. It is often ironical, and more often is intended to be when the intention misses fire. There is no entirely trustworthy rule of exegesis for the utterances of a man flown with appreciation and apollinaris. The fortune of post-prandial jests lies peculiarly in the ear and the stomach of the hearers, and it is not given to the reader in cold type the morning after to draw with accuracy the line between the sober and the funny. We shall not venture to decide whether the picture drawn of his district by Mr. HESS was a light but truthful sketch of the real thing or a caricature addressed to the worthy Police Captain of the precinct, who was a listener. If the former, the lightness of touch did not change the features of the subject; if the latter, the caricature was unpleasantly faithful.

In any case, the district as described and as it actually exists is not a thing to be proud of for any one connected with or responsible for it. The Captain of Police who rules it with extraordinary powers, the Police Board who guide him, the City Government that created the Police Board, the people that called the City Government into being, can hardly congratulate themselves for their part in it. According to Mr. HESS and according to notorious fact, it is the home of nearly every form of vice, dissipation, and depravity. Gambling, prostitution, robbery, swindling, and the drunkenness that makes easy victims for the practitioners in these various callings abound. And this thriving mart for the exploiting of the ignorance, the passions, and the vices of the silly, the stupid, and the debased is called by its prosperous dealers the abode of "sport." And those on whom the dealers prey are deluded by the description and seem rather proud of it.

On the same evening that the Republican leader in the Twenty-fifth District portrayed the "Tenderloin" to his admiring friends, Recorder GOFF, before the St. Nicholas Society, was predicting that unless the intelligent men in the community attend better to their political duties the great Commonwealth would fall under either an oligarchy or a monarchy, and that he did not know which would be the worse. The second alternative is a foolish one to suggest. The Recorder can hardly have meant it in earnest. But the first is already to some extent and for the time being really garchic features about the rule of Tammany and its chief. It seems a little grotesque to compare Mr. CROKER with a Medici or even a Sforza. But in organising and disciplining men through their interests, appetites, and ambition; in thus securing servile co-operation in his own aims; in the subtlety of his limited intellect, and in the force of his narrow but vigorous and untiring will, undiverted save by the simpler and coarser tastes, he could give points to the tyrants of Florence or Milan. And he is entitled, in the comparison, to the credit, if credit it be, that he rules a community wealthy and powerful beyond the dreams of the Italian despots, still in the unrestricted enjoyment of universal suffrage. He is the head of an oligarchic body that could be overturned peaceably and surely at any election. How vicious and vulgar it is in some of its features, the picture of the Tenderloin given by Mr. HESS reveals. But the Recorder is right in saying that "we have just the government we are entitled to."

He is not right in thinking, as he does, that the remedy lies in an appeal to the State to rescue us from our own laziness and indifference. It is the chance for that appeal and the indulgence in it in the past that have made us lazy and indifferent. Only when we are compelled to seek our own rescue from the consequences of our own action or inaction shall we really be rescued. We are, as he says, entitled to what we have; we shall get nothing better until we establish by ourselves the title to it.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

We have already had occasion to call attention to the action of some newspapers, with reference to a capital case now on trial, as being not only plainly uncivilized and outrageous, but also apparently unlawful. We refer to the open and public expression of opinion upon the merits of a case on trial before a jury. Whether this reaches to a contempt of court is a question which has not been satisfactorily settled. "Trial by newspaper" may not be a very bad thing, so long as it is the only form of trial available. But, in the nature of things, it can never be altogether satisfactory as a substitute for more formal methods. And, when and so long as an accused person is actually on trial before a jury, nothing could be more outrageous than an interference with such a trial under pretense of reporting its progress.

This offense is committed directly by the publication of any expression of opinion upon the merits of a case in advance of the verdict of the jury. It is committed indirectly, but none the less surely, by any published attempt during the pendency of a case to draw conclusions from the evidence which are intended or adapted to create, in the minds of the reader, a belief either in the guilt or in the innocence of the prisoner at bar.

Courts have generally been chary of taking cognizance of this variety of the offense of interfering with the due and orderly administration of justice. Often this reluctance has proceeded from a proper fear, on the part of Judges, lest they might appear to be resenting fair and privileged public criticism of themselves. Not long ago a Judge in Boston incurred on this account some unpopularity which seemed to be deserved. The case just now in evidence has no complication of this kind. If the trial Judge should deem it his duty to take notice of the interferences with the course of justice which have been made or attempted by newspapers he would not be in any danger of having his action put down to an undue personal sensitiveness. That something ought to be done, and some example to be made, is the opinion not only of every lawyer but of every law-abiding and justice-loving citizen who has followed the comments of certain of the newspapers upon the case now in course of due and legal trial.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Judging from what we frequently find in the columns of our out-of-town contemporaries, there is a large and constant demand in many parts of the country for suggestions that will lighten the task of providing entertainment in the long Winter evenings at home. New games and diversions, it seems, are hard to find, and failure to do so leads to dangerous restlessness among the younger members of the family circle, and sets the occasional guest, if not to yawning, at least to thinking about other and more ingenious friends—which also has its elements of danger in certain circumstances. It strikes us that a good many conversational chasms might be bridged over in a way at once instructive, innocent, and joyous by the help of the following letter, which we copy verbatim from The London Globe:

Sir: It seems a pity that when you know so little of the American press as to mention The Evening Post as an "anti-English journal," you should have specified any paper whatever in illustration of your remarks. As a matter of fact, The Evening Post has been for a generation the one pro-English journal in America. So much so that it has been during all that time criticised or denounced by the rest of the American press as an English organ. During the Venezuelan excitement one of the grotesque stories of a hostile Western journal was that the editor of The Evening Post was in the habit, after the morning's work was over, of assembling his staff about him and singing "God Save the Queen." Your obedient servant,

THE LATE EDITOR

New York, November 14.

This is one of the most interesting and exciting puzzles we have come across in a long time, and any little gathering to which it is read will certainly find engrossing occupation for several hours in formulating arguments for and against the probability of the letter's genuineness. As for ourselves, we confess that we don't know what to think about it.

—After the jury in a little damage suit that was tried in Hartford last week had brought in a verdict of $25 for the plaintiff, several of the jurymen betrayed such obvious signs of having something interesting to say, if they only would, that they were at once the objects of energetic attack by persuasive friends. The story of how the verdict was reached soon came out, and queer enough it is. It seems that on the first ballot taken after retirement the jury stood eight to four in favor of the defendant. A one, still in favor of the defendant. Then there was a long deadlock. The lonely believer in the plaintiff's cause stood firm and voted time after time against his obstinate companions. Neither argument nor indignation had any effect on him, and he calmly announced that he was prepared for a disagreement or to remain locked up for an indefinite period. At last the eleven weakened. Whether it was the logic of the one juror or the thought of a comfortless night that changed their minds does not appear from the accounts now at hand, but changed the minds were at last, and the twelve returned to the courtroom unanimous for the plaintiff to the extent indicated by $25. Just what this episode teaches, either in regard to the jury system in general or to Hartford jurors in particular could be decided only on a full knowledge of the circumstances and of the men involved in them. Possibly enough the eleven were wrong at first and right at last, and the one right all the time, but if that is so, what a marvelously lucky man the plaintiff was, and how great before the jury was chosen were the plaintiff's chances of escaping a deserved penalty! And it is conceivable, too, that the size and furnishings of the jury room had something to do with the comparative promptness of the verdict and the avoidance of a mistrial. The case certainly opens up numerous avenues of thought.

—From letters that are appearing in considerable numbers in the London papers, it seems that the recent decision vesting the property rights to a speech in the man who makes it, has given offense to others than the remarkable publisher who recently set up the claim that such rights belong to the man who first prints the speaker's words. The folks who are complaining about the injustice of the decision are the stenographic reporters, who are much more numerous in England than here, and they base their arguments on the assertion that they do much more than "take down" what they hear. "In the case," writes one of them, "of ragged speakers like the late Mr. W. E. FORSTER and Mr. BALFOUR himself when he is tired, hardly a single sentence is left in the words actually used. In such cases—and they are very common—what I call the reporter's share is almost as great as in a full third person report, though his expertness in the are celare artem gives quite the contrary impression. So, when Judges and counsel talk of 'taking down' a speech they know nothing of what the reporter has to do, even where he seems to have done least." The same writer insists that mere condensation is enough to give the reporter or his employer a proprietary interest in sentences exactly quoted. Another "gallery reporter" declares that the difference between what are recognized by speakers and public alike as good and bad reports of speeches is not at all a matter of liberal accuracy in duplicating the spoken words, but depends upon the reporter's skill in putting the speaker's exact meaning into lucid and grammatical English. This view of the subject has hitherto been ignored in discussing the pretensions of the publishers, and there is certainly a little something in it.

—Mr. HENRY LABOUCHERE, the editor of London Truth, expresses a lofty confidence that nobody in England will pay any attention to the charge, openly and definitely made in Cape Town, that the extreme fervor of his Little Englandism is due at least in part to the judicious generosity of the officials who distribute the Boer secret service fund. The accusation is, it must be confessed, more than a little less than self-proving, for Mr. LABOUCHERE has a great natural talent for hasty and inaccurate judgment, and could safely have been trusted to give unbought assistance to the wrong side in the South African controversy. A fierce fighter himself, he yet is strongly disposed to condemn the fighting of other people as of small account at best, and needless or wicked at worst. Hear, for instance, what he has just been moved to write about Admiral DEWEY: "He seems to have conducted himself with great tact when in command of the Philippine squadron. He would have been a hero, I make no doubt, had he had the opportunity." That pretty remark serves as introduction for an impertinent lecturing of the American people. "On DEWEY's return," we read, "he was received with that exaggeration of welcome which is one of the characteristics of the inhabitants of the United States. His admirers gave him a house. He married a young wife and made a present of it to her. At once all the donors fell upon him tooth and nail. But why should he not have given the house to his wife? I presume that both of them intend to inhabit it, and if the lady survives him, why should she have to turn out of it?" The man who can write with such assurance as that about a matter which he so thoroughly misunderstands may well say that his defense of the Boers against his own countrymen does not even hint at the acceptance of a bribe.

BOERS' LOVE FOR AMERICANS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Senator Mason of Illinois has introduced resolutions expressive of the warm sympathy of the United States Senate with the Boers in the war which they are now making, avowedly for the annexation of Cape Colony. It is to be presumed that he will be seconded by Senator Morgan of Alabama, who, about three years ago, offered a resolution in the Senate congratulating our sister republic of France on having seized Madagascar, deprived its people of self-government, annexed it to France, and, as the French always do, forthwith excluded all American ships and American commerce from the island.

Many Americans are expressing sympathy for the Transvaal and denouncing Great Britain for defending her own colonies against Boer invasion. For a long time, in private conversation, I have been endeavoring to get these Boer sympathizers to answer a few plain questions; but as they always avoid doing so, will you be kind enough to put the following questions to all Boer sympathizers in the columns of THE TIMES?

I. If 150,000 Americans were invited by 60,000 men of any other race to settle in their country, (for example, Lower California,) and did so, buying up all the valuable land, at enormous prices, carrying on the entire productive industry of that country, and paying substantially all the taxes, to an amount sufficient to support the entire 60,000 natives in comfort, would these 150,000 Americans submit to the following conditions?

1. To live in cities built by the Americans, but denied any municipal government whatever.

2. To have these cities so deprived of sanitary privileges that the death rate is more than three times as large as it is in New York City or in any neighboring city under good government.

3. To be denied the right to carry any arms whatever, while every man and boy among the 60,000 natives is heavily armed and drilled at the expense of the Americans.

4. To be deprived of the right to hold any public meetings, to publish any newspaper, to criticise the native government, or even to petition for redress.

5. To have no right to vote for the smallest office, except upon condition of renouncing all protection from America for fourteen years, during which time they must serve in the native army whenever called upon, and, at the end of that time, not be allowed to vote unless approved by two-thirds of the native neighbors and a native military officer.

II. If the leading men among the 150,000 Americans conspired to revolt against these conditions, and then, before committing any overt act, were arrested, sentenced to death, and only released upon paying fines varying from $25,000 to $100,000 each, what would the American people say about it?

III. Supposing this state of things existed in some territory immediately adjoining the Mexico—how long would it be before the American Government intervened and demanded redress?

IV. If such redress were refused or evaded, and the Mexican Government raised a powerful army and built enormous fortifications, with the guns all turned on the 150,000 Americans, ready to blow them off the earth in case of attempted revolt, would not the American people insist upon at least 10,000 American troops being sent down to the border of Mexico?

V. If, upon these 10,000 troops being sent down, the Mexican Government sent a peremptory message to Washington, demanding that the 10,000 troops should all be removed to a distance of several hundred miles, that no more troops should be sent into California, and that, if these terms were not complied with in forty-eight hours, Mexico would begin war, what would the people of the United States say about it?

VI. If, after all this, the Government of the United States simply said nothing, and thereupon Mexico had poured 50,000 soldiers into California, captured San Diego, and besieged San Francisco, what would the American Government and people do?

Some wise men are anxiously inquiring whether, if we do not join Continental Europe in sympathizing with the Boers we shall not incur the hatred of Europe to the same extent as the British have. The fact is, as anybody knows who has traveled in Europe with his eyes open and read many European newspapers, the American people, as a whole, are hated quite as much all over the Continent of Europe as the British people are. It is quite true that many individual Americans are liked and are very courteously treated. But this is equally as true about individual Englishmen. Taken collectively, however, public opinion all over the Continent is just as hostile to the American Nation as it is to the British Nation. If any one can name a single German or French newspaper which has ever maintained a friendly tone toward the United States for twelve months together I should be very glad to learn the name of that paper. One or two newspapers in Switzerland have been moderately friendly, and several French newspapers never say anything about us at all; but the great mass of newspapers in France, Germany, and Austria, so far as I can learn, take delight in publishing everything bad about America which they can learn or invent, and carefully suppress every piece of news which reflects credit upon the United States.

The fact is that Continental nations hate every one who speaks the English language, and so do the Boers. If the Boers were successful in their present war they would shut Americans out of their country just as rigidly as they would Englishmen.

STARTING A HUSBANDS' UNION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

About Roberts. Mighty interesting, isn't it? I see that many of the women are forniast him, and that probably settles his hash, right or wrong; for though the men are natural polygamists, regardless of latitude, nation, race, or creed, yet they have in common one weakness that makes them each obedient in the end to one woman and converts them into practical monogamists. That weakness is their universal love of comfort. It is a more influencing motive than admiration of the sex. It is really stronger than the fear of death; and the women being by no means fools and all determined to rule, have used this base incentive to virtue, this love of ease, to its full extent.

So we have the amusing spectacle of the miserable polygamist sympathizing in his heart with Roberts, yet pretending to condemn his immorality and to fear the subversion of the Constitution. I myself am strong for one wife and no more; but I am uncommonly humane and would not like to undertake the support of a Biblical family lest I should perchance have to suffer the agony of seeing some few of my dear ones starve to death.

Besides, I have never been able to manage the one I have, just as I should prefer; and, in fact, I suspect that she manages me. It would be too painful to be managed by a syndicate of women. And then I shrink from all those parental responsibilities. I have neither money nor love enough to go around in a Biblical family of children. I am a real monogamist. Besides, I am getting old. But if I had happened to secure more than a fair share of the ladies, I really believe that I should try my best to support them in every way. I should wish to feed and clothe them, (and offspring); I should try to be loving and impartial, and I should do my level best to uphold their good name and make the world accept them as honorable.

I take the view of the other woman in that matter; I think Roberts is now doing only his duty, and that he would be a cur if he tried to sneak out of it. I think, further, that it is high time for us poor men to look after our rights.

I am for a Husbands' Union, a vast society of the down-trodden of the land; and I should manage it as usual by means of a secret inner gang, to which none but the true and brave should be admitted—the Man's Union. While I am working that project up I will suggest that if the ladies and Mr. Edward Atkinson would drop the contemplation of war and polygamy and Aguinaldo and all other matters of outside interest, and would devote their whole effort to increasing the native birth rate, they would at least have a nobler aim.

You may not believe me, Mr. Editor, but it is a fact that my ancestor was one of the lot who came over with Winthrop, and in 1630 helped found BOSTON.

ROMAN CHURCH AND HENRY VIII

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Dec. 2, in a communication about the Roman Church and divorce, William F. McGinnis asks: "Is it not passing strange that Rome preferred to offend the monarch (Henry VIII.) and lose a kingdom rather than make one of those convenient 'loopholes'?" [That is, a Papal dispensation which would, in effect, divorce Catherine from Henry.]

If Mr. McGinnis will carefully study the case of Henry VIII.," as he suggests to another writer, he will find ample reasons for the Pope's acting precisely as he did, even if the Pope had not objected to Henry's "divorce" on moral and legal grounds; that is to say, the Pope's action in regard to the "divorce" of Henry VIII. proves nothing whatever in regard to Rome's alleged use of "loophole" dispensations to effect divorce.

In the first place, Pope Clement was constantly menaced by the superior power of the Emperor Charles V., who, as the nephew of Catherine, was strongly opposed to her "divorce" from Henry. In fact, the Pope had good reason to fear that Germany and the Netherlands, at least, of Charles's dominions, would be lost to the Roman Church if he should offend Charles by declaring Henry's marriage invalid. And part of the time, while the question was on, the Pope was practically a prisoner of Charles, and liable to lose his own temporal domains forever if he should displease Charles so greatly. In the second place, one should remember how Henry's marriage with Catherine had been brought about in the beginning.

Catherine was first married to Henry's elder brother, who died young. It was against the law for a man to marry his brother's widow, and Henry did not marry Catherine till after Pope Julius had issued a bull declaring that their marriage would be legitimate. The grounds for this bull do not concern us. A Pope had expressly declared that Henry's marriage with Catherine would be valid. How could a later Pope have been expected to declare the same marriage invalid?

Perhaps I should apologize to the readers of THE TIMES for repeating to them the familiar statements of history; but it seems to me that the peculiar question quoted above should not go unchallenged.

SPEAKING ENGLISH IN AMERICA.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of yesterday a letter headed "The Way We Speak English" and signed "Andover" suggests two questions: First, What is the proper way to speak English? and second, Why should Americans speak English and not American?

In regard to the first question, English being a living language, no hard and fast rules can be made as to speaking it, as, for instance, a language can hardly have rules of pronunciation wherein the words bough, cough, dough, lough, rough, and sough are all pronounced differently. Moreover, certain words are pronounced differently in Boston, New York, and Charleston, and even in England a word will be pronounced in one way in Norfolk, another in Middlesex, another in Lancashire, and still another in Yorkshire. It is a matter of history that English was not pronounced the same in Queen Elizabeth's time as it is to-day and as to the matter of spelling, I have only to refer you to Chaucer and the earlier editions of the Bible and Shakespeare.

THE HAMILTON TREES.

To the Edit of The New York Times:

In answ to a letter published in THE TIMES of t date, relating to the Hamilton trees, I w ld say that I fail to comprehend why e writer should take such exceptions, l ving no knowledge himself as to the co ary. In his letter the writer states tha Hamilton, as a statesman, had a well ord ed intellect of the first quality, and there re would have known better than to g all the way to Mount Vernon for the sho ts, as he could have found them in the outs rts of Brooklyn and in New Jersey. Agai he states that Hamilton, then at the ver zenith of his career and busy with affai of great moment, would not have had me to attend to more than directing th planting. His final argument is that Ha ilton would not have planted them, had he done it himself, in such a small spe . These three suppositions, quoted fr the anonymous letter, are utterly ab d.

I have closed a letter received three years ago om Hamilton's grandson, which will verify and settle the fact that Alexander Ha ilton did plant the historic trees on Conve Avenue and One Hundred and Forty-seco Street.

What the Briton Is Thinking of the Boer.

Written for the NEW YORK TIMES
By POULTNEY BIGELOW,
Author of "The German Struggle for Liberty," "White Man's Africa," &c.

THIS is the first war waged by England against white people ostensibly fighting for the right of self-government—at least since the American struggles, which ended with Yorktown and New Orleans. The war in South Africa comes as no surprise to those who were in the Transvaal immediately after the Jameson raid, and unequal as the struggle appears to be from the standpoint of the statistician, history furnishes us abundant evidence that a small but united people fighting on its own ground is more than a match for regulars—for a short time, at least. The first serious check to the military career of Napoleon came, not from the well-drilled battalions of Prussia at Jena, but from the peasant levies of the Tyrolean Alps, under Andreas Hofer, in 1809. British regulars who had made light of the troops of Louis XV. of France capitulated to the minute men of New England.

Public sentiment in England is to-day divided in regard to the Boer war, much as it was in 1778 regarding our Revolutionary struggle. In a land of personal liberty, there is bound to be diversity of opinion on great National questions, and even after the country has been committed to war, the Government may be criticised without necessarily involving trials for high treason.

Just now the harshest critic of the British Government is John Morley, a man who at such a time would be sent to solitary confinement in a fortress had fortune started his life as a Prussian subject. But in England he bears a character so far removed from self-seeking that his public and private arraignment of the Boer war is received with respectful attention by a large portion of a people whose relatives are perhaps at this very moment shedding their good blood on the frontiers of Natal and Cape Colony. Only a few days before I embarked for New York Mr. Morley expressed himself to me about the Boer war in a manner which would have drawn upon him charges of treason had they been uttered by an American during the war against Spain. Discretion would have inclined me to regard the language of the distinguished historian as intended only for confidential intercourse had he not already made public utterances equally emphatic.

The biographer of Cromwell, of Burke, and of Voltaire sees in the Boers a small body of liberty-loving, God-fearing peasants wrestling against invaders whose inspiration is thirst for gold and political dominion. This is enough for Mr. Morley; and with all the fervor of a generous nature he springs to the defense of a cause he knows to be unpopular and fights in London the battles of Paul Krüger while his own flesh and blood are in the field at the command of his Queen.

This to me is a magnificent illustration of patriotism—the patriotism that stands up in the midst of popular clamor and consistently opposes a government which at the moment appears to be omnipotent by the force of public sentiment. Let us for a moment contrast the respect accorded to Mr. Morley with the varied epithets dedicated latterly to Mr. Carl Schurz because he dared to utter his opinions on the subject of annexation. Mr. Schurz stands high above partisan interests; few men know the practical workings of our National machinery as he does; no man is a more honest well wisher of our country. We need the criticism of such men, and there is no worse service the press can do than to discourage opinions from such pure sources. I say this with the more freedom because on this question of Anglo-Saxon expansion I share the opinions neither of Mr. Morley nor Mr. Schurz.

Mr. Morley in England represents the conscience of the people who think much of England and less of the British Empire. That conscience treats all men as equal and holds that the Boer of the Transvaal deserves the same consideration as is accorded the voter of Edinburgh or London. It is by appeal to this moral force that the great internal reforms have been accomplished which to-day make England rank as the leader of nations in all that pertains to honest government joined with local liberty. This was the conscience which abolished rotten boroughs, purified the Church, did away with slavery, and made the British flag welcome to the natives in every corner of the globe. It is the same sort of conscience which Henry Ward Beecher appealed to successfully when he hurled the thunder of his eloquence against the slave holders of the United States.

But conscience is sometimes inconvenient in imperial politics, as it is in business, and even in journalism. The Englishman who to-day follows Mr. Chamberlain is perhaps just as patriotic as Mr. Morley, but thinks it wise to do a little harm for the sake of insuring an immensely greater good. Mr. Chamberlain has been in practical business all his life, and his practical mind early saw the importance of consolidating rival manufacturing establishments in order to regulate prices—to obviate ruinous competition. He formed what we would call a trust in his manufacturing business, a combination similar to what happens when many small roads are united in one system. In this process of consolidation many small interests may suffer, but the public is apt to acquiesce in the result, because it is an arrangement permitting of more economic management, and consequently of ultimately more efficient and perhaps cheaper service. Mr. Chamberlain sees in the Transvaal a small and very vexatious competitor who refuses to come into his combination; who not merely is wasting a patrimony of English making, but threatens to organize a hostile combination which in time may drive the non-Dutch Afrikander into the sea. He does not question the Christian virtues of the Boer, nor does he withhold his admiration for a character so plucky in battle, and so humane to prisoners. But his eyes are fixed upon the ultimate object of this war, and not merely upon the war itself. War is cruel, and no one detests it more than the Colonial Secretary, but the sacrifice of war is one which he deems now justifiable, for only through iron and blood does he hope to keep South Africa as a heritage for the English-speaking race.

The source of this war is not to be found in Blue Books or the correspondence of Dr. Leyds. It is a war generated by a long series of petty actions, each one trifling in itself, but aggregating a volume of wrong in the minds of those now fighting it out. The Boer has gone gayly into this war because he despised his enemy. I have never met the Boer who was not confident that he was a match for several Red Coats. When two people hate each other, there is yet hope of a reconciliation, but when contempt is mingled with hatred, there is nothing left but to throw off your coat and determine which can take the hardest knocks. The feeling of the average Boer toward Englishmen finds a rough parallel in the vulgar opinion entertained by the average Southern planter for the Northerner—before the war. Yankees were reputed to be mainly shop servants or mechanics—no match for gentlemen brought up to shoot and ride. The war disposed of that view, and the first reconciliation between North and South was on the field of battle where the Gray and the Blue shook hands with what there was left of themselves.

they may differ with him on other issues. I can discover very little animosity toward the individual Boer—on the contrary, the more he is understood the more respect does he command for certain virtues. Several times I had occasion to address large audiences in England—always audiences which warmly supported the war. I spoke my mind freely on such occasions; praised the good qualities of the enemy; narrated my own experiences of Boer life, and scouted the tales of interested persons who sought to inflame public opinion by spreading stories of Boer cruelty. In no instance did my language fail to receive respectful attention, though, of course, my statements must often have been unwelcome.

The Boer war I regard as a political necessity, and the mass of Englishmen support Mr. Chamberlain from a vague but very well grounded instinct that in this struggle it is not a few square miles of High Feldt that are at stake, but the future of the English race.

In 1896 the German Emperor sent a cable to Paul Krüger, which has been apologized for by a variety of noble courtiers, from Lord Lonsdale to Prince Hohenlohe. I have nothing to do with the Court view of this epoch-making document, but the view of Paul Krüger was that the German Emperor was offering him a military alliance against his enemy, Queen Victoria. During my visit to the Transvaal it was very obvious that Germans were regarded as the natural allies of the Boers, and Germans talked freely of the day when German East Africa would be incorporated with the Transvaal under the German flag and England be forced to abdicate. The vision pleased the German more than the Boer, for Oom Paul, much as he hates Queen Victoria for her domineering ways, is far from caring to come under the enlightened rule of her grandson.

Rightly or wrongly, the Englishman feels at this moment that he is spending his blood and money not in merely fighting a few thousand apostolic cowboys, but in making it clear to the Continental powers of Europe that South Africa is reserved for Anglo-Saxons, and that those who have undertaken to meddle in the affairs of that part of the world have miscalculated the capacity of the mother country to reach out for the protection of her interests.

England has learned from us the value of something in the shape of a Monroe doctrine. The Boers don't like it to-day, but they will be the most loyal supporters of this measure when this war shall have ended with mutual respect—when Boers shall have discovered that under the British flag they will enjoy a larger measure of civil liberty than was ever accorded them by Paul Krüger. Augustin Daly's Books.

By Edward A. Dithmar,
Dramatic Critic of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Sidney Lee has been scolding Englishmen for permitting copies of the Shakespeare Folios to leave the right little, tight little island. Good copies of all four of the Folios, including an unusually well-preserved one of the 1623 edition, are in the library of the late Augustin Daly, which is soon to be put under the hammer. Perhaps they will be taken back to England. There are many other treasures in that wonderfully rich collection of books, including two almost priceless Milton first editions, which many English collectors would like to have. These and some of the other volumes are sure to bring prices equal to, if not exceeding, the sums Mr. Daly paid for them; even some of the books of theatrical history and biography, though such works are in less favor in the general book market than others, may sell for large sums.

Astute collectors, though, are likely to find rare bargains in the sale of the Daly books and manuscripts. Until the catalogues are ready it will not be possible even to guess at the number of chances of bargains. The accumulation of literary treasures is so large that many books and manuscripts have been piled away waiting for their latest owner to arrange and classify them in his library and find places for them on his shelves or in his cabinets. As for the impressive collection of Grangerized books, such as Mr. Daly's copies of Cunningham's "Nell Gwynne" and Hawkins's "Life of Kean"; his own "Peg Woffington," enlarged to many volumes; his unique copies of the Boaden "Kemble" and Mr. Ireland's laborious "Records"; the ponderous volumes of records of the Fifth Avenue and Daly's Theatre, under his brilliant management; such elaborately made works of record as the veritable tome, magnificent in typography, paper, and binding, which he designed to commemorate the one hundredth performance in his playhouse of "The Taming of the Shrew," and perpetuate remembrance of the splendid banquet on the stage after that performance, when the actors in the play and their manager sat down with famous soldiers, jurists, statesmen, and artists and felicitated Dramatic Art and themselves—these and other similar books may be scattered in libraries, public and private, all over the country. Wherever they go, they are sure to be widely dispersed. Many of them will help, in their way, to keep alive the fame of the energetic and enthusiastic theatre manager, collector, and student. But his own plans and dreams of their future are now as naught.

The first library of Augustin Daly was sold at auction in 1878, as soon after the collapse of his management of the Fifth Avenue Theatre as the catalogue could be prepared and the sale properly advertised. That sale is well remembered by collectors, though it was of small importance in comparison with the book auction for which Mr. Wright is now making the catalogue, while these books are not all or nearly all of the treasures in the collection now to be sold. In the interval of twenty-one years Daly had so far lived down his early failure that he had founded a theatre famous in its time all over the world, and, out of its surplus receipts, expended a million and a half, according to the appraiser of the estate, who is a moderate and careful man, on books and pictures, Gobelin tapestries and armor, Angelica Kaufmann screens, porcelain, and carved wood, Grangerizing and inlaying, binding and decorating. That is a good deal of money for one prosperous man to handle, apart from his business, in so short a period as twenty-one years. Mr. Wright's estimate, which is certainly not far out of the way, shows how large the profits of the theatrical business may be. The dispersal of the treasures indicates, on the other hand, the terrible uncertainty of that calling.

Augustin Daly was as enthusiastic and as energetic in collecting as in making and producing plays and training young actors. The agent of his executor is finding the labor of classifying his treasures difficult, but you may be sure that Mr. Daly himself knew where to lay his hand on the smallest object. Though he enjoyed the reputation among dealers of buying much and paying liberally, yet he bought nothing that he did not want. I remember going into his private office one day and finding him, common wooden frame. It was a likeness of John Wilkes Booth, made by himself in that erratic man's early days of promise. It was authentic, there was no doubt of that, and doubtless it will bring a relatively high price in the sale, and be accounted of greater value, comparatively speaking, than the exquisite edition of Daly's "Life of Margaret Woffington," with water-color drawings on the margins by Eugene Grivas. So eccentric are the fancies of out-and-out collectors, while the rest of us, who would not give houseroom to a portrait of Wilkes Booth by a famous artist, if such existed, would surely have no sort of care for a rude pen and ink sketch made by the fellow himself.

In some sort this collection was Daly's monument. He certainly designed a few years ago to keep the purely theatrical part of it together permanently. He had ideas once of giving this to The Players, but that institution developed into a club for social relaxation, as it was bound to if it was to have a permanent establishment. The New York Library, however, would have been as worthy a recipient as could be desired for such a collection. Doubtless many of the books will find their way to its alcoves eventually. The dispersal of the books of general literature was perhaps inevitable. As for the Douai Bible, enlarged by indefatigable industry to forty-two volumes and comprising the richest collection in the world, probably, of engravings and etchings of the masterworks of Christian art and many rare documents, that was avowedly designed as a memorial of his two boys. In spite of its magnificence, it seems an almost unsalable object, and if it really must go the way of all the other books, perhaps some Catholic institution will secure it at a nominal price. That it will bring in the sale a sum approaching the $25,000 Mr. Daly is said to have expended upon it is not at all likely.

Collecting has its comic side. It easily may degenerate into a fad. Doubtless with most collectors it is nothing more. Some get together many books as others collect walking sticks and postage stamps. But though this Daly collection may have had some of the elements of comedy in its growth from time to time, it was not inspired by a fad. All its parts meant a little more, some of them a great deal more, than the mere gratification of a taste for collecting treasures. The pictures, the rare furniture, the armor, served their practical purpose, as modern if not as articles actually used in stage pictures of the epochs to which they belonged. The preservation of books and documents which would be of service in writing the history of the American stage seemed to one whose whole life and energy was given to that stage a work of prime importance. So that this collection is of vastly greater significance than any faddist's accumulation of costly oddities would be, though it contained the golden nose of Tycho Brahe and the signet ring that was stolen from King Solomon.

The tragedy of great collections impresses itself forcibly upon the mind in face of the announcement of a sale like this. For one James Lenox among collectors there are a hundred Augustin Dalys whose treasures are turned into what cash they will bring on the market, necessarily, as soon as the executors can get to work upon them. Of course, the name of Augustin Daly will last through the centuries as a collector, long after it has been fairly forgotten as a dramatist and theatre manager, because of its association with noted copies of famous books. The sale will give a new price to all four of the Shakespeare Folios which will be remembered as the Daly price. The "Paradise Lost" and the price it brings will always be borne in minds trained to consider such things.

But no stately dome will rise above these books collectively to mark their permanent abiding place and perpetuate the name of him who brought them together from the ends of the earth. Still, the stately domes themselves, the cloud-capped towers, the gorgeous palaces, are doomed to fade and dissolve. Those whose motto is "as we journey through life, let us live in a gripsack," may take what comfort they may from this. It is only the old story of mutability. But it is a great pity, nevertheless, that most of Mr. Daly's books could not have been kept together for a few brief generations as the Daly Library.

Commercial Significance of Our New Possessions.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By JOHN FOORD,
Secretary of the American Asiatic Association.

IN AN article printed in THE TIMES of Dec. 3 Mr. Barrett has set forth, with his customary directness, clearness, and force, the exceptional advantages, as one of the great distributing points of Asiatic commerce, which its geographical position confers on Manila. I shall endeavor to make plain some of the immediate opportunities which that commerce offers to the merchants and manufacturers of the United States, and the vital importance to them of seeing that they are not robbed of these opportunities by powers which seek, by diplomatic guile or military force, to mark out for themselves exclusive spheres of trade and influence in the Far East. It may be well to explain, at the outset, that the moral effect of our possession of the Philippines may prove a more powerful influence in the maintenance of equality of commercial opportunity in Eastern and Southern Asia than even the direct material advantage of establishing at Manila a great entrepôt of trade. The rapidly growing imports of American cotton goods into China enter, almost solely, by the Port of Shanghai, and most of them are carried by way of Suez. Thanks to the operation of the shipping conference system on freights between England and Eastern Asiatic ports, our exports have had the advantage of rates between New York and Shanghai at about half the amount of those established between Liverpool and Shanghai. Even at the present reduced interval between the two rates there is a saving, amounting to a perceptible profit, on shipments from this side. About 90 per cent. of these receipts of American cotton cloth at Shanghai are reshipped to the three northern treaty ports of Chefoo, Tientsin, and Newchwang. As a factor in the regulation of this commerce Manila has no well-defined place. It is more likely that we shall see steamers sailing from our Pacific ports, or from ports on the Gulf after an interoceanic canal is opened, trading direct to the minor ports of North China, than that the trade of these ports should be diverted over a long Southern route by way of Manila. But a great commercial nation in possession of Manila is, nevertheless, far more capable of guaranteeing the integrity of its trade with North China, than if its nearest port were 4,500 miles away. Proof of that fact has already been furnished in the new-found deference which European powers are showing to the representations of this Government, in regard to the respect which it proposes to exact for its treaty rights throughout the whole of the Chinese Empire.

The importance of our trade in cotton textiles with North China is only beginning to be generally recognized. As recently as 1895 our whole exports of cotton cloth to China were only 35,000,000 yards. This was below the average of previous years, but up to that time the trade showed no evidence of a capacity for rapid expansion. In the fiscal year 1896 its volume increased to 72,000,000 yards. In 1897 it was 140,000,000 yards, declining in 1898, owing to the financial disturbance created by the war with Japan, to 115,000,000 yards. In the last fiscal year it resumed its upward course, showing a total of 221,000,000 yards, or a gain of 70 per cent. on the amount of the previous year. Tested either by the returns of our own Bureau of Statistics or the returns of the Imperial Maritime Customs of China it is still advancing. According to the latter authority the imports of American cotton goods into Shanghai from Jan. 1 to Sept. 30, 1899, was 182,875,000 yards, against 112,480,000 yards for the corresponding period of 1898. Here was an increase for the first nine months of the calendar year of 62½ per cent., an increase large enough to make the present volume of our imports of cotton textiles into China equal to 50 per cent. of the imports of English cotton goods, against only 32 per cent. a year ago. As we export plain cottons only to China, and no dyed, colored, or printed goods, American imports compare with those of the same character from England in the ratio of 61 per cent., against 37 per cent. at the same time last year.

In the estimation of every competent observer, we have merely scratched the surface of this trade. There can be no question about the American product being fitted to displace the cloth woven by hand in the interior of China, as it has been shown to be near the seaboard. The complaisance with which Great Britain and the United States have allowed the transit pass privilege, guaranteed in their treaties, to be violated at every likin station which the bale of cotton cloth has to pass on its way up the great rivers, and the successive "squeezes" to which its contents are subjected before they are allowed to reach the consumer, double the price of the fabric in the course of a transit no longer than that between our Eastern cotton mills and the buyer in the Mississippi Valley. Under such conditions, the marvel is that the foreign import trade increases at all. How insignificant it is, compared with the magnitude of the simplest wants of the 350,000,000 of people in China, may be inferred from the fact that if we could supply every man, woman, and child in the empire with only five yards of cotton cloth a year we should have an outlet in that market for 1,750,000,000 yards. Estimating the average weight of this cloth at 3½ yards to the pound, and adding 15 per cent. for waste, we should have the equivalent in such a manufactured product of 1,150,000 bales of raw cotton, or 31½ per cent. of the whole amount taken by the mills of the country for consumption last year. The consumption of cotton textiles in the Chinese market are thus virtually boundless. Of the sheetings, drills, and jeans already exported there at least 75 per cent. are the product of the mills of the South. In these heavy fabrics, ranging from 2.85 to 3.25 yards per pound, American makes have already displaced the English, Dutch, and Indian cloth. It remains for our mills to demonstrate a similar superiority in quality, coupled with a competing level in price, over their competitors in the lighter staples, known as shirtings and T-cloths. That process has already begun and is likely to go far, for the simple reason that the manufacture of cotton in the place where it is grown has been shown to be a highly profitable form of enterprise. With abundance of easily available water power readily convertible into electricity, docile and abundant labor, the most highly improved machinery, and raw material at their very doors, the mills of the South stand to-day in the front of the world's competition for the manufacture of plain cottons. It has been well remarked by Mr. D. A. Tompkins that if we are to hold the Chinese market there are not enough mills in the South, but that if we are to lose it there are already too many. Satisfactory as are the present requirements of the home market, nothing but the Chinese demand stands in the way of either a restriction of production or a ruinous competition between New England and the South. There are no international politics to-day which do not turn on questions of trade, and, as Mr. Barrett shows, our hold on the markets of Eastern Asia must depend very largely on the maintenance of the position marked out for us as the paramount power of the Pacific. Manila is destined to be the key of that position, with Guam and Hawaii as links between it and the American Continent. Here is the very kernel of the policy of expansion, which concerns the voters of the South to a degree perhaps greater than those of any other part of the country. If, as Mr. Tompkins argues, the difference between 10,000,000 bales sold as cotton and 10,000,000 bales sold as cloth is equal to $600,000,000, there is surely an enormous possibility of wealth for the cotton States in finding the opportunity to furnish the material to clothe the 500,000,000 of people who inhabit the Asiatic countries bordering on the Pacific Ocean.

Of only less consequence, as an element in our Asiatic trade, is the rapidly developing export of flour. In 1898 Honkgong took 939,053 barrels; last fiscal year it took 1,221,314 barrels. The Japanese purchases increased from 161,654 barrels in 1898 to 296,029 in 1899. For "other Asia and Oceania" the exports were 139,756 barrels, against 249,519 barrels in 1899. That is to say, including 28,528 barrels sent last year to minor Chinese ports, against 19,600 barrels in the year preceding, our Asiatic exports of flour amounted last year to 1,725,388 barrels, against 1,240,563 barrels in 1898. Thus, while the total increase on our exports of flour to all countries between 1898 and 1899 amounted to 20 per cent., the exports to Asiatic countries increased 39 per cent. If the people of China could be educated into the use of cornmeal, and our Consul at Amoy and others believe they may, the opening for the consumption of the one cereal in whose growth we have an unchallenged supremacy is of bewildering proportions.

All this leaves untouched the controlling fact that China is waiting to be equipped with the appliances which this century has made essential adjuncts of civilization. A few hundred miles of railroad, the beginning of a telegraph system, and here and there a steamship on her great rivers represent about all that the Chinese know of the characteristic triumphs of the nineteenth century. An insignificant fraction of the vast coal deposits of the empire has been touched; there are no iron or steel works of any but the most modest proportions; outside of the foreign settlement at Shanghai there are no street cars and no electric lighting. It is ridiculous to assume that a progressive China would buy less from abroad than she does to-day, when a progressive Japan quintupled its imports in ten years, and bought from the United States in 1898 merchandise valued at 40,000,000 yen, against 5,600,000 yen in 1888. Wealth begets wealth, and with it comes the ability to purchase, the desire never being absent in China any more than in the West. The gain of only 1 cent a day in the purchasing power of every inhabitant of China would mean an addition to the fund that goes to support the world's trade equal to $1,277,500,000 a year. Figures like these help to bring home the tremendous significance of our new possessions in the Pacific, and to illustrate the uses which they may be made to subserve.

The Army Ration.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEW YORK TIMES.

Articles have appeared recently in the public press criticising the army ration, denouncing its unsuitability for troops in a tropical climate, and urging a radical change in its character. These articles are based on the elementary propositions that, while fatty foods are good where a high development of animal heat is required, they are harmful in a climate where there is no call on the system for a large heat production. Every reader is willing to grant these propositions. They are simple, and can be verified every Summer and Winter by the inhabitants of the north temperate zone. There are twelve ounces of bacon in the army ration, and this is no doubt an excess of fat for a dietary changed. The critics who see so clearly that the ration should be altered to suit their views of what is right and proper to be eaten in tropical climates, and who are astounded at the dullness of those army officials who think it wise to be slow in doing anything of this kind, do not appear to know that the army ration is run on a broader gauge than the elementary propositions which form the basis of their argument.

There is in the army of the United States a considerable difference between the ration of the soldier and the diet of the soldier. The critics of the army ration do not understand this. The ration is the allowance for subsistence of one person for one day. The diet is what is actually prepared in the kitchen for consumption by the soldier day by day. The ration is prescribed by law, and consists of the meat, the bread, the vegetables, the fruit, the coffee, and the sugar, the seasoning, and the soap and candle components.

The meat component does not consist of fat pork or bacon, as those who know nothing of the domestic economy of army kitchens appear to believe. On the contrary, there is some variety in the meat component. It consists of 20 ounces of fresh beef, or 20 ounces of mutton when the cost does not exceed that of beef, or 12 ounces of pork, or 12 ounces of bacon, or 22 ounces of salt beef, or 14 ounces of dried fish, or 18 ounces of pickled fish, or 20 ounces of canned salmon, or 18 ounces of fresh fish.

The bread component consists of 18 ounces of flour, with baking powder when the men have to bake their own bread, or 18 ounces of soft bread, or 16 ounces of hard bread, or 20 ounces of cornmeal.

The vegetable components consist of 2 2-5 ounces of beans, or 2 2-5 ounces of peas, or 1 3-5 ounces of rice, or 1 3-5 ounces of hominy and 16 ounces of potatoes, or 12 4-5 ounces of potatoes and 3 1-5 ounces of onions, or 11 1-5 ounces of potatoes and 4 4-5 ounces of canned tomatoes, or 4 4-5 ounces of other fresh vegetables, not canned, when they can be obtained in the vicinity or transported in a wholesome condition from a distance.

The fruit component consists of 2 ounces of dried fruit, such as prunes, peaches, or apples. The other components consist of coffee green, or coffee roasted, or tea, green or black, and sugar, or molasses or cane syrup, vinegar, salt, and black pepper, and to these are added the soap and candle components.

The slightest knowledge of practical cookery will enable any one who reads what I have just written to form an idea of what may be called the flexibility of the army ration. The soldier in the tropics is not called upon to eat his 12 ounces of bacon or go hungry. That "or" is not to be found in the regulation statement of the meat component of the ration, although there are more than half a dozen other important "ors" in it. And there is variety also in all the other constituents except the soap and candle components.

If the scientist will calculate the elementary constitution of any one of the various diets which may be formed from the flexibility of the army ration, he will find that there is a sufficiency of nitrogen and carbon in each to support the system of the soldier under the heaviest strain of work and exposure. If the proximate principles be calculated, it will be found that many variations may be made in the relative proportions of proteids, hydro-carbons and carbohydrates. But, more than all this, we know that the soldiers of the United States have never gone hungry on their full ration.

Granted, then, that the ration suffices to sustain the system in the cold of a Montana blizzard, will any one suggest its insufficiency for nutritive purposes where there is little call for physiologic fuel to keep up the animal heat? "No; but," says the critic, for whose information I am writing "there is too much of the hydro-carbons, too much bacon in the ration, to make it a suitable ration for tropical climates." Too much bacon! Too much candle! There is a candle component in the ration, but the soldier is not called upon to eat it; nor is he required to eat the bacon if he does not desire to do so.

This leads me to refer to the elasticity of the ration. Its flexibility has already been referred to; but its elasticity also is wonderful. It is so elastic that the soldier may verily eat his candles if he does not require them for other purposes. He may leave the candles in the hands of the Subsistence Department, and if their money value will pay for a can of peaches, or a pound of rice, or so much of any other of a long list of articles kept for sale by the subsistence officers, he can eat his candle component in the form of peaches or rice, or any of the other purchasable things. So with the bacon. He is no more required to eat that because it is part of the ration than he is required to eat the candles, but he may transform it into some other article of food which he likes better, or which is better for him under the climatic conditions which affect him at the time. So, indeed, with all the other components of the ration, excepting only the fresh vegetables, fresh bread, baking powder, and dried fruit. Even the fresh beef component may be reduced in quantity and the money value of the quantity not issued for use may be drawn in other articles on sale.

There is even a greater elasticity than this to the ration, for the money credit for components not drawn and used may be applied to the purchase of articles from outside sources—articles not kept for sale by the Subsistence Department. Thus, probably in every company and post mess hall in the United States on Thursday, Nov. 30, 1899, there was turkey with cranberry sauce on the table, representing so much bacon and other articles of the formal ration not drawn in kind and used, but left in the hands of the Subsistence Department and placed as a cash credit for the payment of turkeys and cranberry sauce or of any other purchases to vary the diet of the soldier. If at any of the posts they did not have turkey and cranberry sauce on that day, it was because these things were impossible there, but they no doubt had an excellent dinner, all the same.

Under the present law and regulations as to the ration, the soldier can have any variation of his diet within certain money value limits which his officers consider necessary for his well-being. His ration is fixed by law, and is a most liberal one; but his dietary depends upon the intelligent supervision of company officers and the ability of the company cooks. I have stated the law and regulations concerning the ration and its flexibility and elasticity, and the Subsistence Department may be depended upon to provide the articles necessary to vary the diet. If a change in the dietary is advisable, it lies with the company commanders to carry it into effect. If the change is desirable on medical grounds, medical officers should communicate their views to these responsible officers, and the change can be effected without difficulty. There is no need to talk about changing the ration to effect a change in the dietary.

But it may be said why not go a step further and reduce the ration to simpler terms? Why not make it a money value instead of so much of this, that, and the other component? A money value to be of equal value at all military stations, would have to be a different value at every station. A dollar is worth nothing from the point of view of the ration if there is not a bite of anything within its purchasing radius, but to the stomach of a hungry soldier twenty ounces of fresh beef, twelve ounces of bacon, &c., have a fixed value, and when the Subsistence Department is charged with providing these articles the soldier will fare much better than if the department had only to provide him with so many cents a day for his food.

The United States Army ration is the most liberal ration in the world. It is the best ration for the far northwest of this continent, whence come the sub-zero cold waves to sweep over the country from the upper strata of the atmosphere, and it is the best for the tropics when intelligently utilized. It is the product of the experience of several generations of army officers, and it is the part of wisdom to be slow in urging alterations at the suggestion of people who know that an excess of fatty food is not suitable for a dietary in the tropics and who have just discovered that there are twelve ounces of bacon in the soldiers' ration.

But the best dietary for the tropics is a wholly different subject from the ration, and we will await with interest the publication of the observations of our officers, line and medical, on the modifications which appear to them to be judicious for Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines.

What the New Building Code Actually Is.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES
By H. W. DESMOND,
Editor of the Real Estate Record and Guide.

READERS of THE NEW YORK TIMES cannot have forgotten the slow and infelicitous passage this Fall of the new Building Code through the Municipal Assembly. No other act of that newly established legislative body has been attended by anything like as much publicity and criticism, yet, as we all know, the ordinance was passed, and on Dec. 28 it will take effect.

The matter, however, is not disposed of. A prophet would risk little of any reputation he might have were he to forecast that this controversy, which at first was a desultory affair of small critics and personal views, will be reopened in Albany early next year, probably by the Governor, as a political fight of some magnitude, in which the people of New York City will be more deeply concerned than they imagine at present.

It was only the other day, due to the noise made about it in the press, that the ordinary citizen really discovered the Building Code. Previously the layman knew of it, if at all, only by repute darkly, as a body of technical regulations of interest to architects and builders, very much as the Pharmacopoeia is to doctors. It was not until the newspapers took it up and it threatened to add a lively and exciting element to the scheme of municipal affairs, that his attention was aroused.

It is a pity that his first serious introduction to the matter was so entirely controversial. Some technical knowledge was necessary to understand the points at issue, and the danger is that the dispute simply resulted in throwing general discredit on an ordinance that no one, not even the most hostile critic, generally discredits, which represents a generation of constructive effort, and is to-day one of the most important pieces of legislation in force in this State. And, lest this latter statement should strike the unwary as somewhat exaggerated, it may be well at once to call to mind that, on the basis of this year's statistics, the Building Code affects nearly $200,000,000 of building operations—a greater amount of building, by the way, than exists in any dozen cities in the country combined—the vastly greater sum representing the capital and labor concerned in these operations; the enormous real estate interests which any building regulation touches in one way and another, and, of course, the health, safety, and comfort of the millions that people this city.

The purpose of this paper is not to defend the new code, but to put the layman in possession of a few facts necessary to a clear understanding of a controversy which may shortly engage public attention again.

The first fact that we must take hold of firmly is that the Building Code, the new one, is essentially no new thing. It is not the work of a day or of any political party. It is simply the last of a number of efforts extending over the past forty years. It represents a long series of experiments, tentatively taken at first, then more boldly pushed out into practice. The general result, admitted by every one, is that each step taken has improved—decidedly improved—the character of building in New York City. The substance of the law to-day is conceded to be superior to that of any other similar law in force in any other city in the world. Yet many persons might well have imagined from the noisy talk this Fall that the new code was something in a way revolutionary, a body of new iniquitous regulations thrust upon the city in thorough Draconian fashion. Nothing of the sort is the case. The new code is substantially the building law of 1892, under which we have all lived and under which architects and builders have worked peaceably and successfully for years. It differs from the law of 1892 much less than that law differed from the one preceding it. No one heard anything of the older law; it was neither famous nor infamous, and the public attention would have been as little involved in the present code as it was in the law of 1852, or 1865, or 1867, or 1882, had it been the result of legislation done in Albany, instead of in New York City. It took the building law out of the hands of Albany politicians, made it a home-rule affair, and confided its future destiny to the local Municipal Assembly. In the past the sound of all controversy has been deadened by the distance between the metropolis and the State Capitol. This time the noise was made "in the street," and every one heard it.

Moreover, as the code is essentially no new thing, neither are the objections to it—if we take them in a general sense. They have been heard time and time again. They will never cease; in some degree they can never cease until theory and practice are one. Some of them, at least, arise from the fundamental nature of a building law.

The purpose of a building law is to establish a set of regulations that shall insure safe construction and sanitary buildings. How can this end be attained? There are only two methods (or a combination of both) open for adoption. We can require in the construction of buildings the use of specific materials and specific processes in a specific manner—that is, make a set of general specifications to cover all building operations—or, commit the problem to the authority and discretion of certain officials, leaving it to them to see that the intent of the law is fulfilled. Specifications or superintendence: there lies the choice. Both of these courses are beset with difficulties and dangers that cannot be avoided entirely. Criticism can meet the choice of either.

Let us see this matter clearly. The architect in erecting a building for his client virtually has to face this problem. For every structure that he puts up he formulates his own building law in the shape of specifications for the control of contractors and others. But his task is comparatively easy. He requires, for instance, a fireproof building. He can select the particular system of fireproofing that, in his judgment, is the best in the market at the moment, or the one that conforms best to his requirements. He does not subject himself in this way to the charge of bias or favoritism. If he wants a fireproof building, he cannot do anything else but define what he means by "fireproof" in the terms of certain materials; indeed, in practice, he finds it necessary to go further and demand a specific make of goods. To-morrow, in the case of another building, he can adopt other materials or any new process, but to-day he must select from what the market offers.

Now, in framing the fire-proof sections of a building law, the Commissioners, legislators, or whoever else they may be, have before them very much the same problem as the architect. To secure the best results they ought to follow pretty closely the same course, and specifically command the use of particular materials in a particular way. But to do this would certainly favor certain contractors, and would exclude the use of new inventions and new materials. The difficulty must be obvious to every one. A building law needs to be, from one point of view, rigid; from another, flexible. It should state specifically and concretely how buildings must be put together and of what. At the same time it must not favor any particular set of contractors or building-material men, and must permit at any moment the use of any adequate novelty. It is very doubtful whether the ingenuity of way to bou and commit the building law, as a set of eral directions, to the discretion and auth rity of some officials.

Anothe ever-present difficulty for the framers a building code lies in the danger of es ablishing too high and too costly a standa d of building. Theoretically, it would b well for every building to be absolutely reproof, but a provision of this kind wo d in practice produce a great many ev by disturbing a large amount of capital, reasing rents, curtailing, at least for a tim a vast amount of building operations. It is in matters of sanitation, and so forth. It is very easy to carry theory too far, d in solving one difficulty create others.

Now, keeping these points in mind we can more intelligently approach the criticisms that have been made upon the new code. Virtually they are three, and relate to the discretionary power conferred upon the Commissioner of Buildings, the tenement house requirements, and the supposed favoritism shown for certain contractors. The first and the third run together. As we have just seen if we are to have a building law at all, it must deal in concrete terms with construction or delegate authority to somebody. Consequently, these objections are in a general sense objections against any building law. It is not enough to say that every building shall be "safe" or "sanitary" or "fireproof." To stop there would be like passing a law that people shall be "good." A "safe" building requires the use of masonry of a certain kind, of iron or steel, all capable of supporting definite loads. "Fireproofing" necessitates the employment of terra cotta blocks or concrete arches, or something of the sort. And all these articles are bound up with the interests of certain manufacturers and dealers. It is almost impossible to specify or select a material, except so far as the commonest are concerned, without in some degree aiding or favoring some firm or firms. Some judgment must be exercised, and the reader can understand that in a matter so complex as building, much of it still an innovation, and with thousands of firms concerned, it is almost as difficult to meet all opinions and all interests and exclude criticism, as it would be to prescribe a course of treatment that would be indorsed by the entire medical profession. Considering the situation our building laws have been remarkably free from serious mistakes. They have been upon the whole notably impartial. They have contained remarkably little of anything that could be ascribed to politics or to favoritism. And this is all the more noteworthy when we remember that there is scarcely an architect's office in this city that has not been at some time and in some way maligned by disappointed contractors. And it was in order to leave as many doors open as possible for newcomers, and to keep the building law fluid and adaptable to special conditions and peculiar positions that could not be foreseen that the commission purposely delegated considerable discretionary power to the Commissioner of Buildings.

But, remember, in all this there is no novelty. The Building Department has always possessed a large measure of discretion, and the new code delegates less power to the Commissioner of Buildings than was formerly possessed by the Superintendent of Buildings. It is safe to say that a majority of the people who are directly interested in building operations were surprised at the agitation that has arisen over this new code. What is it all about? Why this one in particular? The Dutch have taken Holland. Why get excited about it?

As to the tenement house requirements. The criticism of the code on this score is the special product of the Charity Organization Society. The sentiments and purposes of that society are philanthropic, and we all know how difficult it is at all times and under all circumstances to induce people who have "a mission" to give proper room to the affairs of life for the play of what the business man terms "practical conditions." The Charity Organization Society has constructed for themselves an ideal tenement house somewhere where there is no need to bother about capital charges, rents, wages, or social and personal conditions. Thus, by avoiding a score of deep-seated real perplexities which are the very basis of the tenement house problem in New York City, they have formulated for themselves a "programme." This they placed before the Building Code Commission, ignoring the fact that the tenement house law was incorporated in the charter, and that, consequently, the proper place for a large part of their propositions was Albany. They required an amendment to the charter. Moreover, they failed to recognize that a building code cannot be made the ten commandments of an ideal. It cannot aim to set up the maximum of good construction and planning, but an irreducible minimum, leaving it to citizens to build as much better than the standard established as they will, but prohibiting them from passing below it. A great deal of the construction in this city is superior to the code. Conditions permit it, otherwise the work would not be done. It pays. And if it pays in the case of office buildings, stores, and residences, why not in the case of tenement houses? The code doesn't obstruct the way. But the Charity Organization Society persistently refuses to face the situation from this

To the Holders of the First Mortgage Four Per Cent. Gold Bonds
OF THE PITTSBURGH & WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY
(DATED JULY 1, 1887):
Referring to our notice of December 14, 1898, we have to announce that holders of more than 80 per cent. in amount of the First Mortgage Four Per Cent. Gold Bonds of the Pittsburgh and Western Railway Company have deposited these bonds with us in accordance with the terms of said notice.
We have further to announce that we have made arrangements with the Reorganization Managers of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company whereby, in case they issue any Plan of Reorganization of the Pittsburgh and Western Railway Company prior to December 14, 1899, they undertake to give all our depositors whose bonds shall not have been sold to them for cash, as stated in the next paragraph, an option for at least thirty days after such Plan is issued, to take par and interest in cash, or to have their bonds included in the Plan on the basis of new securities. They also agree that at the expiration of such option they will purchase from us for cash at par and accrued interest up to the time of delivery all bonds held by us in respect of which the option to take new securities shall not have been exercised, we agreeing to sell them such bonds. If no Plan shall have been issued by that date, the foregoing arrangements will continue in force thereafter until said Reorganization Managers terminate the same by notice to us.
If any holder of our receipts or certificates, rather than await such Plan, desires and shall elect to sell his bonds for cash, (thereby losing his right of election to take either cash or new securities after issuance of the Plan,) said Reorganization Managers further agree that, at any time prior to December 14, 1899, (and also thereafter until notice from them to us,) such holder may present his receipt or certificate at our office for proper annotation of such election thereon, and that, at the expiration of thirty days from the date of such annotation, he shall receive par and accrued interest in cash therefor at our office upon surrender of his receipt or certificate properly indorsed.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Wall Street is listening to the echoes of President McKinley's observations on trusts. They do not sound like whispers.

The stock market closes for the week with a shrinkage in all the industrial stock issues. Some declines are severe. Tens on tens of millions of dollars of market value have disappeared. Other influences have contributed to market disquietude, but no cause has been more effective—none more insisted upon by bear speculators, at least—than the utterances of the Presidential message.

At the start Wall Street was inclined to make merry over Mr. McKinley's declaration of an anti-trust attitude, jocularity even suggesting that Senator Hanna had intruded a jest into the message. But a graver view seems to have developed as industrial stock quotations have sagged, and a notion on the Stock Exchange now is that, whether in sincerity or otherwise, the Administration is committed to an issue whose support must exert, for a time at least, disturbing effects upon industrial securities generally. This notion ignores the matter of intrinsic value altogether, puts wholly aside extraordinary earnings which most of the newly organized industrial properties are piling up, and the certainty of big dividends which they will have available if permitted to pursue incorporation purposes. Litigation against such properties—such is the bear insistence—can now depend upon the support of the National Government, and speculating Wall Street prophets are forecasting a quick change in attitude upon the part of the Attorney General of the United States, who hitherto has been a serious disappointment to speculators who would have the security market disturbed. The finding of the United States Supreme Court in the recently determined Addyston pipe case is coincidently made much of, and holdings in that decision are quoted as sufficient to base suits upon against the Sugar Trust and other conspicuous properties. It is even intimated in Wall Street that complaint as to the Sugar Trust is already being prepared.

The conspicuousness of Sugar Trust shares in a nervous market seems always to be natural. As the oldest and biggest of the trusts whose securities are active on the Stock Exchange, Sugar Trust's very prominence and the high price of its stock seem to stand as a continual challenge. Thus, when the past week's stock market began to show raggedness, Sugar Trust stock was forthwith under attack—a drop of over a dozen points on Friday afternoon and Saturday morning (16 points during the week)—showing with what vigor and success an adverse campaign against it can sometimes proceed.

Tobacco Trust scored almost as heavy a decline as that of Sugar Trust, while other industrial issues dropped an average of half a dozen points. One trouble, and a very grave trouble, with such properties is that they are conducted as blind pools. Their charters may call them companies, their intentions and their actual practices may be wholly legitimate, there may be honesty in the management and high-grade capacity there; but in so far as they are blind pools they are investment traps. No new doctrine is this, but the oldness of it detracts not a whit from the certainty of it. It is just as was pointed out by Bourke Cockran before the recent trust conference at Chicago—"trusts," legal or not, are bound to be hurtful as long as their affairs are wrapped in mystery. And this is true of any corporation having public relationships. That there should be fascination for either speculator or investor in blind pools reflects curious phases in the Wall Street disposition.

Occasionally, when "insiders" fall out, suggestive glimpses of trust affairs are provided. This was sensationally so earlier this year in Tobacco Trust snarls, and now in Sugar Trust somewhat the same thing seems coming to pass. Millionaire co-Directors have fallen out, the Sugar Trust loses one of the most important of its executives, and not that alone—for the seceding Trustee in the Sugar Trust instance has millions wherewith he can establish powerful competition—Wall Street even hearing that he is to become the head of a new big opposition trust solidifying and enlarging what are now known as "independent" interests.

Mr. Russell Sage has added to security market interests during the week by passing the dividend on his Standard Gas Company's stock. Incidentally this very live old gentleman has delivered himself of a few precepts as to common sense in corporation management. Mr. Sage says that New York gas companies are not earning dividends, and therefore should not pay them. The propriety of this view might be supplemented by warranted comment touching the sense and safety of people who buy "securities" whose dividends are unearned. It may be that buyers cannot always be fully advised, but such excuse is no defense—for anything like prudent consideration gets always back to the vital fact that the "investor" who pays for anything he cannot know all about, is simply a gambler—just a simple gambler.

Healthful signs may be found in the way in which the standard railroad list has stood the shock of liquidation in the industrial stocks. Final changes for the week show barely a dozen railroad stocks that have declined as much as 3 per cent., and the fiercest assaults in the excited market of yesterday seemed to force relatively slight liquidation.

Yet, as denoting nervousness in the general market, curious developments were presented in some of the highest grade railroad stocks. Northwest and Omaha, for example, were put on an increased dividend basis, and that improvement was the signal for an immediate drop in quotations. Still, the record of the general railway list—an average decline of less than a point for the week—cannot be regarded as dispiriting.

Business conditions continue excellent. Trade recessions do not show anywhere. No fair observer can find any warrant for doubt of National prosperity.

Money market conditions are uncertain. Bear speculators describe the situation as threatening. Conservative bankers are not of that opinion. Advances in interest rates abroad do exert influence here, and forecasts of gold exports get some Wall Street attention; but the movement of gold is wholly problematic, and any prophecy concerning it is pretense. No man of information doubts that we can spare the yellow metal in large volume without danger, without embarrassment, without inconvenience—except such inconvenience or embarrassment or danger as Wall Street itself may fabricate.

THE FINANCIAL COMMUNITY AND THE REFUNDING SCHEME.

[From a Special Contributor.]

While the financial community of this city seems to be quite unanimous in regard to the importance of declaring the gold standard and providing an absolute safeguard for the reserve fund for the redemption of Government and Treasury notes, and is substantially agreed as to the desirability of the provision for a freer issue of bank notes contained in the House Currency bill, it is considerably divided in opinion over the scheme of the Senate bill for refunding at 2 per cent. the 3, 4, and 5 per cent. bonds which become payable between now and August, 1908. In a general way, it is said that if the Government can save some millions of dollars in interest by exchanging a 2 per cent. thirty-year bond for these outstanding obligations at "their present worth to yield an income of 2¾ per cent. per annum," it looks businesslike to do it; but there are other considerations besides this immediate saving, and there is doubt whether the scheme will work.

In the present state of the money market and the attractiveness of other investments, it is doubtful if a 2 per cent. loan would float on its merits; and when it comes to displacing 3, 4, and 5 per cents., even with only from four to eight years to run, it seems still more doubtful. There are now outstanding about $97,000,000 of the 5 per cents. payable Feb. 1, 1904; $353,250,000 of the 4 per cents., July 1, 1907, and $198,675,000 of the 3 per cents., Aug. 1, 1908, or a little less than $650,000,000 in the three issues, which is considerably more than four-fifths of the interest-bearing debt. It is likely that them could all be extended at 2 per cent. after those dates, and continue payable at the option of the Government. Just how these bonds are now distributed cannot be ascertained, but at the end of last year over $190,000,000 of them were on deposit to secure bank circulation, of which about $140,000,000 were 4s of 1907. At the same time, National banks had about $84,000,000 of United States bonds on deposit with the Treasury to secure Government deposits of money intrusted to them, and they owned some $30,000,000 more of these securities. The savings banks of the country held about $140,000,000 of them, and loan and trust companies, State banks, &c., $40,000,000. This takes no account of the deficiency in the statistics gathered by the Controller of the Currency or the amounts held by insurance companies, foreign corporations, private trustees, &c. The belief is that the bulk of these bonds are so held that the present income from them will not be surrendered for the smaller income proposed, even with the extended duration to thirty years.

But it is thought likely that the new bond would be taken to a considerable extent by the banks and deposited as security for circulation, under the provisions of the Senate bill; and it looks to some as though that was the main object of the scheme. Even under the law as it is, the bulk of the $25,000,000 or so of outstanding bonds continued at 2 per cent., and payable at the option of the Government, are on deposit to secure bank circulation. The bill would put a pressure upon the banks to induce the change, because the reduction of the tax upon circulation from 1 per cent. to one-half of 1 per cent. per annum would apply only to the "average amount of such of its circulating notes as are based upon the deposit of the said 2 per cent. bonds." This difference in the tax, coupled with the long term of the new bonds, might produce a general exchange by the banks of their old bond security for new. Apart from any immediate financial advantage, they might be impelled thereto by the surety of a long extension of their power to issue notes secured by deposit of Government bonds on easier terms than heretofore. To some this is an objection to the scheme, inasmuch as it seems to contemplate a perpetuation of the Government debt for the purpose of affording security for bank issues, while they would prefer to see the adoption of a system with a different kind of security and the rapid extinction of the debt.

Among the opinions advanced to explain the object of the Senate committee in including this refunding scheme in the Currency bill is one to the effect that it was intended to disarm hostility to the provisions for the gold standard and a completely guarded redemption fund. In the West and South, it is said, there is a general notion that the bondholders are largely the "money sharks" of Wall Street rather than the fiduciary institutions which hold the funds of people of small means, and if the income from Government bonds appears to be cut down about one-half it will be taken as some compensation for the maintenance of the standard which these same deluded people have been told is for the advantage of the money sharks and bondholders.

There is a general state of doubt as to the effect of giving the Secretary of the Treasury authority for carrying out this refunding scheme, for that is all that the Senate bill does, and much difference of opinion as to the advisability of doing it. For this very reason, embodying these provisions in the Currency bill is generally deprecated as calculated to foment dissension, produce delay, and intensify opposition, and thereby to imperil the accomplishment of the all-important object of making the basis of our whole currency system sound and immovable.

THE BANK STATEMENT.

The bank statement issued yesterday just before the close of business was much more favorable than had been predicted by the bears, or than had been hoped for even by some gentlemen who for the most part are inclined to be optimistic.

Instead of a much talked-of material decline in the surplus reserves of something like four or five millions of dollars, the decline, as a matter of fact, was $1,677,175, leaving the comfortable working margin in the surplus reserve fund of $6,850,525. This small decline of yesterday is all the more remarkable in the fact that, contrary to a quite general idea, there was no appreciable contraction of loans, the decrease being only $365,200. Deposits decreased $3,902,500, specie $1,245,400, and legal tenders $1,325,400.

JOHN A. STEWART'S VIEWS.

Notwithstanding the activity of the stock market yesterday, call money rates showed no disposition toward any serious advance, the highest figure being 6 per cent., while as low as 2 per cent. was at one time recorded.

Speaking of the money situation President John A. Stewart of the United States Trust Company says:

"I do not think it reasonable to expect any low rate here for money for some time to come—and by low I mean below 5 or 6 per cent. I think a good, firm market will prevail for some weeks to come, but I do not believe that we shall have any excessively high rates. The truth is that recent high rates were in Wall Street only, among speculators whose security was not stable or certain. Sound business men had no difficulty in getting all the money they wanted at 5 and 6 per cent.

"As to the Bank of England's discount rate, I would not be surprised if the bank further advanced its rate; and if it does of course that will have an effect here. Needless to say, in order to prevent gold exports it will be necessary to keep the rates firm here. Once, however, good news comes from South Africa, and it shall appear that the supply of gold there will soon again be available, the London money market will ease off, and ours will naturally ease with it. But until then we need not hope to have money other than at firm rates. It should be remembered that a good demand for money means active business."

IMPORTANT CONFERENCES.

President John W. Gates of the American Steel and Wire Company, President Guthrie of the American Steel Hoop, and the official heads of the National Steel, American Tin Plate, and other of the iron and steel manufacturing companies are to be in the city this week, and conferences which may signify important developments in the affairs of the several companies are to be held.

Incidental to this coming conference the Street regards as of some significance the announcement from Pittsburg that the National Steel Company has bought 3,000 acres of coal land there and will hereafter furnish its own coal. At the same time it is stated that the Illinois Steel Company, one of the component companies in the Federal Steel group, has planned improvements in its Milwaukee mill at a cost of $1,000,000. It is said eight new mills are to be erected.

From Philadelphia it was yesterday announced that the Pennsylvania Steel Company has declared a dividend of 1% per cent. on its preferred stocks.

GOOD WESTERN BUSINESS.

Discussing business conditions, C. S. Gleed, of Topeka, Kan., a Director of the Atchison, which last week started the ball rolling in the way of increased dividends on the part of railroad companies, says:

"General business in the West continues in an extraordinarily active and prosperous condition. Crops are moving, but, of course, corn goes much more slowly than wheat. The West is using a very considerable sum of money at present, due to the pressing demands of business enterprises.

"The railroads are keeping on in the now regular way—saving lots to do and getting good profits as a result. Our recent increased dividend was declared out of earnings—and this although we have spent and are spending much money for betterments and improvements."

ONE SIDE OF PROSPERITY.

Hector Mackenzie of Montreal, Vice President of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, takes a cheerful view of the commercial and financial conditions both in this country and in Canada. He says:

"In Canada we are enjoying a period of great prosperity, reflecting the good times in this country. As a matter of fact, I have always noticed that if the people of the United States are prosperous, it follows as what would seem to be a logical and natural consequence that in Canada we also are prosperous.

"That business in the United States is exceptionally active is reflected in the increased business of our branch bank in New York City, the demands on which have been much greater than for a long time past. In fact, as I understand it, there is a great demand for money all over the country on the part of legitimate business interests—a very substantial prosperity."

HEAVY ORE SHIPMENTS.

G. G. Hartley of Duluth, one of the representative business men of the West, says:

"Business better than I have known it in years. As one example of this, I may say that though they have been shipping ore from Lake Superior for the last fifty years, they will this year ship more than they have done since 1885.

"Times, indeed, could not be much better. In the West Crops generally are good; the lumber business is in a healthful state; the iron industry is active, the demand exceeding the supply, and the railroads are earning money, and the Money is generally plentiful, and the Western banks are lending a good deal to the East.

"If the Republican Party passes a good sound-money bill—and I have no doubt it will, as I talked with the President and the Speaker only the other day—it will add to an already astonishingly excellent business condition."

APPLICABLE TO DIVIDENDS.

A published statement of the earnings of the Erie Railroad for the four months ended Oct. 31 showed net earnings in that time of $4,178,080. After payment of interest charges, rentals, &c., a surplus of $1,535,000 is left. There is $42,884,000 first preferred stock, and $16,000,000 second preferred, and is pointed out that the surplus for these four months is equal to 3¾ per cent. on the first preferred for one year.

CHAIR COMBINE ASSURED.

J. H. Graham, General Superintendent of the Marietta Chair Company of Marietta, Ohio—one of the companies to be included in the now pending chair combine—says, discussing business affairs:

"Our business has never been better. It will show a gain of at least 25 per cent. over what it was in 1892, which was the palmiest business year for a long time. We are, in fact, assured of a market for all the goods we can produce for the next twelve months, and at greatly increased prices.

"Indeed, the manufacturing concerns of the West are at their wits' end to supply the trade. The difficulty now is to get cars to haul the products."

It is learned, as bearing on the chair combine situation, that the combine will probably be perfected either in January or in February. Over 90 per cent. of the manufacturers have agreed to enter the combine, and have given options on their plants.

It is said in chair-trade circles that a new price list will be put out on Jan. 15 which will show considerable advances over present figures.

COAL COMPANIES ACTIVE.

It is said that the purchase by the Reading Coal and Iron Company of a new tract of coal land on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio is because of the present great demand for coal; and it is announced that extensive mines will at once be put in working order.

An official of the Reading repeats what some time ago was stated through the columns of THE TIMES that the company is certain to handle all the business it can handle for a long time to come.

Officers of other coal roads have the same story to tell.

BOND OFFERINGS.

The total disbursements for bonds at the Sub-Treasury yesterday amounted to $1,123,06[illegible] paid out on one offering of fours. This makes a total payment at the Sub-Treasury on bond account under the present offer $17,708,828.40.

MADE A STATE DEPOSITARY.

It was yesterday announced by President Levi P. Morton of the Morton Trust Company that that company has been designated by the State Banking Department as a State depositary.

THE OMITTED GAS DIVIDEND.

The failure of the Standard Gas Directors to take action regarding dividend matters at the meeting Friday was generally construed at the divigends were to all intents and purposes passed, which is also looked upon as an indication that the gas war is by no means at a point of settlement. The officials of the Standard Company decline to say anything about the business transacted during the session, except that action on dividends was taken, and they could not state whether or not the matter of dividends came up during the meeting for consideration.

In view of the action of the Standard Gas securities last day which declined several points the fact that the abandoned so it was generally expected favorable payment of dividends would be the gas situation at least until some sort of a reduced its dividends occurred in the condition of from a 6 per cent. basis to a 4 per cent. basis last July, which it has maintained ation. The Standard Company paid dividends on the common stock since that time. The preferred stock has at 6 per cent. basis, which it has maintained received a payment of this year a distribution of 6 per cent., which is 2 per cent. less than it received in 1898, and equal to the amount paid in 1897.—Dow, Jones & Co.

MERCHANTS' TRUST COMPANY OPENS FOR BUSINESS.

The Merchants' Trust Company, recently organized by Edwin Langdon, President of the Central National Bank of this city, will open its doors for business to-morrow morning, Dec. 11. The banking rooms are in the Central National Bank Building, Broadway. The company starts business with a surplus of $1,000,000 (one million dollars) and a capital of $500,000. The entire capital stock is invested in New York City 5% per cent. gold bonds. Edwin Langdon has been elected President of the trust company and remains President of the Central National Bank. John B. Grant will be the Secretary and Treasurer of the new company.

WHEAT MARKET SITUATION.

There was a better tone to the wheat market, dating from the first day of trading, the other cereal left the rut into which it had fallen and scored important advances. The Chicago and New York markets, however, petered out yesterday from fractions to flatness, with a decline from the actual abandonment of the last developed the week's operations.

The steady advance through the week was prompted by growing Euro-

...n interest in our surplus export reserve ...d the statistics of the visible supply, ...ich are bullish. On the other hand, ...ere was bear news of importance, which ...akes the net advance all the more sig...ficant, as showing the real strength of ...beat and sustaining the contention that ...the quotations of the last month it was ...cheap commodity.

News from the Argentine Republic is ...at its wheat crop, about to be harvested, ...ill be large enough to give a surplus stock ...r export of from 45,000,000 to 60,000,000 ...shels. Later in the week this informa...on was largely modified by news of un...vorable weather for gathering the crop, ...nother bear factor was confirmation of ...e report of increased acreage for Winter ...heat and generally fine conditions for the ...prouting crop going under the snow. This ...em in regard to the sowing of coarse ...ains in the cotton belt from Opelika, Ala., ...ttracted serious attention:

The sowing of oats, rye, and barley in this ...otion has taken a greater hold of our farmers ...an ever before. They claim that they can get ...ore money out of a small crop of cotton than ...t of a large crop of cotton, and efforts are be...g made by many of the leaders of our planters ...restrict as much as possible the increase in ...reage of cotton for another season. For their ...ke, it is hoped that they will follow their pres...nt resolution. Fertilizer agents claim their ...les up to date are very small on account of the ...hngnement in the price of the commercial fer...izers. Meantime, we see that some live stock ...the shape of mules are being brought to the ...outhern markets. Activity in this branch, how...er, is undeveloped, but will be watched closely ...it will furnish a pretty fair index for the ...respective acreage of the year 1900.

Maize during the week was somewhat er...atic, and may be said to have been held ...p—one good turn deserves another—by ...heat. As was pointed out some time since, ...hen there was a general advance in fresh ...cereals, farmers decided to raise butchers' ...tock on a larger scale than usual, and put ...he resolution into effect, so that our two-...illion corn crop will not be more than ...nough to go around. And besides, at any ...decline in the corn market, sharp recovery ...ay be expected, because the agriculturists ...re in easy circumstances, and are generally ...isposed to hold their corn or feed it to ...tock, unless prices suit them. Produce Exchange opinions yesterday were that the ...dvance of the week will be sustained and ...ettered when the supply markets of Eu...ope are ice bound.

The weekly New York grain letter of Mc...tyre & Wardwell of yesterday said:

WHEAT—Market to-day firm and very dull, ...uctuations unimportant. Trading is somewhat ...abeyance because of the Government report ...e Monday afternoon. The telegraphic report to be issued on ...nday, Dec. 11, at noon, will relate to ...e present year, 1899-1900, and will com...rise an estimate of the acreage by States ...d the indicated yield of lint cotton per ...re.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

Traders were active on the bear side in yesterday's market for outside securities. Liquidation also continued and added to the recessions brought about by bear attacks. Transactions were in fairly large amount and distributed over a number of issues, but the day's business was less active than on Friday. Apprehension as to the future of the money market was probably the chief cause of the declines recorded, and traders made much of fears relative to money rates. After the announcement of the bank statement the market showed some improvement, for it was taken to be less unfavorable than had been expected. Toward the close some of the traders turned to the bull side and were as energetic in trying to advance prices as they had been earlier in the day in trying to depress them. Here and there closing quotations showed an advance over the previous day's figures, but these were far outnumbered by the net losses.

AMALGAMATED COPPER was more actively traded in than for some days, and continued the downward course which had marked the stock during the week. It sold down to 81 and closed at 80½ bid, a net loss of 1½ points. Houses with Boston connections were sellers of the stock. Nothing like inside support seemed to be given, although it was fairly taken by a number of brokers, but the supply was considerably in excess of the demand. It closed at the lowest for the day, after having rallied a little from the point which it reached on the early decline. Other copper stocks were in no better demand, with the exception of British Columbia Copper, and at the close there were practically no bids for the stocks in this group.

BRITISH COLUMBIA COPPER was traded in to the extent of 500 shares from 10¼ up to 11. After this one order was filled the bid fell back to 10¼, which was the final figure, and showed a small net gain.

STORAGE POWER was active and erratic. It opened in the neighborhood of 15, but very soon sold off, and, under bear attacks, went as low as 9¾. At the lower figures support was given the stock, and it recovered as sharply as it had declined, getting up to 13. It fell back to 12, and just before the close went to 11. It closed at this figure, with a net loss of 4 points. Aggressive attacks were made on the stock, stop orders were reached, and until inside support appeared traders had things their own way in the stock. On the rally a certain amount of short stock was covered, and in some instances traders turned to the bull side in the stock.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS common suffered a further decline and sold a point and a quarter below Friday's lowest. Trading in the stock amounted to only a few hundred shares, and the decline was the result of lack of demand, rather than of heavy liquidation or bear attacks. Final figures in the preferred stock showed a loss of half a point, and a similar decline was recorded in the bonds.

STANDARD GAS, on what appeared to be inside buying, went up to 105, at which figure upward of 500 shares changed hands. This bid was made at the close for any part of 500 shares. Nothing new occurred in the market for the preferred stock, which closed, as on Friday, at 130 bid.

ELECTRIC AXLE sold off to 6¼, but recovered later to 6⅝, and at the close showed a loss of only an eighth of a point. Transactions in the stock were in fairly large amount.

ELECTRIC BOAT was one of the strongest stocks on the list. It sold at 28 and closed unchanged for the day at 27 bid.

Closing quotations were as follows:

Bar silver steady at 27¼d. per ounce.

The amount of bullion withdrawn from the Bank of England on balance to-day was £11,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 131.70; Madrid, 27.40; Lisbon, 42.50; Rome, 6.15.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 9.—Prices opened feeble on the Bourse to-day, but became steadier toward the close. The gold withdrawals from the Bank of England caused apprehensions of dear money and in consequence numerous realizations were effected. Spanish fours and Brazilians partially recovered toward the finish. Turks were heavy. Rio Tintos continued calm. De Beers were weak. Kafirs relapsed rather sharply in view of the approaching settlement in London.

Three per cent. rentes, 100 f. 62½c. for the account. Exchange on London, 25f. 33½c. for checks.

Spanish fours closed at 68.02½.

BERLIN, Dec. 9.—Prices on the Boerse to-day were weak. Later locals recovered, but the other departments were depressed. Turks were easier on realizations.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 49½ pfennigs for checks.

Private rate of discount, 6¾ per cent.

The weekly statement of the Imperial Bank of Germany shows the following changes: Cash in hand increased 11,620,000 marks; treasury notes increased 160,000 marks; other securities decreased 21,560,000 marks; notes in circulation decreased 10,120,000 marks.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 9.—On the Boerse today business was dull, speculators being inclined to realize, and there was a decline in all departments. Spanish fours, Portuguese, Italians, and Americans were easier. Locals were depressed.

enerally quoted on time money. Where money is borrowed on speculative securities ates are simply a matter of special agreement. The market for mercantile paper is very quiet. Merchants as a rule are not making much paper at present. Best names are quoted nominally at 6 per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—Local stocks were yielding. In some cases the very lowest prices were recorded. Welsbach Light sell to 45½, United Gas Improvement to 56½, Union Traction almost to 39, American Railways to 5¼, American Cement to 2¼, Choctaw preferred to 43½, Marsden to 2, and so on. Everything good, bad, and indifferent moved alike. Pennsylvania Railroad stock, which a few days ago was eagerly sought after at 68½, now sold at 68¼.

It was not a question of intrinsic value, but of speculative expedience. All the operating properties which are represented by stocks are making money, and the latter are intrinsically worth more to-day than when they commanded much higher prices because they are doing more business. It was a day for bargain buyers.

To-day's closing prices:

WALTER A. WOOD CO. SOLVENT.

Court Orders that Receivers Surrender Property to Trustees.

Special to The New York Times.

TROY, N. Y., Dec. 9.—Justice Fursman today disposed of several important motions growing out of the receivership of the Walter A. Wood Company. The first was a motion made by Eliphalet Wood and Serafina Patterson, stockholders, to set aside an order of the Supreme Court granted on Oct. 7 appointing Charles J. Buchanan of Albany referee to pass the accounts of the receivers, and further providing that upon the conclusion of the accounting and the payment of the balance of the company's floating debt the proceedings for voluntary dissolution of the company should be discontinued. Justice Fursman modifies this order by striking out the provisions relating to the company's dissolution and reaffirms that part relating to an accounting.

The second motion was for a confirmation of the report of the referee passing the receivers' accounts to Oct. 1. An order was granted confirming the referee's report, and further providing that upon accounting satisfactorily for their accounts as receivers subsequent to Oct. 1 and the payment of the balance of the company's floating debt the receivers should be discharged.

The most important application was made on behalf of the trustees of the Wood company, and was based upon a report of C. J. Buchanan, referee, that the company is now solvent. The trustees asked that an order be granted directing the receivers to forthwith transfer and surrender all of the corporate property of the trustees, and that the proceedings for a voluntary dissolution of the company should be discontinued. The application was opposed by Ernest T. Fellowes, representing Mrs. Patterson and Mr. Wood. Julien T. Davies of New York, representing the stockholders' Reorganization Committee, supported the application.

The Court granted an order directing the receivers to surrender the property to the trustees after the receivers shall first have paid the balance of the company's floating indebtedness, which amounts to about $230,000, and after the trustees shall have properly indemnified the receivers against any outstanding obligations of the receivers on account of the latter's purchase of raw material for the coming season's manufacture, and further provided that the receivers may retain in their hands sufficient moneys to meet such of their obligations as shall mature before the formal transfer of the property shall be completed.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS

C. E. Hambleton has been appointed Omaha Manager of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company.

The Northwestern Life and Savings Company of Des Moines has been licensed to do a life insurance business on a legal reserve basis in the State of Illinois.

Edward E. Potter has been appointed Pacific Coast Manager of the Glens Falls Fire Insurance Company.

The Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool has reinsured the business of the Frederick County Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Maryland.

Ellison & Coolidge have been appointed Boston agents of the Eastern Insurance Company of New York.

Hicks & Magee have been appointed San Francisco agents of the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Company of Hartford.

Rothery & Perrin have been appointed Boston agents of the United States Fire Insurance Company and the Home Mutual Insurance Company of San Francisco.

Steps have been taken toward the merger of the Colonial Assurance Company of this city, which was organized in 1896 with a capital stock of $200,000, and the Washington Assurance Company, which was organized with $200,000 capital in 1897. It is proposed to effect the merger by taking up the Washington stock and substituting Colonial shares. The capital of the proposed consolidated company will be $400,000, and it is intended that the resultant corporation shall be organized under the name of the Colonial Assurance Company. Meetings of the Directors of the two companies will be held shortly to take action upon the plan of consolidation. Both companies have been operated under the management of George A. Stanton & Co. since their inception.

President Cram of the Western Union has appointed R. J. Smith of the Traders' Insurance Company of Chicago to fill the vacancy in the Grievance Committee, caused by the death of J. J. Clark of the Detroit Fire and Marine Insurance Company. Thomas S. Chard of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company of San Francisco, who recently resigned as Chairman of the Arbitration Committee, has consented to retain his membership in the committee.

INFLUX OF FOREIGN ORES.

Americans Are Buying Iron and Copper in Other Countries.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—It is estimated that over 200 ships will be required to bring the cargoes of iron and copper ore consigned to this port for the coming year.

Purchases of 200,000 tons of iron ore have been made in Spain and other Mediterranean countries for shipment to Philadelphia over and above that contracted for from the Daiquiri, Juragua, and Chirivico mines in Cuba.

The mines on the Orinoco River, the ownership of which was settled by the Paris tribunal in the Anglo-Venezuelan arbitration, will also send considerable ore north, as they have recently been opened. Contracts have been closd for the delivery of 150,000 tons of copper ore in this city from the Spanish mines at Huelva.

Business Man Kills a Visitor.

NORFOLK, Va., Dec. 9.—Charles M. Harper, a well-known real estate agent of Pinner's Point, a suburb of Portsmouth, shot and killed David Ross of Norfolk last night. Ross entered Harper's office and advanced toward him, cursing him. Harper retreated to the rear wall, and then he fired. Harper surrendered to Justice Rustic, who held him in a small amount for preliminary trial today. The shooting is believed to have been justifiable.

COTTON.—The cotton market was, for these times, a tame one. The entire scope of the session's changes was only a matter of 10 points and but 4 points up to the last half hour. The comparative apathy of the trade was partly explained by the hesitation caused by uncertainties and possibilities surrounding the coming Government crop report. This should make its appearance Monday. The Washington authorities will to-night give to the press final figures on acreage and production of cotton in 1898-9 by States. A telegraphic report is to be published Monday on the Cotton Exchanges at noon, which will include the estimated acreage this year by States and the indicated yield of lint cotton.

WOOL.—LONDON, Dec. 9.—At the wool auction sales to-day 12,416 bales were offered, including a good selection of greasy merinos. American representatives competed spiritedly for the specialities, but; owing to strong Continental operations, they only secured a moderate proportion. They also obtained a good selection of greasy cross-breds, and the bulk of the Falkland Islands and Punta Arenas wools offered at a 20 per cent. advance. The attendance was good. The present series of sales is scheduled to close Dec. 11.

BREADSTUFFS.—WHEAT—The total range of wheat prices was a matter of about ⅝c, and the speculative side of the market developed but little feature of interest, with prices at the official close unchanged from the previous night, and on the curb a little easier. May selling from 75¼c to 75c, with the 1 o'clock figure, 75½c, asked. News of the day was perhaps a little more favorable to the bull side than otherwise, but owing to general dullness, and an unsettled feeling at the West, friends of the market were unable to take full advantage of these influences. No. 2 red was quoted 72¾c elevator, and 74¾c free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 79½c, free on board, afloat.

COFFEE.—The opening call on Brazilian coffee futures developed a very steady feeling with prices showing an advance of 5@10 points on sales of 2,000 bags. The improvement followed an advance of 1@1¼f at Havre and an advance of ⅛@1 pfennig at Hamburg. This was a better showing than had been looked for and covering became a feature, chiefly on local account. The Rio and Santos cables were missing on account of a holiday, and this fact led to increased caution on the part of the shorts. The only Brazilian news at hand was in the way of a report on Rio receipts, which were 6,000 bags, and very small at that. The market for futures closed steady, net unchanged to 5 points higher. Contract prices ranged as follows:

ropeans scattered over its vast area,
ting themselves with its natural con-
and requirements, with the steamer, road, the telegraph, and the telephone carrying light and knowledge and civilization to its darkest corners, Africa cannot long remain unknown or unknowing.

It was only after the explorers—Livingstone, Speke, Stanley, and others—had discovered, through persistent and heroic efforts, that there existed vast navigable waterways above the falls near the mouths of the great streams which flow from the interior, that European nations awoke to the physical and commercial possibilities of Africa; and then, in a twinkling, the Dark Continent was seized upon and divided up, and became, as by magic, a vast European "hinterland." Between 1884 and 1895 an area two and a half times the size of the United States, and containing a population of 100,000,000, was parceled out by an agreement of the European powers. At present scarcely a foot of African territory remains unclaimed.

The Star of Bethlehem.

From The New Lippincott's.

It was a cloister fancy of the Dark Ages that "the Star of Bethlehem" was some especially created star-like body, probably within our atmosphere, designed wholly for the leading of the wise men. The law of parsimony rejects such explication, and science, with silent scorn, turns its back upon the bauble star, for in the glorious depths of heaven are matchless orbs which, swinging on their way into mortal ken for a while, meet all the demands of poet and of prophet for the "Star of the King."

History affords us data for determining this wondrous star.

When the magi arrived in Jerusalem Herod was within a few weeks of his death. The massacre of the babes of Bethlehem was one of the last of his tragic deeds. Herod died in the year of Rome 750. When "Herod inquired diligently what time the star appeared," the reply was evidently such that he thought it safe to exterminate all baby sons of Bethlehem from two years old and under, showing that "the star" had been known to the wise men for at least two years before their arrival in Jerusalem, and whether its appearing had marked the conception or the birth of "the King," Herod could not decide. Recently discovered tablets at Zidion give the date of two enrollments for taxing, made under Cyrenius, Governor of Syria. The first of these, during which Christ was born, was made five years before the date A. D.

Torpid Spain.

From Lord Macaulay.

"Of the Spain which had domineered over the land and the ocean, over the Old and the New World; of the Spain which had, in the short space of twelve years, led captive a Pope, a King of France, a sovereign of Mexico, and a sovereign of Peru; of the Spain which had sent an army to the walls of Paris, and had equipped a mighty fleet to invade England, nothing remained but an arrogance which had once excited terror and hatred, but which could now excite only derision. * * * The huge mass [of Spanish dominions] lay torpid and helpless, and could be insulted with impunity. * * * So wretched had the King's education been, that when he was told of the fall of Mons, the most important fortress in his vast empire, he asked whether Mons was in England."

Couldn't Shave.

From The Homiletic Review.

A famous archaeologist went to his club recently, his countenance disfigured at several points with sticking plaster. There was a general inquiry among his friends as to what was the matter. "Razor," said the professor, briefly. "Good gracious! Where were you shaved?" asked one of the younger members, sympathetically. "It's a strange thing," said the man of learning. "I was shaved this morning by a man who really is, I suppose, a little above the ordinary barber. I know of my own knowledge that he took a double first class at Oxford, that he studied at Heidelberg afterward, and spent several years in other foreign educational centres. I know also of my own knowledge that he has contributed scientific articles to our best magazines, and has numbered among his intimate friends men of the highest social and scientific standing. And yet," said the savant, "he can't shave a man decently." "What is he a barber for," exclaimed the younger man, "with all those accomplishments?" "Oh, he isn't a barber!" said the bookworm, yawning. "You see, I shaved myself to-day." There are a great many men who get into the wrong pigeonhole. It is very important that a man's individuality should be studied in the selection of a trade or a profession. A great deal of the world's sorrow would be prevented if that were done.

The Old Year and the New.

The Old Year goes away; her eyes are sad—
The eyes of one who hopes or fears no more.
Snow is upon her hair; gray mists have clad
A form the vesture of the Spring which wore.
The new buds quicken now beneath the clay;
But not for her—the Old Year goes away.

The New Year enters in: a happy child,
Who looks for flowers to fill her outstretched hand,
And knows not fear although the winds be wild.
Soon shall the birds be singing in the land,
On the young leaves the patter of soft rain,
And violets ope'—the New Year comes again.

So with this mortal life: now young, now old,
A Spring which never dreams of frost and snow,
Summer and Autumn—then the tale is told;
With tired step, in wintry days we go.
God grant a wakening on some happier shore,
Where the lost youth and joy come back once more!
—MARY GORGES in Chambers's Journal.

A Study of the Wind.

From The Fortnightly.

Prof. Langley has discovered that wind is only a generic name for a series of infinitely complex and little known phenomena. The stronger the wind, the greater are its relative momentary fluctuations. "In a high wind the air moves in a tumultuous mass, the velocity being at one moment, perhaps, forty miles an hour, then diminishing to an almost instantaneous calm, and then resuming." This accounts for much that has hitherto been mysterious in the flight of birds and the behavior of flying machines. Large birds of the eagle type are often seen to float on the air without any visible motion, save a certain rocking or balancing, for considerable fractions of an hour. A turkey buzzard has been seen to remain stationary without apparent effort in the teeth of a gale blowing thirty-five miles an hour. This, which seems contrary to all physical law, when we think of the wind as steady, may be readily explained when we see, as Prof. Langley's observations show, that wind, considered in the narrowest possible sections, is "variable and irregular in its observations beyond anything which had been anticipated." This "internal work" of the wind, as Prof. Langley has called the minute fluctuations, may and probably does account for all the phenomena of soaring flight. He believes that, in consequence, it should be possible "to cause any suitably disposed body, animate or inanimate, wholly immersed in the wind, and wholly free to move, to advance against the direction of the wind itself." "A ship is able to go against a head wind by the force of that wind, owing to the fact that it is partly immersed in the water, which reacts on the keel; but it is here asserted that (contrary to usual opinion, and in opposition to what may at first seem the teachings of physical science,) it is not impossible that a heavy and nearly inert body, wholly immersed in the air, can be made to do this."

This discovery has at once opened up the possibilities and difficulties of aerial navigation. In one sense flight is possible to-morrow; in another, it may cost many years of labor and thousands of lives to learn its practical conditions. So far as the motive power is concerned, there is no trouble; the problem has two solutions.

At Fontenoy.

From "A History of the British Army." Hon. J. W. Fortescue.

Closer and closer came the British, still with arms shouldered, always silent, always with the same slow, measured tread, until they had advanced to within fifty yards of the French. Then at length Lord Charles Hay of the First Guards stepped forward with flask in hand, and doffing his hat drank politely to his enemies. "I hope, gentlemen," he shouted, "that you are going to wait for us to-day and not swim the Scheldt as you swam the Main at Dettingen. Men of the King's company," he continued, turning round to his own people, "these are the French Guards, and I hope you are going to beat them to-day." And the English Guards answered with a cheer.

The French officers hurried to the front, for the appearance of the British was a surprise to them, and called for a cheer in reply, but only a half-hearted murmur came from the French ranks, which quickly died away and gave place to a few sharp words of command; for the British were now within thirty yards. "For what we are about to receive may the Lord make us truly thankful," murmured an English Guardsman, as he looked down the barrels of the French muskets, but before his comrades around him had done laughing the French Guards had fired, and the turn of the British had come at last.

King Christmas and Master New Year.

King Christmas sat in his house of ice,
And looked across the snow,
"Hallo, my litle man!" he cried,
"Now, whither dost thou go?"

"I go, my Lord, along the way
That all my kin have gone,
Where thou, my Lord, shalt follow me
Before another dawn."

"Right gayly," cried the Christmas King,
"Who ride to-night with thee?"
"The days of grief, the days of joy,
Are they who ride with me."

"God keep thee, merry little man;
Go whisper them that mourn
How surely comes again the day
When Christ the Lord was born.

"And be not sad, my little man,
But when thou too art old
And o'er the wintry wastes you come,
A weary man and cold,

"Right cheerily, I pray thee, then,
To keep this gracious tryst,
And leave thy weary burden here
Where cares grow light, with Christ.

"Now, bid thy gallant company
Ride onward without fear,
For I, the King of Christmas,
Have blessed the glad New Year."

Heroes Scarce.

From The Ladies' Home Journal.

The making of actresses is easier than the making of actors. The young women are by nature more apt and pliable. Their faces are more mobile, their manners more graceful, their habits of speech and bearing more variable. When the round-up of talent comes and the graduates are turned out for professional service there are half a dozen proficient actresses to every actor of equal ability. This is shown at the matinée trial performances, in which the female rôles are generally well played, while the male ones are not. If promising actresses are more numerous, six to one, than actors, the same ratio operates in favor of the young men in getting work. A good-looking fellow finds himself in no such glutted market as discourages his sister aspirant. If he is clever he will readily get an opening, even though he is ugly. The masculine rôles in plays predominate largely. Of comely, intelligent, and tolerably facile actresses the supply is far in excess of the demand. Heroes are scarce. Heroines are plenty.

A Boer Prisoner's Story.

From "African Recollections." By Mrs. Lionel Phillips.

It is well known that one of Jameson's troopers on the way down, failing ill, was taken prisoner by some Boers and kept at their farmhouse some days. He was tied up, and forced to submit to all sorts of ill-treatment, being given dirty water to drink, for instance, when half dying of thirst. But his captor's wife had compassion on him, and at the end of several days, to his surprise, he was told that he was to be allowed to go free. The Boers gave him a horse, mounted him, and informed him that the one condition they made was that he was to ride away as fast as he could. He naturally obeyed, and as he galloped off had several bullets put into him, poor fellow. That is a very favorite and well-known method of Transvaal Boer assassination. It gives them the pretext that a prisoner had been trying to escape.

When Rossetti Painted.

From "Dante Gabriel Rossetti." By H. C. Marillier.

In his diary, Ford Madox Brown writes: Nov. 12, (1854.)—Gabriel getting on slowly with his calf. He paints in all like Albert Dürer, hair by hair, and seems incapable of any breadth; but this he will get by going over it from feeling at home. From want of habit, I see Nature bothers him, but it is sweetly drawn and felt.

Nov. 27.—Saw Gabriel's calf; very beautiful, but takes a long time. Endless emendations, no perceptible progress from day to day, and all the time he wearing my greatcoat, which I want, and a pair of my breeches, besides food and an unlimited supply of turpentine.

Dec. 16.—Gabriel not leaving yet; done his cart, and talking quite freely about several days yet, having been here since the 1st November, and not seeming to notice any hints. * * * Emma being within a week or two of her confinement, and he having had his bed made on the floor in the parlor one week now, and not getting up till 11, besides my finances being reduced to £2 12s. 6d., which must last till 20th January. I told him delicately he must go, or go home at night by the 'bus. This, he said, was too expensive. I told him he might ride to his work in the morning and go home at night. * * * So he is gone for the present.

The Evolution of the French Sardine.

From The New Lippincott's.

The visitor to the coast of Maine is often amazed at the surprising versatility of the lowly herring. In many of the sea coast villages thousands of cases of herring are shipped to various sections of the country disguised as French sardines, brook trout, and mackerel.

The herring, when unloaded from the little steamer which brings them from the weir, are separated into three piles, according to size. The evolution of the herring then begins. The largest size rapidly develop into mackerel, the medium size are soon well on their way toward becoming brook trout, while the smallest, in the course of a day, are ready to be sent into the unsuspecting word gorgeously labeled in black and gold, "Fine French sardines."

Some slight difference in the preparation and the alluring labels are all that distinguish the mackerel from the brook trout and the brook trout from the sardine.

"The Markis o' Granby."

From "The Life of the Marquis of Granby." W. E. Manners.

As few people are concerned with eighteenth century politics, and fewer still with the German war, the sustained association of Lord Granby's name with the licensed victualing interest has not only masked the historical circumstances which led to that association, but has lent color to Walpole's and "Junius's" libels by representing him as a kind of patron saint of drink. To this impression has been added a comical vein by one particular signboard in fiction which is destined to survive for countless years after the last real specimen has crumbled into dust—viz., that of the "Markis o' Granby," kept by Susan Clarke of Dorking, and so intimately and immortally associated with Tony Weller.

Under this combined deteriorating influence of the commonplace and the comical the Marquis has come to be generally regarded simply as a rubicund, jovial boon companion such as would, in "Junius's" words, "suffer no man to leave his table either sorrowful or sober." Nothing could be further from the truth.

Grand People in London. 1806.

From "John Hookham Frere and His Friends." Gabrielle Festing.

"I came to Town on Wednesday, and intended to go to the Antient Music, made a Bungle about my Ticket, it was too late to get it. The Drawing Room was the object yesterday, they made a mistake in my Dress, it was not deep enough for my Mourning, and the glass of my Sedan Chair was not mended; looked at my Lodgings, found them Abominable. I walked all over the Town till I was Lord, how tired! Looked in upon the Dutchess of Gordon while she took off her Hoop to Dine with the Bedfords." This was Jane, Duchess of Gordon, who rode down the High Street of Edinburgh on a pig's back in the days of her wild girlhood, and raised recruits for the new Highland regiment when other means had failed, by allowing each man to take the shilling from between her lips. Hoops were de rigeur for Court dress until the days of George IV., although in private life the ladies' skirts had been growing more and more scanty since the days of the French Revolution.

Chess or Wood Shifting.

From Blackburne's "Games of Chess."

In chess it is exactly the same as in literature—talent is always more sure of success than genius. The most ordinary "wood shifter," by long study and analysis, can acquire a steady defensive style of wood-shifting, and if patient and fairly intelligent can work up to a high standard of play. One of his sources of strength is that he depends entirely on what, as a Scot would say, "is putten in wi' a spune." Any man of sound, clear common sense could become a chess-player of the first rank, provided always that the fire and shadow of passion and fancy did not interfere with the steady, cold, calculating brain. But genius is something other, something beyond the first rank, and it is rare in chess as it is in letters. You could count on one hand all who deserve the name.

I would go to the Café de la Regence for the first, for Philidor is the leader of the moderns. Breslau would give us the next, in point of time at all events; but who shall decide whether Andersaen was greater or less than Paul Morphy? With these the subject of this memoir deserves a place. He, too, has something beyond a talent for the game—he has genius. And I by no means say that this gift is always a blessing to its possessor. Talent is more under command, is more manageable, and while it is content to labor, genius has a haughty self-reliance that is not always justified. But just as one would never dream of admitting a man's name into the brief list of great writers simply on account of a vast sale of books, so the genius of a chess player is demonstrated not by his victories, but by the quality of his play. A modern match, indeed, is largely a trial of patience. Each competitor gets up an opening—a safe and sound one, like the Ruy Lopez or the Queen's Gambit—and day after day toils at its variations. Genius will never shine at that task—you might as well harness Pegasus to a broomstick.

Premature Attacks on Science.

From Appleton's Popular Science Monthly.

Those who do pioneer work in science encounter not only the inherent difficulties of research and interpretation, but also the misapprehension of certain educated men whose distinctive gift is a fatal genius for applying false standards of measurement to the progress of thought. Seizing upon some branch of knowledge that is in a state of vigorous development, when its newer results are out of harmony with its earlier hypotheses, such critics love to point out these contradictions, and try to prove that the branch in question is no science at all, and that its teachers are hardly worthy of respectful consideration.

The history of science contains many interesting chapters pertaining to this kind of criticism and the fate that has invariably overtaken it. When Copernicus and Galileo showed the absurdity of the Ptolemaic astronomy the theologians enjoyed themselves for a time, as they demonstrated—to their entire satisfaction—the folly of all rationalistic attempts to explain what revelation only could make clear. When Darwin explained the origin of species through variation and natural selection, the pretentions of biology were completely exploded by its lay and clerical critics (they thought and said so) by the extremely simple device of the "deadly parallel column." Was not Cuvier a great anatomist, and had he ever taught this nonsense about the mutability of species? Was not Agassiz the most learned naturalist alive, and what had he to say about Darwinian vagaries? Had he not proved over and over again that the very concept of the species was the notion of a group of characters that could not possibly change or be changed from generation to generation? In more recent years we have again seen the same method of reducing science to a variety show for the entertainment of the lay general reader applied to both biology and psychology.

A Carol of Birds.

Little Christ in the Winter
Opened first His eyes;
Saw a star above His bed,
Shining near His mother's head;
Saw the frosty skies
Full of angels singing slow,
Singing low
Lullabies.

Little Christ in the Summer
Made a pretty play,
Shaping doves and sparrows
Out of wetted clay;
Bade each lift a living wing
In the sunshine, green and sing,
Gladdening
Soar and fly away.

Little Christ in the Autumn,
With the passing birds,
Sang a song of wondering
Sweet beyond all musicking
Holpen out with words,
Leading with a quiet pace
To the trodden drinking place
The day-weary herds.

Little Christ in the Springtime
Found a ruined nest,
And so sweet a prayer He prayed
That the gentle Father bade
A dead robin live again,
That her cold eggs might be made
Singing creatures free and fain,
Unafraid.

Little Christ asleeping
Fell and dreamed a dream.
Birds of feather and of clay
At the dying of the day
Came and sang to Him.
Sparrows chirped a merry note,
But one mother robin's throat
Shrilled of death and holy food.
Was it ill or was it good,
Such a dream?

"Tansey Tarts."

From Longman's Magazine.

Many of our garden herbs, still in common use for purposes of seasoning, are in reality British plants. Among them may be mentioned mint and marjoram, and thyme and calamint, all of which may be found in their native haunts. Fennel is abundant on sea cliffs in many places in the South of England. Wild hyssop is perfectly naturalized on the picturesque ruins of Beaulieu Abbey, and wild balm used to be found within the ancient walls of Portchester Castle. The garden parsley was formerly abundant on the shingly beach at Hurst Castle, where it used to be gathered for domestic purposes. One native herb, however, much in use among our forefathers, is now seldom seen in kitchen gardens—we mean Tanacetum vulgare, the common tansy, the dull yellow flowers of which are often conspicuous by the side of streams. The young leaves and juice of this plant were formerly employed to give color and flavor to puddings, which were known as tansy cakes, or tansy puddings.

In mediæval times the use of these cakes was specially associated with the season of Easter, and it is interesting to notice that in the diet rolls of St. Swithin's Monastery at Winchester, which belong to the end of the fifteenth century, we come across the entry "tansey tarte." It has been said that the use of tansy cakes at this season was to strengthen the digestion after what an old writer calls "the idle conceit of eating flesh and pulse for forty days in Lent," and it is certain that this was the virtue attributed to the plant by the old herbalists. "The herb fried with eggs, which is called a 'tansey,'" says Culpeper, "helps to digest and carry away those bad humors that trouble the stomach." It seems, however, more probable that the custom of eating tansy cakes at Easter time was associated with the teaching of that festival, the name "tansy" being a corruption of a Greek word meaning "immortality."

The Lure of Chinese Literati.

From "The Yangtze Valley and Beyond." Mrs. T. F. Bishop.

Many of the literati say—and I have heard the same thing in the North—that outside of China there are five kingdoms united under one Emperor, Jesus Christ, who rose from a peasant origin, that one is inhabited by dog-faced people, and that in another, where each woman has two husbands, she has a hole in her chest, and that when they travel the husbands put a pole through it and carry her!

Wagner's Idea of America.

Gustave Kobbé in The American Monthly Review of Reviews.

Although Wagner never was in this country, the possibility of his coming over here is referred to often in his published correspondence. In fact, he made America a stand-and-deliver argument with his friends, several times threatening to forever put aside his "Ring of the Nibelung" and to cross the ocean to earn a competency unless they contributed to his support.

That Wagner regarded America as a gold mine with which to replenish his exchequer when other means failed, is evidenced by the following letter written from Paris to Franz Lachner, Court director at Riga, whose brother wanted financial assistance to go to America with an orchestra. Wagner advised Lachmann to assist his brother. He instances the case of a German musician who went to America as a poor man, and in a very short time was in receipt of an excellent income; adding that a Wagner orchestra would certainly be still more lucky, for "in a country where millions are constantly growing into cities in five years there can be no lack of opportunities for the settlement of whole bands of musicians." Could anything be more dishonestly naïve than this last quotation?

"Hell-Fire Jack."

From Chambers's Journal.

At Alum Bagh, during the mutiny, there was one day an alarm. Our foes were coming on masse. They advanced nearer and nearer; this time they meant business. In the centre of our line there were always some horse-artillery guns ready harnessed. Out of a tent near came a wiry, broncefeatured man clad in a flannel shirt with sleeves rolled up, canvas overalls kept up by a shabby cummerbund, and solar topee; sword and pistols completed his get-up. There was no pretension to dandyism about him; none was needed, for was this not Jack Olpherts, V. C. (his real name was William,) the adored of the soldiers, with whom, for his audacity and nerve, he went by the sobriquet of "Hell-fire Jack"? Swinging himself into the saddle, and without waiting for a cavalry escort, as by all the rules of war he ought to have done, he dashed toward the enemy. When close to them, quick as thought he turned his guns round and saluted them with a round of grape. The enemy naturally felt hurt and indignant at such audacity. They hesitated a moment to think out the best way of punishing such bravado. If they did not know how to make use of that moment, Olpherts did. He had reloaded, and there came upon the dusky crew another shower of his favorite. They must be moving—a third shower might come upon them. They moved—not to the front, however, but to the rear. They had broken and fled. In a few minutes Olpherts was back at his tent as calm as if nothing had happened. The ground on which the enemy had halted a moment, preparatory to chastising the Feringhee, was strewn with hundreds of shoes, which the owners had kicked off the better to run away.

One characteristic of Olpherts was his quickness at grasping a situation and his readiness in action. Being certain of himself, he felt he could afford to give points to the other side.

The Higher Flirtation.

From The Atlantic Monthly.

Many girls will fail to comprehend the higher flirtation, and proceed in the same old way, and men will ignorantly marry the piquant face and vivacious manner. But to the marriage of true minds impediments have been removed. The freedom of our education develops platonic flirtation to its noblest uses. If American men make the best husbands, the reason is related to the training they have in meeting on terms of equality with many women.

It is stupid in men or women to lack the instinct for flirtation, but this instinct, like so many others, can be turned to the deepest or the emptiest uses. No sharp line can be drawn between investigation and pretense. To make yourself attractive, comprehending, and sympathetic is the way to draw out another nature and obtain full knowledge, and to condemn all coquetry is like recommending swimming and forbidding water. Sentimental people fear intimacies which do not end seriously but the increase of knowledge and security is worth some hearts broken before marriage instead of after. Few objects are more readily mended, and few improve so much through injury and repair. Platonic flirtation is one of the safeguards of the human race. As one after another my friends have passed through this gate to the altar I have been tempted to declare that most platonic friendships end in matrimony, but a calmer memory recalls numberless escapes through this probation, from impending wedlock.

In the Monkey Temple, Benares.

From The Cheltonman.

We had provided ourselves with popcorn and other goodies, which we expected to offer their holinesses. But the monkeys did not give us a chance to do that. They snatched the dainties from our hands, and when our supplies were exhausted they amused themselves by mimicking us.

One of our party, who had a bad cold, used his handkerchief with considerable emphasis. Scarcely had he replaced his handkerchief in his pocket when a monkey seized the protruding end, pulled it out, and gave an excellent imitation of the act. Then, of course, some of us had kodaks, and after we had taken several pictures another personification of impudence picked up a little block of wood which lay upon the ground, and with it took several snapshots at us. A third ill-conducted simian (a vain female, who deserted her infant for the purpose) grabbed from my shoulders a red chuddar scarf, and in a few flying leaps carried it to a lofty minaret. There she put it on, and evidently "fancied herself" immensely. But she was not allowed to retain her prize in about three minutes at least forty monkeys had bit a piece of my precious chuddar! Then our native guide informed me that the monkeys were very fond of scarfs, and that they captured a great many on the stone "ghats" near the temple while their owners were bathing in the river. Perhaps on the principle that "misery loves company" he seemed to think his item of news ought to console me; but although the "monkeyishness" continued as long as we stopped in the temple "compound," I no longer found them quite so ludicrous.

Exploration in the Antarctic.

From Scribner's.

The arctic and the antarctic are alike only in degrees of cold and in the quantities of ice. Even in this they differ and in every other respect there is no resemblance. From this it follows that an antarctic explorer should be differently equipped from the man who travels in the Far North. The hopeless isolation and impossibility of retreat make a fixed outfit, a permanent station, and two vessels imperative.

Should an expedition, risking their fortunes, as did the crew of the Belgica, in a single vessel and in the unknown drift, lose the ship, which is always easy, the disaster would mean nearly certain death for everybody. It is true that the Belgica experienced no great damage by pressure, but that we escaped with our vessel is a matter due quite as much to accident as to any wisely prompted construction of the ship. If a field of ice two miles in diameter should press upon any vessel, in the wrong situation, it would certainly crush her.

This is always to be expected in antarctic navigation, and it makes a companionship indispensable. The south also is a hard school for explorers. Young men who wish to engage in this work should take their schooling in the more congenial arctic regions.

The Scout.

From The Spectator.

It was a single Prussian scout, who, before Sadowa, discovered the whole of the Austrian Army drawn up in a new and unlooked-for position in time for the Prussians to alter their plans. It was another German scout who brought news of the unsupported French Army at Vionville, and enabled the Germans to destroy it. But the services of scouts like Major Colquhoun Grant in the Peninsular war sometimes determine the strategy of a whole campaign. Napier's description of the methods of this officer, in whom "the utmost daring was so mixed with subtlety of genius and tempered by discretion that it is hard to say which quality predominated," agrees closely with Colonel Baden-Powell's ideal of the scout's qualities. Grant and others like him carried out their work in the face of a regular army, amply equipped with cavalry, which they observed dressed in full uniform, and relying mainly on their own readiness and the speed of their horses. Grant's best piece of scouting was his discovery that Marmont did not really intend to attack Almeida or Ciudad Rodrigo during the siege of Badajoz by the British. He spent three days inside Marmont's lines, in uniform, and discovered that the Marshal had prepared provisions and scaling ladders for a siege. He then galloped through the French cavalry scouts after receiving their fire, and proceeded Marmont's army. This he watched through a pass, seeing every battalion and gun, and their direction, which was toward Ciudad Rodrigo. Still unsatisfied, by doubling back and entering the town by Fuentes after the French had passed, Grant discovered that they had left their scaling ladders behind, which showed that there was no real intention to storm Ciudad Rodrigo. This news, taken to Wellington, left him free to bring the siege of Badajoz to a successful end without apprehension for the other fortress, which he had just captured.

Carnegie Lyceum
Rush and Crush

Thousands Unable to Gain Admission.

Truly Marvellous Exhibitions, Wonderful Demonstrations and Highly Interesting and Instructive Lectures. Many Deaf Cured, to the Astonishment of the Great Audiences.

Such a rush and crush to obtain seats in any auditorium probably was never before known in New York as was seen last Friday, both afternoon and evening, at Carnegie Lyceum. Not only were every seat and every available space for standing room fully occupied both afternoon and evening by the great audiences which greeted Dr. Wilson, but thousands upon thousands of people anxious to obtain admission were turned away.

A large percentage of those present were more or less deaf, but notwithstanding this fact both audiences were appreciative, and fully enjoyed the truly Marvellous Exhibition and Wonderful Demonstrations, as well as the highly entertaining and instructive illustrated lecture given by the great aurist.

All sorts of electrical instruments and machines, from the largest to the smallest, were operated with great skill, not alone in the treatment of deafness, but also in the wonderfully beautiful electrical fireworks produced by the almost magical juggling of millions of volts of electricity. Of special interest was the exhibition by the great Edison X-Ray machine, the largest and only one of its kind ever used for exhibition purposes in New York.

Dr. Wilson fully demonstrated his polypathic treatment for deafness, which is bloodless, painless, and harmless, and includes many improvements on the methods of the best aurists or ear specialists of the world, together with his own most wonderful and original treatment, perfected several years since. This treatment embraces electricity in many forms and other means almost too numerous to mention. This combination has enabled the Doctor to cure deafness for many years, but now that his latest and greatest invention, the Blochymic generator, has been brought into use, he finds that he can not only cure many cases of deafness and blindness that were heretofore incurable, but many persons have their sight and hearing restored in less than half the time previously required.

The Doctor was at his best, and handled his subject in such a masterly manner as to convince all that he is not only familiar with every portion of that intricate and complicated organ, the ear, but also with every kind of treatment that has ever been employed for diseases of that important organ.

A committee consisting of Alan Hanson, 98 Sands st., Brooklyn; C. D. Danforth, 320 Warburton ave., Yonkers, N. Y., and Benj. Bernstein, 1,833 Seventh ave., New York, were selected at the afternoon lecture, and another by the audience at the afternoon lecture, and another committee, consisting of George Oberbeck, 459 West 155th st.; George Brooks, 242 East 82d st., and P. N. Lange, 94A Cooper st., Brooklyn, were selected by the audience present in the evening. These committees in turn occupied seats upon the stage, and at each meeting the Doctor requested all persons in the audience totally deaf in one or both ears to rise and hold up their right hands until the committees had opportunity to select from the most hopelessly deaf cases all who could be treated at one time upon the stage. After those selected by the committee of the afternoon had been treated they were carefully examined by the Doctor and committee with results as follows:

George Crooke, age 65, 205 West 124th st., New York, was totally deaf in left ear for 15 years. Understood low conversation and even the finest whisper after treatment. John Spiers, age 46, New Rochelle, was totally deaf in both ears for 15 years. On examination the Doctor pronounced his case probably incurable, but after treatment he was able to hear a whisper and understand moderately loud conversation in one ear. Florence Smith, age 26, 352 East 119th st., New York, totally deaf in left ear for three years. Could hear a low whisper and everything else after treatment. J. W. Philbrook, age 70, 200 East 57th st., Grand Army veteran, lost his hearing in Civil War—was totally deaf in both ears. Could hear a whisper and understand low conversation after treatment. Mrs. A. Henry, age 30, 302 West 154th st., New York, totally deaf in left ear for three years. Heard and understood low whispers and everything else after treatment. Charles Edwards, age 35, 67 West 30th st., totally deaf in right ear. Could understand the lowest possible whisper and everything else perfectly after treatment. Stella Hirsch, age 12, 1,280 Lexington ave., New York. Her mother stated to the audience that the little girl had been so deaf for the past two years that she could not hear any sound whatever. Understood a whisper after treatment. F. J. Seybold, age 50, 102 West 24th st., totally deaf in right ear for 20 years. Understood low whisper and everything else after treatment. Said he was satisfied that he was entirely cured of his deafness.

DARIUS WILSON, M. D.,
The World's Greatest Aurist.

The results in the evening were as follows:

Miss Louisa Lange, age 19, 90A Cooper st., Brooklyn, total paralysis in both ears for 6 years. Could hear low conversation and understand what was said after treatment. Mrs. A. Schmidt, Jr., age 25, 280 Hooper st., New York, was totally deaf in both ears for 15 years. Was pronounced a very bad case by the doctor, but could hear a whisper and understand everything else after treatment. Charles Williams, age 44, 220 East 70th st., New York, was totally deaf in the right ear for 6 years. The doctor stated that there needed to be an operation, but after treatment could hear a whisper and understand ordinary conversation. Mrs. Clara Quirg, age 29, 435 West 4th st., deaf mute for 2? years. Could not hear a sound or speak a single word intelligibly, but after treatment she was able to hear a whisper and pronounced words to the satisfaction of the committee and audience. John J. Sullivan, age 30, 249 West 29th st., had been totally deaf in left ear for 30 years. Could hear the very lowest whisper after treatment and ordinary conversation at a long distance. Thomas Neacy, age 28, 400 Washington st., New York, was born deaf and had never heard a sound. Could hear the tuning fork and understand ordinary conversation after treatment. Harry Holmes, deaf mute, age 15, 812 9th ave., New York, could hear a whisper after treatment and pronounce words after the doctor. Samuel Bramson, 500 Clinton st., Jersey City, born deaf and dumb, heard loud sounds and spoke words after the doctor.

During the evening Dr. Wilson gave names and addresses of some of the many thousands of his patients who had been permanently cured of deafness, and incidentally remarked that hundreds of deaf-mutes who were born without hearing had been made, under this treatment, to hear more or less perfectly. He presented to each audience a young lady, Miss May Aisbach, 504 Columbus ave., Boston, who was for 8 years at the Northampton School for Deaf-Mutes, and who had been examined by many of the best aurists in New York and New England, all of whom had pronounced her incurable and said that she could never hear anything. She had been treated by Dr.

is reported that food is frightfully ce in the Transvaal. In the Rustenrg district, which is the principal agrirural centre of the country, the burghwere ordered to hold themselves in diness to be called out on commando a nth previous to the event occurring, and re not allowed to leave their farms even go to market. When the order arrived. was about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and y had to be at the rendezvous, four rs distant, by 6 o'clock the following rning. A minent Transvaal Government conctor, at present at Delagoa Bay, met the annesburg representative of one of the gest firms in South Africa, and asked n what foodstuff he had there. He was d a large quantity of rice and meal, and asking the price was told a very high ure. The contractor, however, said he uld take the lot. The following epistle, signed by three God-aring Boers, is said to have been favorely entertained at Pretoria:
We, the undersigned, fully enfranchised rghers of this republic, do hereby certify at John Moon, a dangerous rooinek, by rofession an auditor &c., is one of the reatest jingoes and sedition mongers, a ater of Afrikanders and everything that nds to the prosperity and well-being of our social and moral welfare, a strong writer, an altogether—to put it plainly—wiper-out of Afrikander nationality, request and urge that the honorable Government immediately and peremptorily expel the said John Moon from this State, with an injunction that should he refuse to go or return to this State, after such warning, that he be publicly hanged in Market Square as an example to similar rebels, as we consider and know him to be extremely dangerous to the peace of our dearly cherished Fatherland."
Mr. Moon, however, did not wait to see whether the threat would be put into execution, but hastened to shake the dust of the Transvaal off his feet as soon as he received intimation of this document having been dispatched to Pretoria.
A wily "native" got the better of some rapacious Boers by imbedding in a bar of soap eighty British sovereigns, carefully removing all indications that the bar had been tampered with. On his way from the Transvaal to Cape Colony he met with a party of Boers, who overhauled him from head to foot, and examined his bundle, in which was the innocent-looking soap. The Boers took the few shillings he had in his pocket, and, giving him several kicks and cuffs, ordered him to clear out.

EXPERIENCE OF A KAFIR.

Another native, who came down from the Nigel, passed through the Boer lines. Charlestown (Natal) he found demolished, the houses being knocked to pieces and everything taken out. The Boers told him to hurry on or they would shoot him. At Nyoka a Boer told him to hand over his money, and threatened to shoot him if he did not look sharp. Some £7 was taken from him and £6 from his companion. Their bundles were opened, and the Boers took the bread they carried and devoured it. At Ingagane the canteen and stores were looted and Boers were lying about drunk. After he had passed on he heard a report, and a bullet whizzed by, and a Boer told him to come back quickly. He asked what harm he had done, and was told not to talk, but to catch fowls. This he did, and having plucked them was told he might go on.
The native then went along the hills toward Elandslaagte, but Boers seemed to be everywhere. He next saw a train from Ladysmith coming very slowly, and he wondered if it were a Dutch train. Then he saw a flash and heard the report of a cannon, and the train stood still. The firing came from the train, but he could see no one. The Boers spread right and left and fired at the train, and then began to run when the train moved.
The train stopped again, and a shell was fired and burst among the Boers, making the stones fly everywhere, and many Boers Simon's Town, Cape Colony. The officers the soldiers came out of the train and fired their rifles until they were partly hidden by smoke. After a time all was quiet. The mounted troops with long sticks (the Lancers) pursued the Boers, stabbing them as they fled from hill to hill. Some begged for mercy, and these were not killed. Some Boers left their horses and guns and ran on foot. Horses were speared as well as riders. The horses were out of condition and could not run, so that the soldiers soon overtook them.
The following Sunday he was at Ladysmith and saw the troops coming back. The trains were full of soldiers, who were joking and offering to sell the horses and guns they had captured very cheap.
After a rough voyage from Durban, the first batch of Boer prisoners has arrived at Simon's Town, Cape Colony. The officers of the captured forces were well-dressed, men, in plain clothes, and to them were allotted separate quarters. The prisoners having been all conveyed to the guardship, with the exception of the wounded, who were brought on board later. Capt. Bruce of H. M. S. Monarch briefly addressed them, pointing out that by the fortune of war they were detained as prisoners on board the ship, but that while they were so detained they had nothing to fear, so far as their treatment was concerned; and, indeed, there is no doubt that the naval authorities at Simon's Town will do all in their power to make the lot of those who are now in their custody as endurable as possible.
It may be remarked that at the recent American banquet in Cape Town Capt. Bruce represented the British Navy, and, in the course of a breezy speech, he suggested the adoption of the word "brothers," instead of "cousins," to indicate the relationship between Britishers and Americans. The number of the prisoners was 185 Transvaal burghers and four natives. Commandant Schiel was with this batch.

TREATMENT OF BRITISH PRISONERS.

An account of the arrival of British prisoners at Pretoria is of interest. These consisted of 179 men and 9 officers of the Eighteenth Hussars, Dublin Fusiliers, and King's Royal Rifles, captured near Dundee. They entrained at Danhauser under a burgher escort, the men in ten covered trucks, the officers in a first-class carriage, and two wounded in a separate van. Although an enormous crowd was at Pretoria station, including mounted burghers, town burghers, and a posse of police, there was no demonstration whatever, the captives being conducted in funeral-like silence, and the utmost order and decorum prevailing. The wounded were first conveyed to the hospital by Red Cross officers, and the rank and file marched through the streets to the racecourse, passing near the Presidency en route, under a mounted burgher escort. They camped on the spot where the Jameson troopers were confined nearly four years ago, every attention being shown to the prisoners under the circumstances.
The officers looked well, some of them smoking cigarettes on leaving the train. The prisoners sleep under the grand stand, where there is ample room. The officers have a separate building, and on giving their word of honor not to attempt to escape, will have the use of the whole of the inclosure. Fifty town burghers guard the place.
Guns and garrison have been sent post haste to the Natal base from the fort on Hospital Hill, Johannesburg, so that the fort is now denuded. Only one gun and a few men under Lieut. von Bulwig now remain. Lieut. van Dam has been appointed Special Commandant of Johannesburg, in succession to Commandant Schutte, who threatened to resign unless he were allowed to go to the front.
In fact, as soon as the reverse at Elandslaagte became known at Johannesburg, a fort is now denuded. Only one gun and great wave of "patriotism" is said to have swept over the Rand police of divers nationalities. There was something approaching a riot as the report of a reverse percolated through the police force, whose martial spirit it has been found recently difficult to restrain. There were many open vows of insubordination if orders were not immediately forthcoming to permit the men to proceed to the front. The news of the reverse at Elandslaagte seems to have brought the Government to a decision, and Commandant Schutte and the greater portion of the Rand police received orders to proceed to the front immediately. The commando was a large one, as many burghers had delayed their departure to the front in order to accompany Schutte.
Meanwhile the police have apparently been clamoring to be allowed to enter stores and "commandeer" any articles that they many find useful. Four men were arrested the other day, three of them being special police, for looting untenanted residences. It is stated Dr. Krause has received personal instructions from the President to prosecute looters with the utmost rigor of the law.

STRICT LAWS IN JOHANNESBURG.

No natives or colored people are allowed to be out in the streets of Johannesburg between the hours of 7 P. M. and 5 A. M. without special permits, contravention of this regulation being visited with a maximum fine of £5 or fourteen days' imprisonment, with or without fifteen lashes. White persons are not allowed out after 9 P. M. or before 5 A. M., subject to a penalty of £10 or eight days, with or without hard labor. A very stringent liquor edict is being enforced. Three detectives called at the Frascati Buffet and asked for liquor. They were denied, but on subsequently urging that they required it medicinally they were supplied. The proprietor was then informed that he had been trapped, and in pursuance to a clause in the proclamation which prescribes the confiscation and destruction of all drink discovered at places suspected, the establishment was ransacked and all liquor found was removed. Bail of £500 was immediately imposed on the proprietor. As much as 30s. is being offered for a bottle of whisky, and the suburban Field Cornets are besieged by men and women who claim that brandy is necessary to them as a medicament.
Great consternation was caused in the Transvaal by the sighting of a fire balloon, carrying a big light, which was observed first in Middleburg, traveling in the direction of Pretoria. Mausers and other guns were got ready for its reception at Pretoria and Johannesburg.
A train containing 500 prisoners from all the jails in the Transvaal was sent to Delagoa Bay, where it was stopped by order of the Portuguese authorities, who refused to receive them, sending the train across the border again, whereupon the Transvaal authorities made the passengers disembark from the train, and it is very probable that they will make their way to Lorenzo Marques on foot. It is strapped to a road coach. One of these traps was shown at the recent Horse Show, and it occasioned some comment among people who were pretty well up on carriages, but the puzzle was not solved, as the trap was one that was sent out of the ring early in the game. A number of these carts have lately been made for shipment to the fashionable country places.
A number of people from the Rand who passed through Delagoa Bay a short time ago have returned to that port in preference to remaining at Durban. They consider that by staying at Delagoa Bay they will have a better chance of getting in first at the finish.

WELL-KNOWN BOERS CAPTURED.

Among those killed at the battle of Elandslaagte was Dr. H. J. Coster, advocate of the High Court of the Transvaal. He was a native of Holland, and had won the respect and esteem of all with whom he came in contact, of whatever nationality. A cultured man and a true gentleman, he succeeded in winning golden opinions, both within and without the circle of the profession which he followed with such brilliant success, and the best tribute to his memory can be found in the fact that by all Britishers who knew the man nothing but the deepest regret is felt and expressed that he has been sacrificed to a cause which, from a strong sense of duty to his adopted country, he saw fit to espouse.
It was Dr. Coster who conducted the trial of the Johannesburg reformers. As the accused had pleaded guilty, his work on behalf of the State was confined to the reading of formal evidence and the address to the bench. His address was characterised by a great deal of bitterness toward the accused, against whom he prayed for the passing of the capital sentence. The attitude assumed by Dr. Coster in this case raised a good deal of indignation and bitterness against him, whether justly or not there are no means of ascertaining.
Another important prisoner of the British is Mr. v. d. Witt Hamer, also a Hollander, and the sole representative of his race who exercises legislative functions in the Transvaal. He first settled in Natal, but went to the Transvaal with the rush that ensued on the discovery of the De Kaap gold fields, and in time was appointed Mining Commissioner at Barberton. As member of the Second Raad of Barberton, he has proved one of the most capable men of that body.

TRAINING LIBRARY WORKERS.

System Pursued in Teaching Novices How to Perform the Duties of a Librarian.

There is a constantly increasing work in the public and private libraries of the country, and the requirements for the work are constantly becoming more difficult. There is a specialization in library work, as in other kinds of employment, and for it a special training is necessary. A correspondent of THE TIMES has asked how to obtain a library position, what to do, and to whom to apply.
For the work a training is absolutely indispensable, and though there are excellent librarians who began their work before library schools were in existence, they are now qualified by years of experience. There are four library schools in this country. The school in the State Library at Albany is the oldest, and college graduates are preferred for students, and a two years' course is obligatory. The nearest school for New Yorkers is that of Pratt Institute, in Brooklyn. This is in close touch with the large circulating library of the institute, and the students receive the benefit of it. The entrance examinations take place every June, and a class of twenty is selected from among the candidates who pass the best examinations, their general appearance of fitness for the work being also taken into consideration. The course is for one year, with an optional second year course for special work, such as historical and bibliographical, or work for children's libraries. The pupils of the school take up advanced cataloguing and bibliography at the Lenox Library.
The entrance examinations are not simple, and presuppose a large amount of general information. There is no preparatory course for the work, and the school authorities recommend as the best preparation a review of general history and literature, particularly that of England and America, with notes of important recent and current events. The list of questions used at one examination are sometimes sent to those who wish to enter for examination to give a general idea of their scope.
A few questions that were given at the examination last year will give a general idea of these. "What were the important results of the Wars of the Roses?" "Trace the territorial expansion of England since the reign of Elizabeth?" "Discuss the doctrine of States rights, showing its origin, development, and the part it played in the civil war?" "What ideas do the following men and women stand for?" Sixteen names are given here, and there must be answers for ten. Some of the names are Robert Owen, Froebel, Demosthenes, Frances Willard, Cato the Elder, Jean Jacques Rousseau, and Edward Bellamy. "Name the five greatest epics in literature." "Who were the greatest dramatists of Greece, England, France, and Germany, and name a play of each?" There were other questions of many kinds, and translations to be made of simple sentences and titles in French and German. This will give some idea of what is required of the would-be librarian as a foundation.
The course requires the entire time of the students, and they are not able to carry on any other line of work during the three terms of the year. The tuition per term for the first year is $25 and for the second year $15. The cost of materials amounts to from $20 to $25. A part of the work of the first year consists of trips to different cities under the personal conduct of the director. These are not obligatory, but students are advised to take them, as valuable class exercise, where libraries are visited. This makes an additional cost of something like $25. Those who desire to enter the school should send to the Director of Pratt Institute for an application blank. The chances of entrance are not affected by the order of application. The examinations are entirely competitive. Certificates of the institute are given to the students who satisfactorily complete the course. Positions are not guaranteed, but well-trained students of ability do not have great difficulty in finding them.
In addition to these regular schools there is a system of apprenticeship in other libraries where the student enters and remains for a certain period without remuneration, thus obtaining the desired education. At the Public Library of New York, in Astor Place, Dr. John S. Billings, the director, takes a certain number of apprentices each year. They must guarantee to remain without pay for nine months. The first three months they receive their primary instruction in library work, and after that they begin to be of some little assistance, and gradually progress in their knowledge of library work, according to their respective abilities. Some of them may be taken into the library as assistants after this, but that does not follow. There is no guarantee of a position when the period of tuition is completed.
The New York Free Circulating Library, which has many branches, undertook to train apprentices while Arthur E. Bostwick was librarian there, and the work has been continued. There is no special period of study, and the students are advanced as fast as possible, according to their ability. It was expected that this same system of apprenticeship would obtain in the Brooklyn Public Library, where Mr. Bostwick is now in charge, but the fact that this library is the only one which comes directly under municipal control will make it necessary for students to pass a civil service entrance examination. What this will be is not yet known. An application for a position in the library service, which was printed before it was known that the civil service examination would be necessary, asks a general list of questions regarding the name, age, birth, &c., of the applicant, the state of health. "Are you strong?" "Is your eyesight defective?" "Have you any infirmities which would disqualify you for the position you seek?" "What is your education?" &c. The position of librarian requires good physical as well as mental conditions.

A Golf Cart Is the Latest Thing.

If one would be thoroughly up to date when he drives to the golf links he must now go there in his golfing cart, for that is the newest thing that the carriage makers have turned out. The cart is a four-wheeled affair and looks very like a dog cart or a game cart. The body has one of those moderately high boxlike bodies, with a concave curve at the back, the whole made of solid wood, instead of being perforated with holes as is done with the game carts—originally intended to take gamecocks to the pits, and through which perforations air was admitted to the fowls—or slatted as are the dog carts, the object in this instance being to admit light and air to the dogs. A fellow's bundle of golf clubs needs neither light nor air, and so they are carried in a basket strapped diagonally across the rear of the cart, much as the horn basket is strapped to a road coach. One of these traps was shown at the recent Horse Show, and it occasioned some comment among people who were pretty well up on carriages, but the puzzle was not solved, as the trap was one that was sent out of the ring early in the game. A number of these carts have lately been made for shipment to the fashionable country places.

The Holiday Charm of a Great Store.

Emerson says that "Men are made each with some triumphant superiority, which, through some adaptation of fingers, or ear, or eye, or ciphering, or musical, or literary craft, enriches the community with a new art." Isn't a great store like this much the same as an individual? Isn't its triumphs, its superiorities, the handicraft of distinctive characteristics, and isn't its own accomplishment in the gathering, the display, the distribution of the very best and most economical in merchandise, the enriching of others? Its great enlargements and betterments have been a natural outcome due to your appreciation of these distinctive characteristics. So in the great improvements we have made, selfish, perhaps, yet with the main idea in view (which has been from the foundation of the business), that they must "enrich" you. Never was there a better time to fully realize the convenience, comfort and pleasure of the enlargements. From the basement, than which there's none as good in Greater New York, up through the whole store, a magic change almost has taken place. More room for shopping, pleasant, airy, light, cheerful—in fact, you will find this the most pleasant and comfortable store to visit anywhere. The holiday charm, with all the attractions of beautiful, uncommon, new and unusual things, is in every nook and corner, and yet withal the practical side ready to greet those who wish to take advantage of it. And with all this goes our guarantee that our prices must be the lowest.

A Great Display of Ferns One of the new features in our enlarged basement will be the first showing of Nickel Mounted and Hand Painted Jardinieres filled with Ferns of almost every description—the prices are very low—in fact, the maker gave this lot to us for less than cost simply to have these goods in "Loeser's" store. Take a look at them.

Incomparable Book Offers.

Our Book Store, still in its infancy really, has already become one of the most prominen and interesting features of this growing business. Without meaning to be boastful, it is the only thoroughly up-to-date Book Store in Brooklyn. Come and test its merits for yourself. Here are some incomparable offers:

The Umbrella Chance of '99.

$3.00 to $5.00 Kinds for $2.49.

This is an umbrella opportunity that deserves a longer story because it is one of the best of our very many and well-known extraordinary umbrella offers. It's a lot of 26 and 28 in. Umbrellas, half for men and half for women. The Umbrella—that is, the covering, frame, etc.—is our regular "Economist," which is well known for service and guaranteed for one year. The covering of the Economist is not pure silk, but the finest mixed material; the warp is Lisle thread; balance silk which cannot be beaten for good service, better than pure silk. But the best of the story is in the Handles which we have had put on this lot of Economist Umbrellas. They are Ivory, Pearl, Tortoise Shell, Rare Natural Woods and some very high-class Dresdens from Donart & Co. None of the handles are worth less than a dollar in the regular way and most run up to $5.00 and $6.00, so that we offer you without exaggeration $3.00 to $5.00 Umbrellas at $2.49 each. There are 700 of them, but they won't last long.

Pianola Recitals Daily

On the Third Floor New Building.

The Pianola is the most wonderful invention of the age. It is almost human. By means of it anybody can immediately play the piano, and put into that instrument feeling, expression, touch, individuality direct from the heart. We are having recitals every day between 10.30 and 12.30 and between 3 and 5 o'clock. The Pianola is well worth seeing, and besides you will enjoy the music. Come and see it. Take elevator to third floor new building.

Our New Tea Room.

Take Revolving Stairway to Second Floor.

We have opened a thoroughly complete, convenient and accessible Tea Room and Restaurant on the Second Floor of our New Building. Our chief object has not been a commercial one, but rather the accommodation of our customers.
No expense or talent has been spared on the room and its accessories. Spacious, airy, cheerful, light, richly furnished, beautifully and attractively decorated—a room that will at once invite rest, comfort and enjoyment. The cuisine and service will be the very best that money can command, and of course it goes without saying, the very best in Brooklyn. A cozy, inviting place where one may come and restfully enjoy a delicious cup of tea of her own choosing, a dainty bit of salad, delicate breads, pastry or sweetmeats.

Why Not Furs For Christmas?

BRITISH MEET SEVERE REVERSE

Gen. Gatacre Repulsed by the Boers at Stormberg.

HIS CASUALTIES OVER 600

May Be Much Higher, as His List Is Incomplete.

GUIDES MISLED HIM

Attacked Impregnable Boer Position with 4,000 Men.

Burghers Waited Until British Troops Were on Them, Then Opened Hot Fire—After a Three Hours' Fight Gatacre Retreated.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—The War Office publishes the following dispatch from Gen. Forestier-Walker at Cape Town:

"Gatacre reports: 'Deeply regret to inform you that I met with a serious reverse in the attack on Stormberg. I was mislead as to the enemy's position by the guides and found impracticable ground.'

"Casualties, so far as known at present, are:

ROYAL IRISH RIFLES.

Wounded.—Lieut. Col. Eager, Major Seaton, Capt. Bell, Capt. Kelly, Lieut. Stephens, and Lieut. Barnardston.

SUFFOLK REGIMENT.

Wounded.—Second Lieut. Maynard and twelve men. Missing.—Capt. Weir, Lieut. Christie, Second Lieut. Rodney, and 290 men.

SEVENTY-FOURTH FIELD BATTERY.

Severely Wounded.—Lieut. Lewis and three men. Slightly Wounded.—Two men.

SEVENTY-SEVENTH FIELD BATTERY.

Killed.—One gunner. Wounded.—Major Perceval

NORTHUMBERLAND FUSILIERS.

Missing.—Major Stevens, Capt. Fletcher, Capt. Morley, Second Lieut. Wake, Second Lieut. Coulson, and Lieut. Radcliffe, (of the Dorsetshires) 306 non-commissioned officers and men.

ROYAL BERKSHIRE REGIMENT.

Killed.—One private.

"The remainder of my casualties will be wired as soon as ascertained."

DETAILS OF THE FIGHT.

The Times publishes the following dispatch from Molteno:

"Gen. Gatacre attempted to assault the Boer position at Stormberg at dawn to-day, (Sunday.) The guides led us wrong, and we were surprised while in fours, and after a very trying night march. Our retirement was effected in excellent order, there being no hurry even at the most critical time. The Northumberlands and Irish Rifles behaved as if on review day. I fear our losses are heavy. One of our guns we had to abandon."

STRENGTH OF THE ENEMY.

The War Office has received the following dispatch from Cape Town, dated Saturday night:

"The position of the enemy in Stormberg district last night was the following: At Stormberg six laagers; at Dordrecht 800 men; twenty-three miles south of Sterkstroom, 220 men.

"Major Elliott reports that Dalgetty, with a force, has gone toward Dordrecht to cooperate with Gatacre.

MOLTENO, Cape Colony, Dec. 10.—Gen. Gatacre's movement may be termed a reconnoissance in force. Its object was to ascertain the strength of the position of the Boers, who were strongly intrenchel along the Stormberg Range. He left Putter's Kraal shortly after noon yesterday, with a fighting force slightly over 4,000 men.

GATACRE'S NIGHT MARCH.

Leaving Molteno at 9 o'clock last evening, he made a memorable night march toward Stormberg over the rocks and veldt. There was no sound except a steady tramp, and there were no distinguishing lights, the bright moon having gone down about 11:30 o'clock.

The column arrived safe within a couple of miles of its destination, the only incidents of the march being an occasional sudden call of "Halt!" under the belief that the Boers were near.

THE BOERS OPEN FIRE.

Suddenly a terrific fire opened simultaneously on the British front and right flank. The Royal Irish Rifles, which formed the advance, sought shelter behind a neighboring kopje, and were speedily joined by the remainder of the column. It was soon found, however, that this position also was covered by Boer guns, which were more powerful than had been supposed. The troops, therefore, sought a safer position about half a mile away, two batteries in the meantime engaging the Boers and covering the troops in their withdrawal.

ACTION BECOMES GENERAL.

The action now became general at long range, and a detachment of mounted infantry moved northward with a view of getting on the enemy's right flank. Suddenly a strong commando was seen moving from the north, and the Royal Irish Rifles and the Northumberland Regiment were sent out to meet it.

It was soon discovered, however, that the Boers had machine guns well placed, and the British were compelled to face a terrible fire.

THE BRITISH RETREAT.

Finding it impossible to hold the position in the face of an enemy apparently superior in position, numbers, and artillery, the British retired on Molteno, the Boers following up the retirement closely and bringing two big guns to bear on the retiring column.

The engagement began at 4:15 A. M. and the British retired at 7 A. M.

The Position of Stormberg.

Stormberg is situated near the summit of a mountain range of the same name, an offset of the Drakensberg, in the northern part of Cape Colony. It occupies an important strategic position, at the junction of two railroads, one extending southeast to East London on the coast, and the other, a branch line eighty-three miles long, connecting with the Port Elizabeth Railway at Middleberg. The place was used by the British in the early part of the war as a base of supplies, and large stores were accumulated there, but Gen. Buller ordered its evacuation soon after his arrival in Cape Colony. Moeteno is on the railway, about twelve miles from Stormberg, and sixteen miles south of Burghersdorp.

Major Gen. Gatacre's Record.

When Major Gen. Gatacre was selected for his present command in South Africa there was much criticism in the London newspapers and the military clubs with regard to the appointment. Gen. Gatacre is what is known as an "office general," and it was tacitly admitted by the authorities of the War Office that he was selected in order to provide a sop for the clique of which he forms a unit. He has seen little active service, none at all under the conditions which the British troops have to face in the present contest, and it was freely prophesied in London, when the war began, that disaster would overtake any column under his command.

Gen. Gatacre was born in 1843, and entered the Seventy-seventh Foot as a subaltern in 1862. In 1874 he passed the staff college examination, and the following year was appointed to be instructor in surveying at the Royal Military College at Sandhurst. He saw no active service until 1888, and then only as Quartermaster General, acting in that capacity in the Hazara expedition. He took part in the Burmese campaign of 1889, but his only record for valuable active service was in the Chitral campaign of 1895, in which he conducted the action at Mamugal and the passage of the Janbati and Lowari Passes. Afterward he took part in the Soudan campaign of 1888.

EFFECTS OF THE DISASTER.

Cape Colony Dutch Now Likely to Join the Boers—Gen. Methuen's Position More Precarious.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—It is hardly too much to regard Gen. Gatacre's repulse near Stormberg as the most serious defeat British arms have yet sustained in the whole campaign. Already the official advices show that 2 men were killed, 9 officers and 17 men were wounded, and 9 officers and 596 men are missing.

But it is evident that the worst is not yet known. The proportion of wounded and killed is so small when compared with the missing, who are undoubtedly prisoners in the hands of the Boers, that the supplementary list of casualties is awaited with serious misgivings.

It is also feared that there were serious losses of guns and equipment.

The most serious aspect of the affair is the effect it is likely to have on the Dutch in Cape Colony, who have been wavering as to whether to throw in their lot with the Boers. Hosts of the northern farmers are now likely to join the rebellion. The defeat is also serious because it will delay the junction of Gen. Gatacre with Gen. French at Naauw Poort. The plan was for their combined forces to relieve the pressure on Lord Methuen's column.

The disclosure of such a strong force at Stormberg was quite unexpected. Doubtless Gen. Gatacre was the victim of treacherous guides. But the result points also to the absence of proper cavalry scouting.

The British troops who recently occupied Arundel are advancing. They have had several skirmishes, but no casualties. Three miles north of Arundel they found the Boers 2,000 strong.

BOERS AT MODDER RIVER.

British Bombard Their Position with Lyddite Shells—All Quiet at Kimberley and Mafeking.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—The Pretoria reports of renewed fighting at Modder River originated from the fact that the British with a team of thirty-two oxen hauled a naval gun to the top of a high ridge north of Modder River Town, whence they fired lyddite shells on the Boer position at a range of 6,700 yards, where the enemy was apparently constructing an emplacement for a forty-pounder. The lyddite shells appeared to do immense damage. The Boers retired; but the incident is interesting as showing that the Boers are still in position quite close to Modder River.

The engineers report that it would take two months to rebuild the iron bridge. Lord Methuen is still compelled to ride about in a dogcart, as his wound prevents him going on horseback. Should the rains destroy the temporary bridge, there is enough rolling stock on the north side of the river to serve Lord Methuen's purpose.

The War Office has made public a dispatch from Cape Town, dated Dec. 9, as follows:

"The railway bridge at Modder River was completed Dec. 7. Methuen reports that he made a demonstration up the line of the railway at daylight to-day with artillery. The enemy did not respond. Methuen is receiving the remainder of his reinforcements and supplies. He has established detached posts on his lines of communication.

"Mafeking reports all well on Nov. 30."

It is reported that the Boers are busy making intrenchments at Spyfontein. Several tiers of works are beginning to appear at the foot of the heights. The force fired on by the British naval gun is believed to form the right wing of the enemy's main body, thrown forward for patrolling and scouting purposes. It is reported that the bad water at Spyfontein threatens an epidemic of typhoid.

Kimberley reports all quiet there up to Dec. 7, and that the pressure of the investment is diminished.

It is rumored from Cape Town that the Boers attacked Kimberley at close quarters Dec. 8, but were repulsed with heavy loss.

Two shallow-draught river gunboats are being prepared at Chatham for service in South Africa. Each will carry two six-pounders, quick-firers, and four Maxims.

EXPLOSION AT COLENSO.

Believed that the Boers Have Blown Up Highway Bridge.

FRERE CAMP, Natal, Dec. 10.—6 P. M.—Heliographic communication with Ladysmith continues daily. Gen. Schalkburger and Commandant Louis Botha are in command of the forces investing Ladysmith. The Boers' horses are said to be in poor condition.

A heavy report was heard in the direction of Colenso to-day. The sound was followed by a great cloud of smoke. The supposition is that the enemy had blown up the highway bridge.

CAPTURE OF THE BOER GUNS.

Eighteenth Hussars Suffered Heavily—Gen. White Thanks Officers.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—A special dispatch from Ladysmith, by way of Frere, adds to the War Office account, cabled Saturday, of the capture of the Boer guns near Pepworth Hill. It says:

"Gen. Brockelhurst, with cavalry and artillery, reconnoitred in the direction of Pepworth Hill with a view of cutting off the Boer retreat; but he found the position still strongly held. The Eighteenth Hussars, pushing forward, drew a furious fire and suffered heavily, losing four killed and seventeen wounded.

"The Boers fired incessantly as the British slowly retired. At a special parade afterwards Gen. White thanked Gen. Hunter and all engaged, especially Major Henderson, for brilliant work."

NATIVE UPRISING REPORTED.

Four Bechuana Chiefs, It Is Said, Will Attack the Boers.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—A dispatch from Cape Town to The Daily Mail, dated Dec. 7, says:

"News that Chiefs Khama, Linchwe, Bathoen, and Sechell, with their people in Bechuanaland, have risen to attack the Boers seriously complicates the situation.

"It is probable that the Basutos and other tribesmen will follow their example."

CONSUL MACRUM'S MISSION.

Believed that He Will Act as an Emissary from Krueger to President McKinley.

Special to The New York Times.

EAST LIVERPOOL, Ohio, Dec. 10.—Friends in this city of Charles E. Macrum, until recently United States Consul at Pretoria, who is returning to this country with important information for the State Department which he was unwilling to risk cabling, believe that his most recent letters furnish a clew to his mysterious mission. In letter after letter Macrum stated plainly that he believed that the Boers were being forced into an unjust war.

Mr. Macrum's friends believe that on his return he will amply justify his action. They believe that the story told will be sensational and that England selected him, despite his personal opinions, simply to bolster up the Anglo-American alliance, that the "alliance" has been used to stand off any European intervention in behalf of the Boers.

The important State secrets that he is bringing in person are from President Krueger, who has asked Macrum to return to the United States with an appeal to the President and Congress, asking this country, if it is not in alliance with Great Britain, to show it to the world and render as great aid to the Transvaal Republic as France did to the American. Krueger asserts that by so doing the United States will no longer prevent European intervention, which will immediately be made with the purpose of bringing the war to a close on honorable terms to the Dutch Republic.

BOERS WILL HOLD CHURCHILL.

They Have Decided to Rank Him as a Combatant Officer.

FRERE CAMP, Natal, Dec. 10.—The Transvaal Government has decided to consider Winston Churchill, who was captured Nov. 15 between Estcourt and Chieveley, a combatant officer and to retain him as a prisoner.

Mr. Churchill has applied to Gen. Buller, with a view of getting an exchange.

Baron Emly Again Punished.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—The Earl of Dunraven, Lord Lieutenant of Limerick, acting under instructions from Dublin Castle, has removed from the office of Deputy Lieutenant of the County Baron Emly, who was recently removed from his position as Magistrate by Lord Ashbourne, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, because of his anti-British comments on the war in South Africa.

Hard Work for the Canadians.

ORANGE RIVER, Dec. 9—Half the men of the Canadian contingent have gone forward. Like the Australian contingent, they have been put to stiff work since their arrival, and have been building sidings, erecting platforms, and rendering the usual routine service. They are in excellent condition and very zealous.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR THE WAR.

Englishwoman Blames the British Government and the Uitlanders.

Before the Society for Ethical Culture in Carnegie Lyceum Mrs. P. A. Widdrington of London delivered yesterday an address upon the moral questions involved in the Transvaal war. While disclaiming any disloyalty to her native country, and expressing the hope that the British arms would be successful in South Africa, so that unnecessary loss of life might be avoided, Mrs. Widdrington placed the full responsibility for the war upon the British Government and the greed for gold of the Uitlanders.

"The Boers," she said, "loving their land, are in South Africa permanently; the Uitlanders, desiring only gold, to be spent elsewhere when acquired, are in the Transvaal temporarily. The Uitlanders, demanding representation in the Volksraad when they were taxed by a race they hated, were told by the Boers to become burghers and fight for the republic against invasion. They replied that they were in the country to make money and not to fight. Relations became more strained until the Jameson raid, which brought matters to a crisis. Here England lost an opportunity to settle everything and adjust all differences as an entirely disinterested country, desiring only peace in South Africa. However, Great Britain compromised herself fatally over the Jameson raid. Had the policy announced by Mr. Chamberlain been followed instead of an entirely different one, the war would not now be going on. The reason for Mr. Chamberlain's departure from this policy remains one of the most interesting of political mysteries.

"It is useless to attempt to shift the responsibility for the war upon the Boers. It is true that they sent England an ultimatum; true that they invaded British territory; but only when they saw that there was no chance of England granting their just demands and that it was the determination to force the Transvaal to take up arms."

ARE JEALOUS OF GEN. WOOD.

Officers in Cuba Do Not Want Him to be Military Governor.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—If Gen. Leonard Wood is made Military Governor of Cuba, he will probably have under him few, if any, of the general officers who are now stationed in the island. There is so much jealousy among the various officers there that it would be impossible to make one of them Military Governor without giving offense to others. This is particularly the case with Gen. Wood, for the reason that he was junior to the others. At the outbreak of the Spanish war he was a Surgeon, and in the volunteer army he has been the junior of the other Generals who are in command in Cuba.

The feeling is such that Gen. James H. Wilson is said to have declared that he would resign rather than serve under Gen. Wood in Cuba. Gen. Brooke will return to the United States if Gen. Wood is appointed and it is regarded as certain that others will be recalled.

Aside from the reported feeling against Wood's appointment on the ground that he is junior to the others, a certain degree of jealousy has been excited by the fact that although he has had the hardest province in Cuba to handle by reason of the disorderly elements there, he has escaped all criticism and has received only commendation, while some of his seniors have not been so fortunate. Flaws have been found in the administrations of other Generals, but the comments on Wood's administration have formed a steady stream of praise. This, it is said, has excited some jealousy among officers who have not shared this good fortune.

SPANIARDS WANT DAMAGES

Give Their Version of the Subig Bay Incident of July, 1898.

CLAIM THEY WERE DECEIVED

Say They Surrendered on Capt. Coghlan's Promise that They Would Not Be Delivered to Filipinos.

MANILA, Dec. 10.—Col. Julio del Rio, who is among the released Spaniards that have just arrived here, gives an interesting version of the famous Irene incident in Subig Bay in July of last year. He was formerly in command of the Spanish troops in the Olongapo District. His narrative is corroborated by Señor Rafael Rosello, a wealthy Spanish merchant, who also fell into the hands of the insurgents.

Both declare that the Spaniards surrendered to Capt. Coghlan of the United States cruiser Raleigh on an express agreement that they were not to be given up to the Filipinos; and they assert that the Spanish Government has promised to press their claims against the United States for their long imprisonment.

According to their story, a thousand insurgents were besieging Olongapo, where there were two companies of marines and a battalion of artillery, together with many civilians. The German cruiser Irene entered the harbor to take the women and children on board. At this juncture the insurgent steamer Filipinas, flying the insurgent flag, started to leave. The Irene threw a shot across her bow, claiming the right to stop her, as Germany had not recognized the insurgent flag. The Filipinas then raised a white flag and departed. When she returned, she was flying the insurgent flag and was accompanied by the United States warships Concord and Raleigh. The Irene was then leaving the harbor with non-combatants.

"Without the least warning," say Col. del Rio and Señor Rosello, "the American warships began to bombard us, firing about twenty-five shots. Seeing that resistance was useless, as our guns had never been mounted, we raised the white flag.

"Capt. Coghlan came ashore with several officers, and it was expressly stipulated that the surrender was to the Americans alone. Capt. Coghlan was asked to promise that the Spaniards should not be delivered to the insurgents, and when he had given his pledge, the entire garrison surrendered.

"The Americans sailed away on the evening of the 7th, leaving the garrison practically unarmed. They returned on the 8th. Meanwhile the insurgents had repeatedly fired upon the town. Capt. Coghlan now ordered the Spaniards to embark on the Filipinas. When they protested, he said that, although in the hands of the insurgents, they would be treated as American prisoners.

"Nine civilians, all merchants, were placed on board the Filipinas, and, despite their protests, were kept imprisoned on the vessel at Olongapo until their recent release."

Señor Rosello, who is chiefly responsible for the foregoing statement, admits that, except for one attempt to rob the merchants, for which Aguinaldo punished the officers of the Filipinas by reducing them, all were well treated.

Col. del Rio, in a separate statement, says:

"Capt. Coghlan gave his word that our capitulation would be accepted as it was made, that is, to the Americans. He promised that we should not be given into the hands of the insurgents, and I believe he was sincere.

"Later the Concord went to Cavite for instructions, returning with an order from Admiral Dewey that we were to be handed over to the insurgents."

Col. del Rio and Señor Rosello declare that the Irene left her anchorage at 8 o'clock in the morning and that the American warships arrived at 10:30, passing the German cruiser as she was leaving the bay. They express surprise at the popular belief that the Irene slipped her cable on the appearance of the Concord and the Raleigh.

SPANIARDS AIDED AMERICANS.

Fought Against Insurgents in the Attack on Vigan.

MANILA, Dec. 10.—During the recent attack by the insurgents upon Vigan the Filipinos obtained possession of the plaza and of a church in the centre of the town, from which the Americans dislodged them. It seems that the escaped Spaniards obtained guns, and fought with the Americans against the insurgents.

FILIPINOS MEET DEFEAT.

One Hundred Attack Thirty Americans Infantrymen and Lose Eighteen Killed and Nine Captured.

MANILA, Dec. 10.—Near Baliuag yesterday a force of 100 insurgents attacked a wagon train, escorted by thirty men of the Sixteenth Infantry. A sharp engagement followed.

The Filipinos lost eighteen in killed and nine in captured.

CAPTURES A REBEL CAMP.

Major Spence Defeats Insurgents in the Tanuan District.

MANILA, Dec. 10.—Major Spence, with a column of the Thirty-second Regiment, captured a new insurgent camp, an uncompleted stronghold, in the Tanuan District.

He left Dinalupan at daybreak yesterday and marched ten miles along mountain trails, finally encountering a large band of insurgents who retreated after a brief skirmish. The Americans had no losses.

REBELS GIVE UP THE FIGHT?

MANILA, Dec. 10.—An expedition headed by the battleship Oregon left Manila for Subig last night.

It is reported that the Filipino commander, Gen. Alejandrino, with his staff, has surrendered to Gen. MacArthur; and there is also a rumor that Alejandrino is at Aguilar suffering from a wound received in a fight between insurgents and bandits, and that he will be given an opportunity to surrender and will be properly cared for.

AMERICAN SOLDIERS DISAPPEAR.

It Is Thought Four Were Captured in the Vicinity of Angeles.

MANILA, Dec. 10.—Three Americans who, with a Commissary Sergeant of the Twelfth Infantry, were traveling from San Fernando to Angeles, left their escort for a moment and went into the bush. As they did not return speedily, a search was made for them, but they could not be found. They were probably captured by the rebels.

A small orderly disappeared between Angeles and Bamban. He is also supposed to have been captured.

Filipino Records and Money Found.

MANILA, Dec. 10.—The records of the Treasury of the so-called Filipino Government, together with a quantity of paper money and another Mordenfeldt, have been found at Mangatarem.

The Zealandia Arrives from Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 10.—The United States transport Zealandia arrived to-day from Manila with ten passengers, among whom were Capt. T. P. Dorris, master of the wrecked transport Morgan City; Major Charles McClure, Capt. C. L. Porter, United States Army, and two discharged soldiers.

200 SOLDIERS POISONED.

A Lieutenant of the Thirty-ninth Says Acids from Refrigerating Plant Spoiled Meat on Transports.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mont., Dec. 10.—According to a letter received here to-day, 200 of the 1,300 men of the Thirty-fifth Regiment were poisoned while en route to Manila on the transports Rio de Janeiro and Sikh, by eating fresh beef supplied the vessels at Honolulu.

One man, a private, whose name is not given, died from the effects of eating the meat, despite heroic efforts of the surgeons.

The writer of the letter, a Lieutenant in the regiment, attributes the poisoning to a faulty refrigerating plant whereby some of the acids used in making ice came in contact with the meat, which to the eye and taste was apparently in first-class condition. Many narrow escapes are reported.

AMERICANS RECOVER MINES.

A Mexican Court Orders the Restoration of Illegally Seized Properties Valued at $20,000,000.

Special to The New York Times.

AUSTIN, Texas, Dec. 10.—A dispatch from Durango, Mexico, says that the Supreme Court of the State of Durango has rendered a decision as to the ownership of the Vacas, San Marcos and Bismarck Mines in that State by which the original American owners again come into possession of these properties, valued at not less than $20,000,000.

This valuation is not considered too high on account of the fact that prominent mining experts who have recently examined the properties state that there is from $9,000,000 to $10,000,000 in silver and gold ore in sight.

The mines were originally worked by Spaniards, and the ancient records on file among the archives of the State of Durango show that a fabulous amount of ore was taken out many years ago. The properties finally passed into the hands of an American company, composed of New York and New England capitalists. Among the principal stockholders was Mrs. Mary D. Grace of Syracuse, N. Y. Her son, W. J. Grace, a prominent business man of Missouri, was made Secretary of the company and placed in charge of the properties.

The owners made extensive improvements and worked the mines profitably for several years, but a rival company of Mexicans who became aware of the success of the American company, and, claiming title to the properties, took forcible possession of them, Secretary Grace being bodily ejected by a detachment of rurales.

The American owners appealed to the courts for protection, and after a prolonged legal battle received a favorable decision. Under the decision the action of the Mexicans in taking forcible possession of the mines was pronounced to be illegal and an order was made restoring the properties intact to Mr. Grace, as the only legal representative in Mexico of the original American owners.

DARING RESCUE AT A FIRE.

Woman Prevented from Jumping and Borne Along a Narrow Ledge to a Place of Safety.

A woman was rescued from a burning building at 153 Third Avenue yesterday afternoon by Thomas Delehanty of 153 Third Avenue, the adjoining house. The woman is Mrs. Mary Paterson, twenty-six years old. She came so near to losing her life that she is now ill from the shock and her condition is serious.

The building is a three-story brick structure. The ground floor is occupied by a milk depot and the second floor is untenanted. Mrs. Paterson lived in the front part of the third floor, and another family lived in the rear. The fire started in the basement and spread to the airshaft, and thence to the third floor. The only person at home was Mrs. Paterson, who had been asleep and was awakened by the fire.

Her room was then filling with smoke and the flames had cut her off from the stairway. She was so frightened that she ran to the front window and prepared to jump. People in the street saw her and cried "Don't jump. The firemen are coming." But the flames were close to her and the woman paid no heed to the shouts. She stood on the sill, covered her eyes with her hands, and would have jumped if she had not been seized by the rescuer.

Delehanty lives on the third floor of the next building and on a level with Mrs. Paterson's rooms. He heard the cries in the street and saw her peril. There is an eighteen-inch stone ledge running along under the windows of the two houses and out on this Delehanty crawled. The smoke was pouring out of the windows of No. 153 in blinding volume and he was at the window where Mrs. Paterson stood almost before the crowd realized what he was doing.

"Don't move and be quiet," he called to Mrs. Paterson. She looked at him and then fell forward in a faint. The weight of the woman in the peculiarly awkward position in which he had to stand almost sent the two over the ledge into the street. But grasping a blind with the right hand and holding the unconscious woman in his left arm, he balanced himself and started back. He had to stop several times to steady himself, but he finally got to his own window, where he was quickly relieved of his burden.

The cheers of the crowd in the street when the woman's safety was assured were heard blocks away. Delehanty was lionized, but modestly protested that he had done nothing remarkable. The fire caused a loss of $1,000.

TO EXONERATE LILLIAN KNOTT.

Complete Vindication Demanded If Larceny Charge Is False.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., Dec. 10.—The case of Miss Lillian Knott, the actress in jail on a larceny charge, is now being considered by the Grand Jury, Mayor Grey, and Chief of Police Doyle.

It is understood that the Grand Jury and the Mayor will insist on Miss Knott's complete vindication if the facts are found upon investigation to be as she has stated. The time standing against her was paid to-day by the Elks. Miss Knott would have been free but for the delay occasioned by the intercession of the Grand Jury and Mayor.

The colored man who figured in Miss Knott's story as befriending her has been found. He has informed the Grand Jury that Miss Knott's statement is true in every particular.

NITRO-GLYCERINE EXPLODES.

The Report Was Heard Thirty Miles Away—Much Damage Done.

BRADFORD, Penn., Dec. 10.—The nitro-glycerine magazine of the Pennsylvania Torpedo Company, located in Bolivar Hollow, one and a half miles from this city, blew up to-day with a report that was heard thirty miles away. The shock was felt at Olean, Salamanca, Ellicottville, and other surrounding towns. The magazine was blown to atoms and a hole made in the earth fifteen feet deep by thirty feet in circumference. Trees were torn into splinters at the scene of the explosion, and the brick of which the magazine walls were constructed was reduced to a reddish power, which covered the snow over a wide area.

Much damage was done in this city and vicinity by the breaking of glass, overturning of chimneys, &c. It is not believed any one was killed. An oil stove, fed automatically, is believed to have caused the explosion.

Upon occasion Masonic 100th Anniversary death of Washington the Pennsylvania Railroad will, on Dec. 11th and 12th, sell excursion tickets to Washington, D. C., and return at rate of $3.05 for the round trip, good to return until Dec. 18th. Round trip tickets Alexandria to Richmond $4.00, on sale Dec. 12, 13, and 14.—Adv.

DYING MAN ACCUSED WIFE

Police Do Not Believe Mrs. Koch Poisoned Her Husband.

MAKE NO CHARGE OF MURDER

Woman Held as a Suspicious Person Only.—Dr. Donlin Stamps Ante-Mortem Statement as a Lie.

George Koch, who conducted a water cure establishment at 226 East Eighty-third Street, and who died Saturday night in the Presbyterian Hospital from the effects of poison, denounced his wife as his murderess. The woman was arrested yesterday at Pleasantville on the Harlem Railroad. Her neighbors and the police, however, believe that Koch did not tell the truth when he accused the woman, whose life he had already ruined. They think that the poison was self-administered.

Koch was thirty-two years old, and his wife was thirteen years older. She has a boy eighteen years old, and a daughter fourteen years old, by a former marriage. Her first husband left her considerable property, much of which was accumulated by her own labor and thrift. The principal item was a tenement house in Eighty-fifth Street, near the East River, from which she contributed to her friends she received a net income of $130 a month.

Koch began his courtship about four years ago. Gossip of neighbors caused her then to leave this house, where she had made her home, and go with him to Paterson, N. J., where they opened a hydropathic institution on her capital, and where, after about two years, they were married by a Justice of the Peace. From the very beginning their life together was stormy. Time and again the woman left him, but always went back to him soon. She often had him arrested and punished for beating her. Even to this after the marriage they returned city and moved from place to place.

Koch gave the woman a beating on Dec. 2. She showed pieces of a heavy cane which he had broken upon her body. He then threatened her life, and she went to Mrs. Carrie Plesis, at 205 East Eighty-third Street, who has long been her friend. She showed her body covered with bruises and asked temporary shelter, which was accorded her, and then she moved into a small flat on the top floor of 218 East Eighty-fifth Street.

Her husband found out where she was and followed her. He spent a considerable time with her Friday morning, and accompanied her to a house in Varick Street, where her son is learning the trade of wood carving. Finally she escaped from him and went to Sherman Park, where her daughter was attending with friends.

Koch was seen around several saloons in the neighborhood of the water cure establishment later in the day and was drinking heavily. Boys playing in front of the house early Saturday morning were startled when he ran out with disheveled hair and asked them to call a policeman. Detective Finn of the East Eighty-eighth Street Station, who lives near by and who has often been called in to protect the woman from Koch, responded.

Finn found Koch lying on a bed in the back parlor in great pain. Looking down upon him, the detective said, "Well, you've taken something, have you?" "No. My wife poisoned me," the dying man responded. He then told Finn that while with her at the hat on Friday he asked for a glass of water, and she gave him a cup which he filled himself, but he believed that the deadly dose was in it. He had forgotten to look into it, he said. He declared that he had long believed that his wife meant to poison him, and for months would drink no coffee that she had prepared.

He was able to walk to the ambulance, and when he had gone Finn found under his pillow a heavy revolver fully loaded. Koch sank rapidly in the afternoon, and Coroner Fitzpatrick was summoned to take his ante-mortem statement. Finn, hearing of this, hurried to the hospital.

BROOKLYN TROLLEY BLOCKADE.

Cars Came into Collision, but None of the Passengers Is Hurt.

The Bergen Street trolley line in Brooklyn was blockaded for half an hour last night by a collision at 9 o'clock between Car 2,376 of the Marcy Avenue line and Car 2,317 of the Bergen Street line, which derailed both. The Marcy Avenue car, while swinging from the down-town Bergen Street track to the up-town track, was struck a broadside blow by the Bergen Street car, which had the right of way. Several windows in the Marcy Avenue car were smashed, but beyond a shaking up and scare none of the passengers was hurt.

ANOTHER KILLING IN KENTUCKY

Deputy City Marshal Shot and Militia Called Out.

Special to The New York Times.

CORBIN, Ky., Dec. 10.—A riot last night in which one man was killed and another wounded resulted in the militia being called out, and as friends of the men in custody have since come to town it is feared there may be more trouble.

City Marshal Bingham and his deputy, Henry Hartford, engaged in an altercation with Floyd Chadwell and Edward Chadwell of Clay County over the arrest of another member of the family. The result was the arrest of Edward Chadwell, who was turned over to the custody of a man named Steele while the officers attempted to arrest the other. Meantime Edward Chadwell got away and Bingham and Hartford went in pursuit. Hartford was shot through the heart and instantly killed. The fire was returned, and this morning John Shotwell, who may or may not have been a participant, was found lying in a pool of blood, shot through the thigh.

At midnight the militia was called out, and the house of Chadwell was surrounded until daylight, when the Chadwells surrendered. The two Chadwells were placed in jail here to-day. This afternoon a wagon load of their friends arrived from Clay County, and owing to their outspoken threats it is feared that the militia may have more work to do.

ALMOST KILLED BY STRIKERS.

New Jersey Silk Weaver Beaten Into Insensibility.

PATERSON, N. J., Dec. 10.—Jacob Takakjian, a silk weaver, was almost beaten to death to-day by four strikers from the Summit Silk Mill, at Summit, because he went there to work. The strikers came to Paterson in search of him, knowing that he would spend the day here with his family.

They knocked him down and beat and kicked him until he became unconscious. Then they threw red pepper into his face. The strikers then jumped on a trolley car to escape, but the alarm was given and the car was stopped. The conductor and motorman held the men prisoners until the police came.

BURNED IN HER ARMCHAIR.

Mrs. Hicks Met Death While Sleeping in Her Apartment.

Seated in her armchair asleep, with her feet upon a pillow, and another pillow behind her head, Mrs. Lucinda Hicks, seventy-five years old, of 1,885 Park Avenue, was burned to death by the igniting of her woolen dress from the stove in front of which she was sitting late yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Hicks was the widow of ex-Sergt. of Police Samuel Hicks, who died about eighteen years ago. Mrs. Hicks lived alone on the first floor of the house, and cooked for herself. She was slightly afflicted with rheumatism.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Gunn, who occupy the apartments opposite those of Mrs. Hicks, late yesterday afternoon smelled smoke, and tracing it to the rooms of Mrs. Hicks, opened the door and found the woman seated in her favorite armchair, drawn up before the stove, with her clothing in flames. With buckets of water and blankets the flames were extinguished, but Mrs. Hicks was dead.

Samuel Hicks of 208 East One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street, son of Mrs. Hicks, took charge of his mother's body.

MONTREAL AS A GRAIN CENTRE.

CHICAGO, Dec. 10.—William J. Connors of Buffalo has been in consultation here with some of the largest grain shippers of Chicago regarding the scheme of an all-water route for grain to the seaboard, with Montreal as the seaboard terminal of the route. A Chicago architect is now working on plans for three elevators, with an aggregate capacity of 9,000,000 bushels, to be erected in Montreal.

Mr. Connors expressed the opinion that the project would be in operation by July 1, 1900. Speaking of his plans, he said:

"Besides the three elevators at Montreal, we expect to build an elevator of 1,500,000 bushels' capacity at Port Colborne, Ontario, sixteen miles from Buffalo, and through grain going to Montreal in large cargoes will be broken there.

"It will be the seaports that will suffer from the new route—New York, Newport News, Boston, Baltimore, Portland, Galveston, and every port through which grain passes for export. It will simply be a contest between rail and water, and I am confident water will win."

SENDING CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

This is the time of the year when foreigners who have settled in this country remember their relatives and friends abroad and send them small Christmas gifts in the shape of money orders. The steamer Umbria, which sailed Saturday, carried 23,401 such money orders, representing $271,223.56, and the steamer Lucania, which will sail next Saturday, will carry orders representing a much larger sum. Joseph Elliott, General Superintendent of the Money Order Division of the New York Post Office, estimates that the amount will be about $2,500,000. Of the money that went Saturday, $124,901 went to Great Britain, and a large proportion of it to Ireland; $50,083 to Germany, $4,054.29 to Switzerland, $5,912.98 to Denmark, $766.29 to Holland, $14,234.08 to Italy, $13,714.84 to Norway, $40,606.04 to Sweden, $11,963.58 to Austria, and $4,997.15 to Hungary. The great bulk of the money is sent by servants and people of small means.

Besides the money sent through the Post Office, a great deal is sent through bankers, at the office of Henry Bischoff & Co. of Tryon Row, who for many years have done business in that line, it was said on Saturday that they had sent in drafts to Germany, Austria, Hungary, Russia, France, Italy, and Great Britain nearly $50,000 during the week, and expected to send nearly double that amount this week. These drafts vary in amount from $10 to $80.

The express companies have already begun the work of delivering holiday packages. The season for sending Christmas boxes will not begin for another week, but there is a rush in the business of sending packages from the manufacturers and jobbers to the retailers in the country. A large business is expected by the express companies

Tablet in Memory of Dr. Vail.

A tablet in memory of the late Rev. Dr Albert D. Vail was unveiled yesterday morning in the Park Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, at the corner of Eighty-sixth Street. Dr. Vail was at three different periods pastor of the church, and held that office at the time of his death, last November. The tablet, which was erected by the congregation, bears an appropriate inscription. After the ceremony of unveiling, the Rev. Dr. F. Mason North delivered an address in eulogy of Dr. Vail. The Rev. Dr. A. J. Palmer, Secretary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, also spoke. The church was crowded during the services.

CUBANS TO PETITION THE POPE

Will Ask for a Catholic Mission and Urge the Appointment of Native Priests in the Island.

HAVANA, Dec. 10.—A number of influential Cubans are about to send a petition to the Pope asking for a Cuban mission. In the course of the petition they assert that Catholicism was most flourishing in Cuba when a majority of the priests were Cubans, and they point out that the only schism which has occurred in Cuba was caused by the appointment of a foreigner as Bishop of Santiago.

"The condition of Catholicism," say the petitioners, "is critical in the island, especially in view of the fact that unbounded gratitude exists toward the great Protestant American Nation, which helped Cuba in her struggle for liberty. Intercourse between the Cubans and Americans is already close and becoming closer. Several branches of the Protestant Church in Cuba have already nominated Cuban clergy, who will use a powerful influence on behalf of Protestantism. Even patriotic sentiment can be counted upon to lead those Cuban clergy to abandon the church headed and directed by foreigners."

CUBANS PARADE WITH SPANIARDS.

Listen to Speech Urging Them to Toast Health of Alfonso.

HAVANA, Dec. 10.—Three hundred Cuban ex-soldiers, headed by Gen. Acea, who was wrapped in a Cuban flag, paraded the streets to-day, followed by a Spanish band, playing Cuban national airs. Gen. Acea delivered an address, in the course of which he called upon Spaniards and Cubans to unite and toasted the health of King Alfonso.

Many Spaniards listened to the speech and kept up a continual cheering.

AN EXPRESS COMPANY ROBBED.

The Pacific Loses Between $10,000 and $15,000 at Cheyenne.

Special to The New York Times.

CHEYENNE, Wyoming, Dec. 10.—The office of the Pacific Express Company in this city was robbed last night of several thousand dollars. When Agent O. C. Brownlee entered the office this morning he found the safe open and the money gone.

The robbery has been kept very quiet and only became public late to-night. The express company officials refuse to state the amount of money taken, but it is reported at from $10,000 to $15,000. Agent Brownlee and the entire office force are under surveillance pending the result of an investigation now in progress.

TROLLEY INSPECTOR CRUSHED.

Peter Hanlon, thirty-five years old, a Register Inspector employed at the Canarsie Station of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, died in St. Mary's Hospital, Brooklyn, last evening, as the result of a peculiar accident yesterday afternoon. Hanlon was on duty at the station, at Rockaway and New Lots Avenues, when a car from the bridge drew in, and he stepped behind it to get a look at the fare register through the open door. As he was engaged in jotting down the record of the register a second car drew in behind the first and stopped. Hanlon was standing between the two cars. The motorman of the second car, Edward Pirrovanno, thirty-six years old, of 51 New Lots Avenue, complained to an Inspector that the motor box was out of order, and the Inspector got on the platform to make an examination. The electric current was turned off at the connection over the doorway, but the motorman, it is claimed, neglected to turn off the switch on the motor box.

When the two men had completed their examination the motorman, not calculating upon the switch being set on the motor box, turned on the current overhead. Instantly the car shot forward, crashing into the one ahead. Hanlon, standing on the track, was lifted off his feet and crushed between the two cars. The motorman and Inspector jumped together for the motor box for the purpose of reversing the current, but in their excitement they sent the car ahead again, crushing Hanlon again between the two cars. When dragged out Hanlon was unconscious. Several of his ribs were broken, his hip were crushed, and he was otherwise injured. Ambulance Surgeon Kurtz removed him to St. Mary's Hospital. Pirrovanno, the motorman, was arrested.

UTAH ANSWERS ROBERTS'S PLEA.

Ex-Judge Goodwin of Salt Lake Says It Is Specious.

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah, Dec. 10.—In an interview yesterday with reference to the case of Brigham H. Roberts, ex-Judge C. C. Goodwin of The Salt Lake Tribune said:

"The address of Roberts under its pathetic appeal is a strange mixture of ignorance, insolence, and untruth. He complains of the composition of the committee selected to hear his case because no friend of his was included. He is not sure that he has any friends, and his complaint is that an indirect accusation by Congressmen when they sit as judges cannot be impartial.

"From the fact that he was stopped on the threshold of Congress and asked a question which he refused to answer, he sees all rights of minorities trampled under foot. He thinks the representation to which a State is entitled may be denied it. He forgets that Congress has control of all its committees. He forgets, too, that his trial is an indirect trial of Utah itself on a matter involving the good faith of her people.

"When he pleads immunity from arrest in Washington, even if guilty, he should again be reminded that in his case Congress is investigating him on a matter of character, and not with a view of turning him over to the courts. Moreover, the Edmunds-Tucker law is in full force in Washington, and under it the misdemeanor which he discusses is a felony.

"Again, when he asks, 'Why this appeal?' and answers, 'Because the right of the rule of the majority in one of the sovereign States of the Union is being denied,' it is proper again to remind him that the State is, likewise, incidentally to be investigated.

"His assertion that there is just now against the Mormons a wave of popular sentiment is untrue. If there is excitement and distrust, it is due to him and his friends. Ex-Judge King and before him John L. Caine were undisturbed in or out of Congress. Frank Cannon served his term out in the United States Senate, altogether without reproach. All three were Mormons."

AN ANIMAL PROTECTIVE LEAGUE

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 10.—Our Animal Protective League has been incorporated, for "the education of all children in the care, protection, and kindly treatment of animals, to educate public opinion in the same direction, and to raise the standard of driving and drivers' and farmers' clubs." The territory in which its operations are to be conducted is the United States of America, with principal offices in New York City.

The league's nine Directors, until the first annual meeting, are Katharine L. Standish, 27 Fifth Avenue, New York; W. H. Tolman, 61 Livingston Street, Brooklyn; Carolina H. WOMAN SANITARY AIDE.

Yonker's Health Board Accepts Miss Butler's Suggestion—To Settle the Question of Salary.

YONKERS, N. Y., Dec. 10.—The Common Council of this city will meet to-morrow night and take some action upon the question of making an appropriation for the salary of a woman Sanitary Inspector, a position recently created by the Board of Health. There is a division in the Common Council as to the advisability of the office, and the board appears to be about evenly divided whether or not to provide the means of paying the salary.

In case the verdict is favorable and the appropriation of $900 asked for is granted the woman who will be appointed will be the first, it is said, to hold such a position in the United States.

The idea was suggested to the Health Board by Miss Mary Marshall Butler, daughter of William Allen Butler. The proposition met with opposition, and a discussion was started in the local papers. Miss Butler, who is President of the Women's Institute Club and active in the Civic League, maintained her position, and her opponents were silenced.

Among the duties of the new office will be the instruction of women in sanitation, cooking, and care of children. Miss Butler has asked the Civil Service Board to require a knowledge of some foreign language as one of the requirements for the position. This is because the duties the woman Inspector will be called upon to perform will be mostly among the foreign-born population.

There are several candidates for the position. Miss Butler takes the position that the most trouble in regard to health matters is caused by ignorant women. It is her idea that the woman Inspector will not only effect the removal of the existing trouble, but will by instruction and teaching remove the cause.

MILLIONAIRE WEDS HIS MAID.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 10.—William Smith, sixty-one years old, a millionaire brewer, was quietly married yesterday afternoon at his home in Jamaica Plain to Miss Josephine A. Menz, twenty-eight years of age, who for six months had been a domestic in the Smith home.

About a year ago Mrs. Smith died. Six months later Mr. Smith hired Josephine Menz to wait on table and do light housework. The attentions of the old gentleman became so marked that the four Smith children made war on the pretty domestic. So warm did the fight become that Mr. Smith finally settled it all by announcing last week that their wedding would take place at once. Miss Menz on Friday voluntarily signed away all her dower rights to her husband's property.

The wedding was performed Saturday, all the children being present, but leaving immediately after the ceremony and refusing to be reconciled.

A Live Black Bear for Dewey.

Special to The New York Times.

DULUTH, Minn., Dec. 10.—The people of Beltrami County, are to send Admiral Dewey a big black bear, recently captured, for a Christmas present. Money is being raised in the town by popular subscription to pay all the necessary expenses, including express charges. The bear is named Billie, and the people say that the Admiral may deed his present to whomever he chooses, including his enemies, if he has any.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST.—Rain, fresh to brisk southerly winds.

The trough of low pressure which occupied the Mississippi Valley Saturday night still persists, having moved a very short distance eastward. It has decreased in intensity over the extreme North, but in the southern portion of the Gulf States a disturbance of considerable magnitude has developed, accompanied by heavy rains, but thus far by little wind. During a thunderstorm at Vicksburg 4.22 inches of rain fell up to 8 P. M., at which time the rain was still in progress. High pressure prevails in the Atlantic States and extreme West. During the past twenty-four hours rains have been general, except in the extreme West and Northwest. There were, however, light local snows in the latter section. The rains which have fallen were light, except in the Lower Mississippi Valley and the West Gulf States. Temperatures are high from the Mississippi Valley eastward, except in New England, ranging from 2 to 17 degrees above the seasonal average, while in the West they are correspondingly low. Another disturbance is moving in from the North Pacific, causing rains on the Middle and North Coasts, and snows in the western portion of the middle and north plateau.

The storm in the Southwest will evidently move quite rapidly northeastwardly during the next two days by way of the Ohio Valley and will cause general rains east of the Mississippi River which will continue to-morrow in the Atlantic States, Upper Ohio Valley, and lower lake region, possibly turning into snow in the two latter districts. Rain to-day from the Gulf States northward will be followed by fair weather to-morrow, except that there will probably be snow in the upper lake region. Snow is also indicated for to-day in North Dakota and Wyoming, and rain or snow in Montana. Fair weather is indicated for to-morrow west of the Mississippi River except that light snow is probable in the extreme Northwest. A high pressure area in the Saskatchewan Valley will move southeastward toward the storm track, causing much lower temperatures by to-night in the Mississippi Valley, and by to-morrow night the fall in temperatures will probably reach the Atlantic Coast. On the Atlantic Coast the winds will be fresh to brisk and mostly easterly. Storm signals are displayed at New Orleans, Port Eads, Mobile, and Pensacola.

	—Weather Bureau.—		TIMES.

TROLLEY CARS ON BROADWAY.

Section from Seventy-first Street to Fort Lee Ferry Opened Yesterday Afternoon.

One more section of the electric car lines of the Third Avenue Railroad system was opened for traffic at five minutes to 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon. This is the stretch from Fort Lee Ferry to Seventy-first Street and Broadway. The first car sent over the road experimentally made the trip at 3 o'clock in the morning. The small army of electricians and machinists worked like beavers to remedy the shortcomings disclosed by the trial trip, and another car having made the journey without a hitch at noon, the regular service was begun at 12:55 o'clock, when with two minutes' headway a score of new bright red cars were sent out from Fort Lee Ferry.

At Seventy-first Street transfers were given to Forty-second Street horse cars, which retransferred passengers at Third Avenue, so that those who chose to make the trip were able for 5 cents to ride from the Post Office to Fort Lee Ferry via the Upper Broadway route.

The service, however, did not run with that smoothness that Superintendent John H. Robertson and the other officials had confidently anticipated. At 4 o'clock cars neared to arrive at Seventy-first Street terminus. Investigation showed that there was trouble at the hill from Ninety-sixth to Ninety-first Street, at the foot of which eight cars were stalled. The trouble could not at first be discovered, but it was finally concluded that it was caused by slippery rails. Workmen were set to work to sprinkle sand along them. Then the eight cars, joining forces, formed a train and succeeded with their united strength in reaching the top of the hill, after which single cars made the ascent without difficulty.

Meanwhile a big crowd of small boys gathered around and made life a burden to the railway men. They invaded the cars and had to be driven out. They offered suggestions and wanted to push the cars up the hill, and finally, when the train got in motion, ran yelling beside it to the top of the hill. The stalled cars, too, were the object of gibes and witticisms on the part of facetious cyclists of both sexes. One passed in continuous and rapid procession down the thoroughfare.

The new section, however, was not the only part of the system that worried the officials, for at 2 o'clock one of the almost daily breakdowns on Third Avenue occurred on the down-town line and traffic was interrupted for nearly an hour.

WAR AGAINST A POWERHOUSE.

Citizens Say Third Avenue Railroad Is Maintaining a Nuisance.

Residents and property owners on One Hundred and Thirtieth Street, between Convent and Amsterdam Avenues, have declared war against the Third Avenue Railroad Company's new power house, the north side of which fronts on One Hundred and Thirtieth Street. A formal complaint, signed by a number of people, has been made to the Board of Health, alleging that the vibration caused by the powerful dynamos that run day and night is so great as to make life decidedly disagreeable to those living within a block of the power house. Property owners complain that they are losing all their tenants, and that nobody will rent the vacant flats upon any consideration. The complaint also states that in one apartment a gas chandelier was shaken down, and that clocks are stopped, and dishes rattle in the closets.

The power house in question is a one-story temporary structure of corrugated steel, which runs from One Hundred and Twenty-ninth to One Hundred and Thirtieth Street. It contains three large dynamos that were started the day of the Dewey parade, and have run night and day since. The rumble can be heard several blocks off, the sound resembling that of a steam drill. An energetic exhaust on the roof of the power house adds greatly to the noise, and fills the street with clouds of steam.

A committee has been organized among the residents on the street, and it was said last evening that they intended to appear in the Harlem Police Court this morning and demand a summons for President Flinn of the Third Avenue Company on the ground that he maintains a public nuisance. Mrs. Schaefer of 611 West One Hundred and Thirtieth Street said last evening: "Life is almost unbearable here since they started those dynamos running. The doors and windows rattle constantly, and we are sometimes enveloped in a cloud of steam, especially when the wind is from the south, that is stifling. Several people have moved out of the houses on either side of me, and one in this house, a Mrs. Brady, just on account of the noise and steam. Unless something is done there won't be a tenant in the row."

August Brandeis of 607 West One Hundred and Thirtieth Street said: "The noise from that machinery is enough to drive one crazy. There is no let-up to it; a few minutes' peace and quietness would be a great relief, but the rumble and jar continue week in and week out. If it is not stopped the neighborhood will be deserted, for everybody complains about it." The same views have been expressed by a number of other residents.

MANCHESTER SNUBS YARMOUTH.

Duke Refuses to See the Earl at the Strollers' Rehearsal.

An incident not in the plot of "The Lady from Chicago," which the Strollers are to present for their friends in society this week, was interpolated in the rehearsal of the play at the Waldorf-Astoria Saturday night. The Duke of Manchester, who is a member of the cast, was called upon by the Earl of Yarmouth, who as plain Eric Hope joined the professional ranks a short time ago. The Earl's reception at the hands of the Duke was something of a surprise to the Strollers, who witnessed the affair. Manchester refused to see Yarmouth, and insisted that, as a professional, the Earl should not be allowed to witness the rehearsal.

About 1:30 o'clock Sunday morning the Earl of Yarmouth approached the Stroller on guard at the door of the theatre in the Waldorf, and, handing his card, asked that it be sent to the Duke of Manchester. Believing that when two British titles met even the stringent rules of the Strollers, which exclude outsiders from their rehearsals, might give way, the member hastened to present the Earl's card.

"Really, I can't see him," said the Duke. "He's a professional don't you know. He mustn't be admitted. Keep him out."

When the snub was communicated to Yarmouth he left. The Duke of Manchester fainted during the rehearsal.

House for the Naval Y. M. C. A.

The Naval Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, which was organized on March 1 for the benefit of the enlisted men in the United States Navy, and now occupies a building at 187 Sands Street, Brooklyn, plans to build a clubhouse in the vicinity of the navy yard at a cost of $150,000. A fund for this purpose has been started, and a wealthy person, whose name the committee will not divulge, has offered to contribute $50,000, if $100,000 more can be raised.

Reported Sale of a White Star Steamer

BOSTON, Dec. 10.—It is reported the Dominion Line has purchased from the White Star Line a large freight steamship recently completed at Belfast, Ireland. It is intended to place this steamship in the Liverpool-Boston service, and she is expected to arrive here on her first voyage next month.

Shortly before the service was begun in Fatbow Maher's church yesterday morning Patrick Keating, an old-time horse trainer, who is over seventy years of age, made his way up the centre aisle of the church to the altar steps, where he knelt and prayed in a loud voice. After some difficulty he was induced to leave the church by Roundsman Brennan and Patrolman Gillen of the Bedford Avenue Station. He was taken to the station house and will probably be sent to the asylum at Flatbush to-day.

Keating in his early days was one of the best horse trainers on Long Island. A few years ago he took to drink, which has turned his mind. He is regarded as harmless, but has given the police much trouble by attracting crowds.

TWO BODIES IN SEWAGE BASIN.

QUINCY, Mass., Dec. 10.—The bodies of John Moynihan and that of a stranger were found to-day in a basin used as a receptacle for sewerage matter on Moon Island. The discovery was made by John L. Almeda, an employe of the Boston sewer system at the pumping works. His attention was first attracted by two hats and traces of a struggle on the edge of the basin. The bodies were then found about 400 feet apart.

It is believed Moynihan, who was employed on the island, while on a visit to Boston yesterday, picked up the stranger in that city and persuaded him to go to Moon Island, and then an altercation took place on the brink of the basin, during which the men lost their balance and fell to their death. The fact that the unknown body was found some 400 feet from that of Moynihan is explained upon the supposition that he had tried to swim through the thick sewage. The medical examiner was of the opinion that the deaths were caused by drowning.

Moynihan was twenty-eight years old. His residence is unknown. The stranger was about thirty-five years, 5 feet 10 inches in height, and weighed about 170 pounds. He had a heavy brown mustache. A package of food and a "sundry check were found in his pockets.

Indians Will Play in California.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Dec. 10.—Manager Mums of the University of California football eleven announced to-night that he had wired the Carlisle Indian eleven, accepting their proposition for a game either on Christmas or New Year's. The Carlisle Indians want $4,000 for the expenses of the trip. Mr. Mums stated that games with either Chicago or Wisconsin University were improbable. A despatch from Chicago to-night announcing that the Chicago University team was planning a Western trip was a surprise to the public here, as it had been understood all negotiations to that end were off.

LEXINGTON,

WORK DONE IN THE MINTS

Coinage of Last Fiscal Year Exceeds That of Any Previous One.

$108,177,180 ISSUED IN GOLD

Director Roberts, in His Report, Says the World's Production of Gold Is Rapidly Increasing.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—George E. Roberts, the Director of the Mint, in his annual report, says:

"The Mints and Assay Offices operated upon more bullion in the aggregate and a greater coinage was executed during the last fiscal year than in any previous year. Original deposits of gold were slightly less than during the previous year, amounting in value to $143,497,190, against $147,693,194 in the fiscal year ended June 30, 1898. Domestic deposits were the largest in our history, amounting to $76,252,487, against $69,881,120 in the preceding year, but there was a falling off in foreign coin and bars.

"The coinage of gold was the greatest in our history, amounting to $108,177,180, against $64,634,865 in the preceding year, and might have been considerably larger if the capacity of the mints had been greater. The stock of gold bullion on hand increased from $96,688,582 on July 1, 1898, to $119,882,772 on July 1, 1899.

"The coinage of silver dollars from bullion purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, was $18,254,700, against $10,002,780 in the preceding year and the coinage of subsidiary silver $9,466,877.65, against $6,482,804.

"The mints have been hard pressed throughout the year to meet the demands upon them, the institutions at New Orleans and Philadelphia running overtime for the greater part of the year. The pressure at the San Francisco Mint was not so great, because the stock of silver bullion at that institution was exhausted in August, 1898.

"An arrangement was effected with the house of J. & W. Seligman & Co., New York, by which 31,893,613 fine ounces of silver at Philadelphia were exchanged for an equal amount delivered to the mint at San Francisco. This exchange enabled the latter institution to coin the supply of subsidiary silver required on the Pacific Coast and to assist in the coinage of the required number of silver dollars. This mint also converted into coin the full amount of its very large receipts of gold bullion, its gold output being $58,258,000.

"The mint facilities of the country will be taxed to their utmost until the new buildings under construction at Philadelphia and Denver are completed and equipped. The stock of gold bullion is accumulating, and, with the present pressure for subsidiary coinage, cannot be reduced. Fortunately, the large cash balance in the Treasury permits at this time an unusual stock of bullion without embarrassment, but Congress should at the approaching session make an appropriation for the equipment of the new Philadelphia Mint. The building is well advanced toward completion, and as the power plant and much of the machinery will require considerable time for construction, the contracts for the same should be let during the coming year.

MOVEMENT OF SILVER.

"When the present charges for refining silver were adopted they were applicable to the conditions then existing, and the Government refineries received a share of the business. But the cost of treatment has declined and the charges of private concerns have been reduced, while the Government charges have remained fixed. The effect has naturally been to send the silver bullion to private refineries. While there is no good reason why the Government should enter into unnecessary competition with private concerns, it is desirable that, so long as it conducts refineries, it should do so in an economical and businesslike manner."

The report suggests that the charges for refining silver bullion be so reduced as to put the Government on an equal footing with private concerns in the business, or to such an extent as will bring the moderate amount of silver bullion they require for the treatment of gold deposits. The total amount of silver bullion refined in the United States last year was, in round numbers, 94,000,000 ounces. The Superintendent of the New York Assay Office, the report says, has called attention to the fact that, although about $30,000,000 in United States coin was exported last year, no bars were taken for export, and suggests that the "export charge" of one-tenth of 1 per cent. which is exacted is operating to our disadvantage.

"There is no object," says Director Roberts, "in forcing the public to take our coin out of the country by making it more expensive to take bars. We had better furnish the raw material than the manufactured article. These bars will have to be shipped from New York to Philadelphia, melted and worked into coin at some waste and considerable expense to replace the coin exported, while the bars would have served every purpose for export. The export charge was put on bars several years ago, when gold exports were heavy and some means to discourage them was sought. When the current coin is abraded, exporters will pay a slight premium to get bars, which are full weight, but our current gold coin is now largely new and on the average close to standard, and exporters are preferring to ship it rather than to pay the bar charge."

IMPORTS OF THE YEAR.

The total gold imports of the year amounted to $88,978,882, and exports to $37,550,783. The total silver imports were $31,120,578, commercial value, and silver exports $56,655,335.

The stock of bullion in the Mints and Assay Offices on July 1, 1899, was as follows: Gold, $119,882,772; silver, (cost,) $85,575,898.

During the year $1,168,851 in worn and uncurrent gold coins were recoined, with a loss of $10,543, and $8,588,076 of worn and uncurrent subsidiary silver was recoined, with a loss of $485,797.

The seigniorage on the coinage of silver dollars during the year amounted to $5,520,145; on subsidiary silver, $86,838; on nickels and pennies, $698,720.

The Government has now practically no bullion available for the coinage of subsidiary currency. It has bullion purchased for the coinage of silver dollars, but this cannot be used without authority from Congress. The needs of the country for fractional currency are increasing, and legislative authority for new coinage is imperatively demanded. Continuing, the report says:

FOREIGN STOCKS DECREASE.

"In the report of this bureau a year ago an effort was made to tabulate the principal stocks of gold held for monetary use in the world at the close of the years 1892 and 1897. This table, corrected by returns from additional banks and the elimination of some errors, shows the stocks of gold in sight in Europe to have increased by about 50 per cent. from Dec. 31, 1892, to Dec. 31, 1897. From the latter date to Dec. 31, 1898, the stocks, instead of continuing to increase, showed a diminution. At first thought the reduction is likely to cause surprise, for with the enormous gold production of the year, amounting to $287,000,000, the stocks of that metal might be expected to everywhere augment.

"When it is considered, however, that the United States took above $200,000,000 of gold in 1898, that India's net imports were over $20,000,000, and that the industrial consumption of the world was $65,000,000, it will be understood that no general increase in Eurcpean stocks could occur last year. But it still remains to be explained where the disappearing gold of Europe went to."

The total reduction shown is $180,000,000, and the Russian stock shows a reduction of $168,000,000. But M. de Witte, the Russian Minister of Finance, states in his annual report upon the budget that "During the year 1898 there has been an increase in the general amount of gold in the country."

The reduction shown in the stock of the Imperial Bank has been brought about by the monetary reform. The enormous stock in the bank at the close of 1897 was provided for the purpose of bringing the paper currency of the country to par with gold and establishing its interchangeability. During the past year the bank has been paying out gold freely, and gold coin, long absent from the circulation of the empire, has again entered into common use.

"The Bank of England and Imperial Bank of Germany both show a loss of gold during the year," says Mr. Roberts, "but the record of the exports and imports of Great Britain and Germany show that each of those countries received about $50,000,000 more gold than it parted with. Trade was very active in both countries, and apparently drew on the reserve stocks of the two leading banking institutions. The money stock of those countries was, in a larger degree than the year previous, in movement among the people and in the local banks.

"It is of special interest that the stock of uncovered banknotes in Germany was $24,000,000 greater on Dec. 31, 1898, than on Dec. 31, 1897, and was $36,000,000 greater in France. That illustrates the elasticity which enables the monetary systems of those countries to ease off such an extraordinary demand for gold as the United States made on the world last year. The Austro-Hungarian Bank had $17,000,000 more of uncovered paper out at the end of the year than at the beginning. The three countries had out about $78,000,000 more of uncovered banknotes than the year before, a fact which doubtless contributed much to ease the financial situation.

"The ability to thus enlarge the stock of paper currency is valuable to a country in the event of any sudden call upon it for heavy payments in gold. The issue acts as a buffer between such demand and the commercial interests of the country, protecting the latter from sudden and sharp pressure. It is a legitimate use of credit by the country, through the agency of banks of issue, to meet a passing demand.

UNITED STATES GOLD STOCK.

"The most notable change in gold stocks during the year was in the United States. The stock of coin in the country, including bullion in the mints on Jan. 1, 1898, was estimated at $745,245,953, and on Jan. 1, 1899, at $945,798,788, a gain of $200,552,835. The gain appears in the following items:

Stock, Jan. 1, 1898	$745,245,953
Net imports of United States coin	33,062,718
Coinage during the year	77,985,758
Gain in bullion in mints	94,770,430
Total	$951,084,859
United States coin remelted at mints	$1,330,741
Taken by paymasters to Cuba, Puerto Rico, and the Philippines	2,455,330
Used in manufactures	1,500,000
Total	$5,286,071
Stock, Jan. 1, 1899	$945,798,788

"Of the increased stock shown by the above statement $159,632,840 appears in the reports of National banks and the Government Treasury. The holdings of the former must be taken for Dec. 15, 1897, and Dec. 1, 1898, their nearest statements to Jan. 1 being on those dates. They show holdings as below:

Treasury, Jan. 1, 1898	$197,767,142
National banks, Dec. 15, 1897	187,608,644
Total	$385,375,786
Treasury, Jan. 1, 1899	$281,119,881
National banks, Dec. 1, 1898	263,888,745
Total	$545,008,626
Gain in Treasury and National banks	$159,632,840

"The difference between this and the aggregate gain estimated for the country, $40,919,995, is considered to have gone into State and private banks and general circulation.

PRODUCTION OF GOLD.

"The production of gold in all of the important gold fields of the world is increasing rapidly, and with prospects of continued gains for years to come. The yield in the world in the calendar year 1898 was $387,000,000, against $338,000,000 in 1897. The production in Australia to date in 1899 has shown a gain of 25 per cent. over the corresponding months of 1898, which indicates a probable gain for the full year of $16,000,000. The United States, Canada, and Mexico will doubtless increase their product $18,000,000. In South Africa the production in the first half of the year was 35 per cent. above the yield of the same months in 1898, and if the industry had been undisturbed the gain for the year would probably have been above $20,000,000.

"As all these principal districts are now in condition to produce at a higher rate than at the opening of the present year, and all are preparing for larger yields, it is not improbable that when operations are fully resumed in South Africa, the world's output will quickly pass $400,000,000 per annum. The world's stock of coin is now being increased more rapidly, and by a higher annual percentage to the existing stock than during the period from 1850 to 1860, when the great output of gold from California and Australia startled the economists of all countries and gave the world a depreciating standard of value.

"The effect of this new flood of standard money upon the markets, the industries, the earnings of those who work for wages, and all of the varied relations of the people in our present highly organized society, will be a most interesting study. It will inevitably be a potent factor in affairs."

THIS WEEK IN CONGRESS.

The House Will Devote Itself to the Currency Bill—Mason to Speak on His Boer Resolution.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—The House will devote the week entirely to the financial debate on the Currency bill. Under the terms of the special order adopted on Friday, the general debate will open to-morrow immediately after the reading of the journal, and continue daily from noon until 5 o'clock Friday. On Saturday the bill will be read paragraph by paragraph for amendment, under the five-minute rule. The vote will not be taken until the following Monday.

The debate will probably cover a wide range, including a general rethrashing of the campaign issue of 1896, and there may be some stormy incidents. The Republicans are arrayed solidly for the bill, but many of them who have never before advocated the gold standard doubtless will have to take the floor to explain their change of position. On the Democratic side some of the members are reported as favoring the bill, but there has been no canvass made, and it remains to be seen how many of them will join the Republicans upon this measure.

Representative Overstreet of Indiana, who will have charge of the bill on the floor, will make the opening argument in its support to-morrow.

In the Senate the week does not promise to be a busy one, the indications being for routine business and short sessions inside the Chamber, with much preparation for future work in the committee rooms. Senator Mason will open the week with a speech on his resolution declaring the sympathy of this country with the Boers in their war with Great Britain. There may be other brief speeches upon this and other questions, though there is a general disposition on the part of Senators to postpone speechmaking until after the holidays.

The Republican Senators generally feel that the most important work for the present is to secure the reorganization of the committees, especially the Finance Committee, as preliminary to other work. An effort will be made to complete the reorganization during the present week.

The Finance Committee may meet on Tuesday for preliminary consideration of the Finance bill, but this is not yet decided upon. The expectation now is that this bill will not be taken up in the Senate until after the Christmas holidays.

The Committee on Foreign Relations will take up the reciprocity treaties on Wednesday. The Committee on Privileges and Elections will consider the contests over Senatorial seats in a desultory way, but the real work on these will not begin until Saturday, when opposing counsel will be heard in the Quay case.

Post Office Clerks' Salary Bill.

The New York Branch of the United National Association of Post Office Clerks met yesterday afternoon in Maennerchor Hall. There was a general discussion of the bill to regulate the salaries of clerks, which is to be introduced to-day in the Senate by Senator Mason of Illinois and in the House by Representative Mudd of Maryland. The bill provides that every Post Office clerk shall receive an advance of $100 a year in salary until $1,200 is reached. For clerks employed in the registry and money order divisions $1,400 is the maximum salary. Chairman Healey said that the Postmaster General had approved the bill and promised to give it his support. It was announced that 800 out of the 1,200 Post Office clerks in this city had joined the organization.

CRAIG EPILEPTIC COLONY.

Annual Report Made to the State Board of Charities.

ALBANY, Dec. 10.—The annual report of the Board of Managers of the Craig Colony, of which Dr. Frederick Peterson of New York City is the President, has been submitted to the State Board of Charities. Since its opening Feb. 1, 1896, 504 epileptics have been received at the colony, of which 378 remain. When the new buildings now in the course of construction are completed the capacity of the colony will be increased to a total of 720 beds.

During the past year 95 new cases were admitted to the institution, 40 men and 55 women, and 35 were discharged. The death rate for the past year has been very low, less than 2 per cent., the lowest in the history of the colony.

RACING ON THE SPEEDWAY

A Morning of Good Sport, with No Accidents to Mar It.

MRS. GILL RECEIVES APPLAUSE

Woman Driver Pilots Jack to Victory in Two Heats with Alves, Driven by Nathan Straus.

Road drivers and their fast steppers were out in force yesterday, and for a couple of hours in the morning there was some lively racing on the Speedway. The roadbed was in unusually fine condition, and the absence of a crowd of visitors in heavy rigs made speeding safe, and the brushes fast and exciting. Two runaways occurred, but mounted policemen had the unruly animals by the bits and brought them to a standstill before any damage was done. The honors of the day were about evenly divided between Mrs. Gill, driving Jack, 2:12½, and John F. Cockerill, driving his handsome team, Honor Bright, 2:28½, and Swift.

The first brush of interest was between Nathan Straus, driving Alves, 2:09½, and Mrs. Gill, behind Jack. They turned together to a good start and got away at a lively pace, Alves taking the lead. Nearing the half mile post Jack picked his opponent up, and before it was passed had a lead of half a length. Again Alves took the lead, but at the three-quarter post Mrs. Gill gave Jack a loose rein, and he shot several lengths ahead of Alves, which position he held until the animals were reined in under the arch of Washington Bridge. Mrs. Gill was enthusiastically applauded.

The next race that occupied the attention of the crowd was a close one between Honest John, 2:18¼, the brown gelding recently purchased by Dr. H. H. Kane, and the bay gelding Oscar, 2:20½. Honest John won by only a head, but on a second trial he had a lead of two lengths at the finish. About this time word was passed down the line that Jack and Alves were having another brush. They came around the turn at a fast clip, Jack leading by a scant length. Mrs. Gill handled her horse like a veteran driver. Nearing the three-quarter mile post Jack continued to increase his lead, and Mr. Straus, reining Alves in, shouted to the spectators, who were applauding Mrs. Gill. "It's no use. I can't win."

There were many fast teams on the Speedway yesterday. Honor Bright and Swift were in excellent condition, and Mr. Cockerill was anxious for a brush with the crack pacing team, Sir Eid, 2:14¾, and Island Belle, 2:18¼, driven by A. M. Rose. After several false starts the teams got away on fairly even terms. At the half they were nose and nose, but a hundred feet further Honor Bright broke and ended the chances of the team winning. On the return trip the crowd clamored for another race, and Mr. Cockerill lightened his rig by throwing out the blankets and robes, and then followed one of the prettiest team races ever contested on the drive. Honor Bright and Swift won by a length, and in a third heat they had several lengths to spare.

Queen Wilkes, Charles Wieland's new horse, tried conclusions with the bay gelding, Percy, 2:17¼, owned by John Shepard of Boston. To a point a short distance north of the half-mile post the horses traveled neck and neck, but after that Percy took the lead and held it. The bay gelding Oscar, 2:20½, trotted one of the best races of his Speedway career against the chestnut mare Smilax, 2:21¼, driven by A. Newberger. The bay mare Dundess, 2:23¾, driven by Mr. Zahn, took the measure of the mare Lacrosse Girl, 2:23¼, after a close contest of half a mile.

Among drivers out were Col. F. N. Lawrence behind his mare Lottie, 2:29¼; A. Schwartz, driving his crack team Lilly Glen and Wyoming, 2:18½; Thomas Brady, driving Velvet Queen; J. Murphy, driving Bloster's First 2:25¾; Dr. Gill, driving Royal Ramsey, 2:21½; E. Holbrook, behind Lee Russell, 2:10¼; Lawson N. Fuller, behind a pair of blacks; George Coleman, speeding Baylight, 2:32¼; E. Slater, driving Kaiser Wilkes, and J. P. Robertson, driving a team composed of Flash and Nellie.

NEW TROPHY FOR YACHTSMEN.

Perpetual Challenge Cup Offered by the Eastern Yacht Club.

Following in the footsteps of the donors of the America's Cup and the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club, the Eastern Yacht Club has put up a perpetual challenge trophy, to be known as the Eastern Challenge Cup. Competition for this trophy is limited to entries from the New York, Seawanhaka-Corinthian, Larchmont, Atlantic, and Eastern Yacht Club, and such other American yachting organizations having stations on salt water as may from time to time be added to the list by consent of the donor and the other clubs mentioned.

The yachts in competition shall always be single-masted vessels, with a water line length of not less than thirty-nine or more than forty-six feet, measured in racing trim, without crews on board. In measuring the sail plan, the half sum of the water-line length plus the square root of the sail area shall not exceed fifty-one feet, taking as the sail area the space included within straight lines running from the mast at top of boom, thence successively to the outer edges of the outermost sheaves at boom end, gaff end, topmast head, bowsprit end, and thence to the point of beginning, when the mainsail is dry and fully hoisted. The out-haul of the spinnaker boom, when swung forward from the mast, shall not extend beyond the outer point of measurement on the bowsprit. No sail, except maintopsail, shall be permitted to extend beyond these lines of measurement.

The primary object of selecting the above size is to promote the building of a popular type of yacht that will be seaworthy, strong, easily managed, and of moderate cost, and to that end the Regatta Committee in the conditions that were adopted require that the ballast shall not exceed 55 per cent. of the actual displacement, but shall not be less than 22,000 pounds, including inside and outside ballast with its bolts and other special fastenings, and metal in fins or centreboards. The load water line plane must not exceed 80 per cent. of its circumscribing parallelogram, and aluminium and other materials that have not satisfactorily stood the test of time are excluded in the construction of frames, beams, or planking.

Challenges must be received before Jan. 1 of the year of the proposed race, and before April 1 of that year the club holding the cup shall announce the particular conditions to govern the races, which must be sailed between Aug. 1 and Sept. 30. The challenging yacht must be named before July 15, and the name of the defender must be announced by Aug. 1.

A novel feature of the conditions relates to the arrangements in case there shall be more than one challenger for any year. It reads: "In case there shall be more than one challenger for one year the challenging yachts shall sail a series of races under the management of the club holding the cup, and the winner of the series, or of a sail-off in case of a tie, shall be accepted as the challenger for the year. Such selected challenger, or the sole challenger, shall contest for the cup in a series of races—best three out of five."

It is probable the first challenge for this cup will be sent from the Seawanhaka-Corinthian Yacht Club. The Race Committee of that organization has called special attention to the circular of the Eastern Club offering co-operation with any member who is desirous of building a yacht to sail for the cup.

Notice to Mariners.

SAN DIEGO BAY, BEACON LIGHT NO. 3½.—Notice is hereby given by the Lighthouse Board that on or about Dec. 15, 1899, a fixed white lantern light will be established on the structure recently erected, in 4 feet of water (low tide) on the northwesterly side of the channel of San Diego Bay, about ¼ mile southeasterly from Fisherman's Point, in place of the former day beacon marked "B" on Coast and Geodetic Survey chart No. 1,204. The focal plane of the light will be 24 feet above mean high water. The structure consists of a cluster of four piles surmounted by a square lamp house painted black with 2½" in white on each side. Bearings of prominent objects from the structure, as taken from the above-named chart, are: Beacon No. 6 Light, E. ¾ N., S. E. Coronado Hotel tower, S. E. ¼ E., S. E. Ballast Point Lighthouse, S. ½ W. Bearings are magnetic and given approximately.
This notice affects the "List of Lights and Fog Signals, Pacific Coast, 1899," Page 30, after No. 4, and the "List of Beacons and Buoys, Pacific Coast, 1899," Page 12.

NEW HAVEN OUTER BREAKWATER LIGHT STATION.—Notice is hereby given by the Lighthouse Board that on or about Jan. 1, 1900, a light of the fourth order, showing red and flash every 5 seconds, will be established in the structure recently erected, in about 28 feet of water (mean low water,) just inside the easterly end of the westerly of outer breakwater, entrance to New Haven Harbor, Long Island Sound. The light will illuminate the entire horizon, its focal plane will be 61 feet above mean high water and the light may be seen 13.33 miles in clear weather, the observer's eye 15 feet above the ere. The structure consists of a black, cylindrical foundation pier, expanding to truncated shape at its upper end to form a gallery, surmounted by a conical, iron tower, lower half brown, upper half white, superseded by a covered gallery of iron bars and surmounted by a black lantern. The approximate geographical position of the structure, as taken from Chart No. 202 of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, is Latitude, North, 41° 17' 12" (41.3); Longitude, West, 72° 54' 48" (72.9). Bearings and distances of prominent objects from the structure, as taken from Chart No. 113 of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, are New Haven Land Wharf Lighthouse, N. ¾ E., 4¾ miles; Southwest Ledge Lighthouse, N. ¾ E., 5 1-10 miles; Palmer Island Lighthouse, E. ¾ S., 13-10 E., 13 miles; Stratford Shoal (Middle Ground) Lighthouse, S. W. ¼ W., 13 miles. A fog signal will be established later, of which due notice will be given. Bearings are magnetic; miles are nautical miles.
This notice affects the "List of Lights and Fog Signals, Atlantic and Gulf Coasts, 1899," Page 64, No. 260, and the "List of Beacons and Buoys, Third Lighthouse District, 1899," Page 55 and 78.

It's Better Than Christmas

NEARLY four thousand yards of roped evergreen were required to festoon the Rotunda. It would take a bigger rope tha that to span our welcome to you.

This Christmas Store is planned as much for pleasure as for money making. We say that in all thoughtfulness, for y ar after year we spend a large slice of the profits in decorations, and you know our employees are direct sharers in December profits. Don't t ank us for that—simply feel that all business isn't sordid, and that you can be happiest and freest in the store where everybody else is happy.

We believe, candidly, honestly and thoroughly, that Wanamaker prices are the lowest prices—that goods of the cla ses we carry are intrinsically cheaper than imitations or shams or make-shifts can be at any price. Don't you?

We believe that the people who most of all should be economical are really the most wasteful if they buy careles y, as too many do. Don't you?

From the Basement Toy Store to the Annex Christmas Stores on fifth floor, it is all one big holiday bazar—governed b the prosaic rule that says: If for any reason you had rather return the thing you have bought, do so—promptly as possible at this season, ple se—and we will return you the money paid.

The Sale of Shoes continues—men's, women's and children's shoes, at half to two-thirds their vorth. Details are given below.

In the Basement Toy Store

Of course you can get on faster now—the children gave you many hints on Saturday—wish we had a place big as Madison Square Garden to spread out the toys and give all the little folks plenty of room to see. Sometimes you put Christmas in total eclipse, being so much bigger and taller than the boys and girls. But everybody was happy—and there will be room enough to-day.

Parlor Croquet, one pretty good sort, at 20c a set.
Some Crokinole Boards, complete, at 75c.
And maybe a dozen kinds of Board Games at 10c.
Christmas Tree Ornaments a-plenty.

Seems wonderful that the supplies hold out—so great is the buying. But we're doing our best to be bountiful, though little prices on the better class of toys are new and tempting. Fine all around, isn't it? And Dolls, a penny a-piece to $25.

The Gram-o-phone is a jolly companion—a talking machine that sings, and plays band selections besides. $18. Records, 50c a-piece.

Dress Goods in Patterns for Gifts

The vogue of dress pattern-giving, which dates back only a few years, becomes more general with each succeeding h liday-time. We are keeping pace here with the increased demands. Preparations this season have been on a much larger scale than ever—we have to-day 10,000 patterns of one class of goods, fabrics made for next spring's selling. Hundreds upon hundreds of dress lengths of goods appropriate for present wear. And our planning for this occasion took into account more than mere magnitude of stocks. Special advantages have been sought out for buying, and we offer to share them with you—advantages that bring you many goods in this shape at two-thirds—some at one-half—the selling prices of to-day.

There are percales and seersuckers, made for 1900, in 10 yard lengths, at 1.25 and $1 each.

Colored dress goods at $2 to $7.50 a pattern. These include covert cloths, cheviots, camel's-hair plaids, broadcloths, armures, granites, diagonals—and many silk-and-wool figured novelties.

And dress patterns of various black stuffs. These are $2.25 to $6 a pattern. Among them are mohair crepons, silk-and-wool velours, granites, armures, serge poplins, drap d'été—and more.

All that is blazed of above will be found in the Rotunda or at Fourth avenue and Tenth street, ostly banded or suitably boxed.

The Wanamaker Fur Store

This is pre-eminently a fur season—periods of prosperity usually are, or furs are luxuries akin to gems and almost as sensible things to put one's money in—quite as safe, if you do not take the moth-risk of home storage in summer.

The most loved furs are growing scarcer and it will not be long before a piece of silver fox, for instance, will be as hard to buy as buffalo robes are now. To be sure, wild animals are now being raised by hand, so to speak—the forestry of furs, perhaps. But the poorest judge can tell the difference in the peltry. It lacks the life and richness and service-giving of the wild animal skins.

The fur business here is as distinctive and as thoroughly mastered as are any of the other businesses under this roof—it is not a department but a store, only different from an exclusive store in the economy of rents and such like—for the fur store is another store at the end of the short selling season. Only the organized workroom force is continued.

With "dry-goods store" fur stocks we have neither patience nor dealings. Do you catch the distinction? Rare furs are beyond their range, and only the lower grades of the popular furs are matters of jobbing-house interest.

The fur selling here this season has been notable—based on a confidence in the safety of Wanamaker methods, and in the expert management of that and each other store under this roof.

$1,200—Russian Sable English box Coat; revers faced with white velvet.
$750—Mink Driving Coat made from choice Eastern skins.
$500—Automobile Coat, made from selected broadtail; collar of real chinchilla.
$350—Fine Hudson Bay Sable Collarette, 17 in. deep; trimmed with tails.
$175—Broadtail Collarette. Long tabs; top collar and ruffle of chinchilla.
$150 Sealskin Coats, London-dyed skins, 22 and 24 in. long. Others at $250 and $300.
$90 and $125—Chinchilla Collarettes, 10 in. deep.

Second Floor, Broadway.

Second Day of the Shoe Sale

We've made the Annex Shoe Store bigger than ever—to hold that 23,000 pairs of shoes and to be comfortable for you who come for them.

As a rule the shoes are just as stylish as you'd find in regular stocks, and all are sold under our usual broad guarantee. Remember we shirk no responsibility—goods are Wanamaker goods, whether you buy regular lines or from special lots.

Men's and Women's Shoes on Ninth street side.

Spring-heel Shoes, Leggings for women and children, and an assortment of the Men's Slippers are on the Tenth street side.

Women's black Kidskin Shoes, good shapes, $2.35, instead of $3.50. And $1.85 instead of $3.
Some others, lace and wanted sorts—$1.60. Some quite good values at $2 are to be sold at $1.40.
Men's Shoes—$3 to $4 Russets at $1.75.
$3.50, $4 and $5 Shoes—from well-known makers, $2.30. All black; good shapes. Patent leather, calfskin, kidskin.

"Usual $3 Shoes" the maker of this lot said. We mark them $1.80;
Boys' Shoes, with heels, 11 to 5½, at $1.80. With spring heels, 9 to 13½, at $1 and $1.25.
Girls' Shoes, spring heels, 50c, 75c and $1—depends on size.
Slippers for Men—brown and black kidskin—90c.
Women's Overgaiters and Children's Leggings—just half price.
Turkish slippers at 50c a pair.

Two Book Stores Till Christmas

These in the Annex—a building we own just across Ninth street—74 E. Ninth—sets of books, cloth bound, printed on fair paper—

Dickens' Works, 15 vols., $3.75.
Bulwer Lytton's, 13 vols., $3.75.
George Eliot's, 6 vols., $1.75.
Bronte's, 6 vols., $1.75.
Leather-Stocking Tales, 5 vols., 95c.
Cooper's Sea Tales, 5 vols., 75c.
Irving's Works, 6 vols., $1.25.
D'Artagnan Romances, Dumas, $1.50.
Shakespeare, 12 vols., pocket size, $1.50.

And any other fit book—new or standard.

Colored Silks and Black--Bargains

Here are two thousand yards of Lyons silk est described as "dainty"—turquoise on white, red on white, National blu on white and other effects not so easily described. They are striped, all of them—but some of the stripes are over half inch wide and made up of dots and tiny figures.

Half the lot is $1.50 quality, the rest is full $2 quality, even at the old lower prices. But we can mark these at $1 a ard. Silks are welcome gifts.

Black Peau de Soie—a rich, firm, close weave of excellent lustre—suited for the making of waists, skirts and costum s; richest of linings, 75c instead of 90c a yard.

We never sold so much silk for gifts. Eve men can buy safely; we tell them how much.

Rotunda.

China---Glass---Bric-a-Brac

It would take the whole basement to fairly how the china and art bits we've gathered. So, pardon the piled-up-ness. Beauty—not jimcracks to offend good taste.

Marble Busts and Figures from a very few dollars to $125
French Bronzes, $6 to $250. Sevres Pie s, mounted, $4 to $250.
Pieces of Royal Vienna Ware, $3.75 to $400.

This isn't a stock-list—merely a hint. Pr tty little pieces of Royal Bonn ware for 75c. Of course, some for more.

Haviland china Dinner Sets, 113 pieces, decorated in colo and gold, $16.50 instead of $22.50.
Haviland china Dinner Sets, 113 pieces, $45 for full $60 value.
Limoges china Dinner Sets, 101 pieces, $20; quite well orth $27.50.
Cut Glass—rich American cuttings, which are the world's est—from the simplest Tumblers at $2.25 a dozen, to large Bowls at a good many doll s.

Basement, Broadway.

The Picture Show

Have you attended the Half-Hour Exhibits of the wonderful reproduced paintings from the National Gallery of London? To-day at 10:30 and 11:30 a. m. and 3 and 4:30 p. m. These paintings will be shown at each exhibit to-day—

The Dweller in the Innermost, George Frederick Watts, R. A.
Hope, - George Frederick Watts, R. A.
Sic Transit Gloria Mundi, George Frederick Watts, R. A.
A Boy Drinking, - - - - - Murillo.
A Poulterer's Shop, - - - - Gerard Dou.
Speak! Speak! Sir John Millais, P. R. A.
Portrait of an Old Woman, - Rembrandt.
The Hay-wain, - John Constable, R. A.
Blowing Bubbles, - - - - - Netscher.
Portrait of Himself, - - - Frank Dixon.
Ecce Homo, - - - - - - Correggio.
Towing the Old Fighting Temeraire, J. M. W. Turner, R. A.

Holiday Dreamland skirts the great Rotunda—seventeen tableaux of fact and myth. The scenic paintings is New York's best; the inspiration, happy.

Festoons of evergreen, the smiling face of Santa Claus—many times duplicated; thousands of star-like lights, the toy store down stairs and the extra Christmas store on Fifth floor—all say for us in a universal language—"A Merry Christmas."

Dainty Underwear from Paris

The Little French Store is rich in those filmy, lacey, silken and fine linen bits of Lingerie that delight the heart of woman. For years it has been the care of the manager of the underwear store and our Paris office to gather replicas os the daintiest pieces produced there, and the most famous of the Lingerie makers have come to have a personal pride in the pretty things intended for Sale at Wanamaker's, and to prepare special designs for us. Lots of new pieces have gotten here in the nick of time for Christmas.

For giving: Dressing saques, tea gowns, lounging gowns, silken petticoats; silk waists, of course. Of the daintiest things, just one of a kind.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Muslin Underwear

There is a broad strata of common sense in American women that shows itself even in gift-making. Useful gifts—trust any woman to know what some other woman would appreciate.

Eight styles of Night Gowns at $1. We put them in pink or blue boxes.
White Petticoats—$1.25 and $1.75. Cambric; deep umbrella ruffle. Three rows torchon lace and deep lace edge. Put in gift boxes.
Knit Petticoats, light or dark colors, 65c to $1.75.
French Flannel Petticoats, embroidered or stitched, $1.50 to $30
Garters—from Paris—Ribbon, chiffon or lace for beauty's sake. Some of the rosettes hold pretty ornaments of rhinestones. 75c, $1 and up to $6.50.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Trimmed Hats from Paris

Somebody counted noses wrong and we've had too many hats sent from Paris. Quite a number are reduced to-day, to double the demand—$30 and $35 hats at $12 and $15.

Second Floor, Broadway and Tenth.

Life of Millais

The Frederick A. Stokes Company has done the art-world a service in bringing out "The Life and Letters of Sir John Everett Millais" so sumptuously. Of course it was business, not philanthropy, but they are to be thanked just as heartily.

The two elegant volumes are great picture books with over two hundred pictures and sketches (many reproduced for the only time by consent of jealous owners—for Millais' own son wrote the story of this most popular artist of the last half century, and, of course, got most favors).

Millais was an artist because he couldn't help it. As a boy, with his brother as collaborator, he got up a little National Gallery of his own—pictures no bigger than an envelope, hung in a well-appointed gallery made from a deal box. No wonder that he got in the Royal Academy at ten years of age and for six years took every honor the Academy had to give. They called him "The Child" and loved him there—he was always "The Child" at the Garrick Club.

The work is published at $10. Our price is $7.50. And what a Christmas gift!

The Book Store, Ninth street.

Overcoats to Order

Here is an offer open to all, of course, but we're selfish enough to hope that strangers will get most the garments, for that will make us just so many more every-day friends for this tailor shop.

Overcoats, of a soft, sumptuous cloth called velour; black or Oxford-gray; made up with silk or satin linings or with wool body lining and satin shoulder lining—dressy, serviceable $40 overcoats at thirty dollars

Only until a little excess of cloth is used up.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Silk Handkerchiefs

Somehow it's a little hard to tell just what to give to men—now, isn't it?

Silk Handkerchiefs—they're safe and liked. We're as careful about them as about the linen handkerchiefs.

How much? They start at 25c—this price for fair-sized handkerchiefs, hemstitched. Others, 35c and up to $1.25.

Broadway.

Bedroom and Dining-room Chairs

Here are some fine bargains—just such chairs as you'd be apt to pick, if you had full choice, but these being odd lots

we take a third off the prices

At $2.50 each, regularly $3.75—2 Antique oak dining room Chairs with leather seats.
At $4.50 each, regularly $6.75—4 Antique oak dining room Chairs with leather seats.
At $5 each, regularly $7.50—9 Antique oak dining room Chairs with leather seats.
At $5.50 each, regularly $8.25—4 Golden oak leather seat dining room Chairs.
At $5.50 each, regularly $8.25—2 Antique oak dining room Chairs with leather seats.
At $8 each, regularly $12—6 Flemish oak dining room Chairs with leather seats.
At $8.50 each, regularly $12.75—8 Flemish oak dining room Chairs with leather seats.

The bedroom chairs start at $1—up to $10.50. About two hundred in all.

Fourth floor.

Canary Birds

Miss Pope, a bird expert and doctor, will be among the canaries every day this week to give advice on their care and culture. She has studied them in their natural home, the Harz Mountains, and knows exactly what they need, well or sick.

She will tell you what food or medicine to give them, when to give them a bath, where to place their cages—anything you want to know.

But best of all, she will help you pick a bird if you ask her. She knows which are the best singers, which voices are likely to last the longest, though we have already selected in buying. Birds are classified by the experts and we pay most to get the best.

The canaries are $1.65.

We give a book on the care of birds with each canary and sell the well-known Philadelphia Bird Food Co.'s preparations and foods.

Basement.

Angora Cats—Some of them kittens—all beautiful either for their prettiness or oddity. $10 to $50.

Exhibition and sale—Fifth floor.

GOV. ROOSEVELT AND THE CHARTER.

So far as the public now know it, the policy of the Governor as to the charter and the government of the City of New York seems to entitle that gentleman to the respect and gratitude of this community. It is not, in some regards, an ideal policy, but, considering the actual situation, which is far from ideal, it has certain great merits.

Legislation by conference between the Governor and Senator PLATT, largely ignoring the representatives of the people, or those who ought to be such, is not in accordance with the old-fashioned notions of republican institutions. It is a manner of doing things that is open to much abuse. We of New York know that, because we have suffered from its abuse. But we must remember that the representatives who are thus ignored have shown no disposition or ability to assert their rights or those of their constituents; that they are elected by the voters with the expectation that they will act as they do act, and that in the long run it is the voters themselves who permit this state of things.

Taking the actual situation, we find that the Governor has simply blocked all the schemes of charter tinkering for party advantage and has insisted successfully on referring the question of all changes in the government of the city to a commission to be appointed by himself with the assent of the Senate, with the expectation that this commission will not report at this session of the Legislature, nor until another election shall have been held, at which a Governor will be chosen. That, we think, is an honest, a wise, and a bold policy. It is honest, because it makes it impracticable that any important changes shall be "jammed" through the Legislature for party purposes. It is wise because it insures that the whole subject shall be deliberately considered, with fair chance for discussion and for getting the benefit of the best information and judgment available. It is bold because on the one hand it defies the petty and the big politicians of the Governor's own party, and on the other hand openly puts on the Governor himself the responsibility for the selection of the commission.

If this plan is carried through as it is now understood to be arranged, of course everything will depend on the character of the commission. At any time within the past fourteen years that might have been expected to be a matter of bargaining between the Governor and the machine. It will hardly be so in this case. At least it will not be matter of negotiation in which the machine will impose on the Governor men who will defeat his own honorable purpose, or carry out any illegitimate purposes of the machine. The work of the Governor in the same direction heretofore is ample proof of that. He will name men who are competent and entitled to the confidence of the public. The machine will probably take them as it has taken like men before. If it refuses to do so, it will have to face public opinion in a contest such as it has so far avoided with great good judgment. On the facts as they are now known, we repeat that the Governor is entitled to the respect and gratitude of the people of this city.

LESSONS FROM MR. WANAMAKER.

The Industrial Commission on Saturday heard Mr. JOHN WANAMAKER on the general subject of department stores. Incidentally he dropped a hint as to the operation of the protective tariff and its probable future which is extremely significant.

The plain truths that he told as to the development of the department stores ought really to possess no novelty for the members of the commission, for they are sustained by the knowledge, observation, and experience of most persons of common intelligence. But it must not be forgotten that within the last two years the department store has been discussed from the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States as illustrating the tendency to monopoly and the ruthless concentration of trades in a few hands to the injury of small dealers and the general public. At the same time there has been quite a widespread movement on the part of the disinterested small dealers to check this tendency by such legislation as they could induce small politicians to frame and enact. Under these circumstances it was worth while for a man of the experience and authority of Mr. WANAMAKER to point out that the evolution of the department store is in the line of the general trade and industrial evolution of the country. The big farmer of the Dakotas, who, from the first stirring of the soil to the loading of the grain at his door on the car that is to deliver it at the lake side, employs machinery that displaces the labor of hundreds who would have been required twenty years since, is doing with his capital, his brains, and his co-operation with others precisely what the department store owner is doing in his field.

And the result is the same with regard to the general welfare. The product reaches markets that never could have been reached, and the agriculture of the land sustains a far larger body of workers than it did a score of years ago. If we take into consideration the market made for labor in transportation and in the manufacture, distribution, and operation of all the machinery and material used in transportation and on the farms, the progress is almost incalculable. In the same way the improvements made by the department store, the reduction in price, the extension of the market and of the demand for goods have compelled the employment of constantly increasing amounts and varieties of labor. There are large fields of such employment that were absolutely unknown to the last generation. On whatever ground the department store is to be criticised—and it is open to criticism—it clearly is not for having lessened the total of opportunities for earning a living. On this point all the evidence and all the reasonable inference are against the small dealers and the Justices of the Supreme Court.

In the course of his testimony before the commission Mr. WANAMAKER, as we have noted, let fall a remark as to the tariff. He observed that the heaviest blow ever received by the carpet business of Philadelphia was when the high tariff was put on imported carpets, shutting them out and leading to over-home production. Later he added that one of the conditions of future prosperity was the regulation of the tariff so that it would "stay regulated." The mischief wrought by the excessive tariff duties on carpets was what Mr. WANAMAKER describes, and it was something more. The home weavers not only flooded the restricted market, but until they were driven to it by home competition and later by the need of wider markets, they failed to make that progress that they would have made, and made easily, had they been forced to it. Thus it will be seen that underlying the protective tariff is the same idea that inspires the opposition to the department store—the idea of arbitrary shelter from an open struggle. And it is a logical inference that the tariff will never "stay regulated" until it is reduced to a revenue basis, so that it will interfere the least possible with the free operation of the "fixed trade laws," that have made the "modern retail store natural and useful, and therefore inevitable."

THE COMMERCIAL TREATIES WITH CHINA

The Secretary of State, in transmitting his estimates to the Treasury Department, lays particular stress on "the necessity of keeping a vigilant and efficient watch over the growing interests of American trade and enterprise in the Far East." He recommends the appropriation of $1,000 each to pay the salaries of ten student interpreters, being young men of American citizenship between the ages of eighteen and twenty-four, attached to the legation at Peking. This is a highly intelligent suggestion, and, taken in connection with the further recommendation of advancing Consular clerks to Consular places after five years' satisfactory service, shows a disposition on the part of Secretary HAY to lay the foundation of an educated and permanent Consular system. This is, manifestly, an absolute necessity for the protection and furtherance of our commercial interests in China. The questions arising there can be satisfactorily dealt with only by men possessing a thorough technical knowledge of Chinese official methods, and able to meet on their own ground a particularly elusive and subtle class of experts.

Take the question of the revision of the treaties, to facilitate the settlement of which LI HUNG CHANG has just been appointed Minister of Commerce, with SHENG, of Railroad Commission fame, as his Special Commissioner. The treaties under which both England and the United States conduct their present commerce with China were concluded at Tien-Tsin in 1858, and are subject to periodic revision. Last year the Chinese Government gave notice of its intention to demand a revision of the tariff and the commercial articles. It is admitted that this demand is well founded, because from a combination of various circumstances, including currency changes, the actual duties collected under a nominal 5 per cent. standard do not exceed 3½ to 4 per cent. The Chinese are fully entitled, therefore, to a revision of the scale fixed in 1858. But this scale was accompanied by a stipulation that the amount of transit dues legally leviable upon merchandise imported or exported by the subjects or citizens of the countries on whose behalf the Tien-Tsin treaties were concluded, should be one-half of the tariff duties. In other words, it was agreed that on payment of a sum in name of transit duty, goods—whether of export or import—should be free to pass between the port of shipment or entry to or from any part of China without further charge of toll, octroi, or tax of any description whatever. This was held by the chief negotiator at that time, Lord ELGIN, to be a most important point gained in the future interests of foreign trade with China.

This agreement has been systematically violated by the provincial collectors of "Likin" and "Loti-shui," and it is mainly due to these exactions, made in defiance of the treaties, that import trade with the great consuming markets of the interior is still relatively insignificant. As a matter of fact, the transit and terminal duties levied by the provincial authorities amount to what is, practically, a prohibitory tariff. While the proposal is, therefore, quite reasonable that the combined import and transit duties should be raised from 7½ per cent. to 10 per cent., the main question is, will such a payment relieve the goods from all further levies, in whatever form imposed? The Tsung-li-Yamen will readily undertake, as they have done before, to see that no attempt shall be made to collect duty on goods protected by a transit pass. But the central Government of China is notoriously powerless to control the action of the provincial authorities, and neither England nor the United States, in its dealings with China, has taken due account of that fact. As the Viceroys get no salary to speak of, and no allowance for the support of their Government, while they have to turn in a fixed annual sum to the Imperial Treasury, not to mention the liberal presents they have to make to those inside the Palace Ring, they are not apt to pay much attention to instructions from Peking as to how they shall raise money. If the Imperial Government takes all there is of the customs and likin duties, they are thrown back on the salt monopoly and the land tax, and there is a limit to the endurance, even of the most lightly taxed people in the world.

It is absurd, therefore, to discuss a revision of import, export, and transit duties without securing the assent of the provincial authorities. Unless they receive, in some form or other, adequate compensation for the loss of revenue involved in any proposed change, they will continue to exact duties as now, ignoring all treaties bearing on the subject, and leaving the foreign merchant in a worse position than ever, because of the agreement he has made to pay the increased scale. It is in dealing with the details of a question like this that the aid of a trained Consular service in China would be of tremendous advantage at the present juncture. If we are to have a revision of the treaties on a basis of a 2½ per cent. increase of duty, it must be on the clearly defined and unqualified condition that our goods are to be absolutely freed from any kind of inland taxation, no matter how remote their place of destination. But that will prove an empty stipulation, unless some part of the 2½ per cent. or whatever increase may be found reasonable, is hypothecated for the use of the provinces. It has been said, after a careful study of the subject, that the settlement of how such amounts should be apportioned and distributed, and what forms of guarantee should be obtained, may safely be left to those whose experience of the country has furnished them with the knowledge essential for the equitable adjustment of questions of this character. But the Government of the United States comes to the revision of the treaties without having any such men at its disposal—one penalty among the many which it has had to pay for the neglect to raise its Consular service to the dignity of a profession.

ANGLOPHOBIA IN FRANCE.

The significance of the attacks of a certain section of the French press upon the British Government and the indecent lampooning of the Queen has been incomprehended in this country. When Mr. CHAMBERLAIN attempted to rebuke French manners, Englishmen as well as Americans rightly thought that by so doing he had lowered the dignity of the high office which he held. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN dwelt upon the personal character of the abuse. Had he shunned this element, had he explained the origin, the character, and the aim of the attacks, he would have rendered a service to the British public no less than to the Government across the Channel. He would then have said things which would not have been beneath the dignity of the Secretary of State for the Colonies to utter.

It has been generally felt that Anglophobia in France is stimulated by the spirit of revenge for the attitude of the English press in regard to the Dreyfus case. This is a mistake. The British press did not heap abuse upon France. The French people received the greatest consideration from the pens that deplored the militarism of France and lashed the members of the General Staff who were traitors to the republic. Moreover, there is nothing to show that the detestable form in which French Anglophobia finds expression is the working out of revenge. The cause of the movement, for it is nothing less, lies at the very root of those forces which are seeking to overthrow the present French Government. Mr. CHAMBERLAIN should have known this.

For a little over a quarter of a century the people of France possessed but one national sentiment; it was the winning back of Alsace and Lorraine. The representatives of the people voted millions to the navy and to the army—particularly to the army. No intelligible account of expenditure was required or expected by the legislators. The sentiment that gathered around the army gradually molded itself into a form of adoration inimical to a democratic State, the humiliating sequel of which the Dreyfus case has just laid bare. The people of France awoke. Instead of the invincible corps led by patriotic and honorable officers, they found hordes of Pretorian guards pledged to a military hierarchy, certain conspicuous members of which were forgers, perjurers, and traitors. The reconquest of the provinces was realized to be an impossibility.

At this juncture, supported by the various groups of the party of the republic, the Waldeck-Rousseau Ministry came into power. But before it could restore confidence and reorganize the national institutions and sweep away every vestige of the régime which had made the Dreyfus case possible, the "yellow journals" of France, which had so long clamored for "La Revanche," and deceived and bewildered the masses while a few honest Frenchmen were fighting to rectify a grave failure of justice, started upon a new campaign. It was a campaign to repair their shattered circulation. They proclaimed that "La Revanche" was a thing of the past. They insisted with specious arguments that it was better to have Germany for an ally than for an enemy. They easily showed the futility of the dual alliance as a weapon of offense. In declaring that both Russia and Germany would gladly ally themselves with France in a triple league against England they kept well within the bounds of truth.

The French Government, pledged to the work of "republican defense," to internal reform, to the rehabilitation of the good name of the nation, refused to be dazzled by the illusion. Then the Nationalist press, eager for some new weapon with which to attack the Government, seized the opportunity. By reviling Great Britain it hoped to produce a situation in which the Cabinet could not sustain itself. The gutter papers were not slow to realize that their efforts to interest Frenchmen in a new national policy had received encouragement from the opponents of the Government. As attacks upon the English people and the British Government failed to produce the desired effect, a systematic campaign of insult was begun against the British sovereign, with the idea of provoking some official reply.

The ruse succeeded. The reply came. The Colonial Secretary fell into the trap just as a London County Councilman might have fallen into it. Thus the position of the French Government became most embarrassing. But as it had remained oblivious to the red flag flaunted in its face in the Place de la Nation on Nov. 19, so it turned a deaf ear to the cries for retaliation, and blandly prohibited the circulation in France of German caricatures insulting the Queen.

We trust that this touch of irony will not be lost upon Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. We hope that his neighbors in the Foreign Office have already enlightened him as to the present political situation in France, where a few honest, patriotic statesmen are striving to work out the salvation of their country against fearful odds.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Much as we delight in good stories about good dogs, and inclined as we are to believe that since the beginning of recorded time nothing at once so remarkable and so well authenticated has been related about a dog as is to be recorded here and now, yet we tell the tale with extreme reluctance and a full realization of the peril that threatens those who do not heed the lesson of Mr. KIPLING'S "A Matter of Fact." For, though our dog story is absolutely true, if there is any confidence to be placed in human testimony, it is close to absolutely incredible, and its presentation is bound to abrade the laboriously acquired and highly prized reputation for uncompromising accuracy which this column now enjoys. However—In one of New York's northern suburbs there lives an amiable and intelligent collie named Leo. His master comes to the city daily and from the nature of his business returns sometimes on one train and sometimes on another. This sort of irregularity, as many a suburbanite knows, is calculated to work havoc with dinner arrangements; but, thanks to a mysterious power possessed by Leo, practically all inconvenience is avoided. Leo has an inward monitor, or a hyper-sense, that informs him when his master begins his journey from the Grand Union Station and conveys this information to the home-staying portion of the family by a combination of leaps and barks that he uses for no other purpose! The signal is given daily, and has been for years, and no matter whether it comes at 4 or 5 o'clock in the afternoon or at 7 or 8 o'clock in the evening, it is always correct, and the final preparations for dinner immediately begin, to be completed just as the master arrives. It is hardly to be supposed that Leo has a faculty unshared by other dogs in some degree or other, and we would be glad to receive, from such few of our readers as do not reject the whole story with scorn, any light on the subject they can supply.

—New versions of what happened in the sea fights at Manila and Santiago will doubtless keep coming in until after everybody who saw one or the other of those exciting episodes has put in a form satisfactory to himself, the sum of his own observations and inferences. That the versions all differ widely in unimportant details, and do not hang together very well even in those of greatest consequence, need not trouble anybody, for it only illustrates the always interesting working out of the personal equation. Of all the battle incidents, none has been rehearsed in a greater variety of forms than the withdrawal of Admiral DEWEY'S ships after the destruction of the Spanish fleet had been half effected. We have ourselves printed the story in at least a hundred shapes, but, having found a new and particularly good one—here it is to add to the others. Lieut. A. G. KAVANAGH, who stood on the Olympia's bridge on the famous May Day, said at Omaha last week that it wasn't at all a question of refreshments. "It is true," he explained, "that we stopped firing and pulled away, but the Admiral had no thought of breakfast when he gave the order. It was then positively known that we had the best of the Spaniards, and there was no occasion for rushing matters. Part of their fleet was on fire and they had dead and wounded all about them. Immediately after we pulled away, Admiral DEWEY summoned all the Captains on board, and a consultation was held. Ammunition was also examined and counted. While this was going on the men ate breakfast, and that gave rise to the story which has been told so many times throughout the United States. The Admiral did not explain to us why he pulled out, and nothing was said about 'twenty minutes for breakfast.'" The Lieutenant added that the battle was fought at long range only because the harbor charts were untrustworthy. "If we had known the waters there as well as we afterward learned them, we could have run alongside the Spaniards, and then the battle wouldn't have lasted more than twenty minutes or half an hour."

—A Washington paper quotes an American recently returned from Cuba as talking in a way singularly suggestive of, because very similar to, the remarks made by Britishers familiar from experience or otherwise with the condition of affairs that caused the present war. The Cubans, according to this authority, seem to feel a bitter and contemptuous hatred for all Americans and neglect no opportunity to insult them. On the streets of HAVANA, as the account goes, American women are constantly assailed with vile language, and at night even our men are not safe from violence unless they are in parties of considerable size. The traveler added: "There seems to be no adequate remedy for this state of things, for if an American undertakes to get personal satisfaction for insults offered by Cubans, he is apt to be thrown into jail and heavily fined; whereas if he takes his case to the courts there is no punishment meted out to the offenders. The situation is embarrassing and irritating, and unless something is done to relieve it an explosion is apt to result, for our people are not going to tamely submit to indignities forever at the hands of an inferior race." We are disposed to think that there is a good deal of exaggeration in these assertions, but it is a fact that until very recently—perhaps things have been changed by the President's message—the majority of Cubans manifested a much intenser dislike for Americans than for Spaniards. The feeling resulted in a severe social ostracism of the few Cubans who from good sense or for financial reasons were inclined to associate with the "invaders," and they were sent to Coventry by their fellow-countrymen in a way they found very hard to endure. The notable point in the words quoted above is the reference to "indignities at the hands of an inferior race." There is a prophecy of serious trouble in that—trouble for which the Cubans will not be alone responsible.

—Mr. GAMALIEL BRADFORD, who, for reasons that have as yet been carefully and successfully concealed from us, commands the use of a large amount of space in several of the Boston papers, presents in The Herald of that city a long explanation of why President MCKINLEY is never to have a vote of his. Perhaps the most significant part of this momentous essay is the following: "As regards free silver, while there is not in the United States a stronger advocate of the gold standard, I feel that there is but little danger of actual free coinage at 16 to 1, particularly as all the action in favor of silver has thus far come from the Republican Party. But, if it should come, I believe that the disaster would be trifling and remediable in comparison with a popular indorsement of Mr. MCKINLEY'S policy; that, whatever may be the faults or follies of the next Administration, the one thing to be aimed at now is an unmistakable declaration of the country that it does believe in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States; or, at any rate, that it does not believe in a policy of foreign conquest and militarism at home and abroad." Incidentally, Mr. BRADFORD remarks that, "rather than see polygamy legalized in this country I would vote for the destruction of the Union," and his conclusion is: "As at present advised, I propose to support the Democratic candidate and platform, whoever or whatever they may be, provided only they are strongly enough committed on this point." From which it appears that the Boston anti-expansionists are so thoroughly excited that they say "propose" when they mean "purpose."

COL. HOFF IN PUERTO RICO.

An evidence of the way in which our officers are doing their work in Puerto Rico and winning the victories of peace is given in the following letter to The San Juan News. Col. HOFF is the chief medical officer of the United States Army in the island and Chairman of the Relief Committee charged with distributing food to the sufferers from the hurricane of August last:

Ponce, Puerto Rico, Nov. 27, 1899.

To the Editor of The San Juan News:

Sir: I see by your Sunday edition that freedom is going to crown Puerto Rico and that Mr. KENNEDY is going to be Territorial Governor. Everybody of democratic ideas wishes him success, but if there is one man in the American Nation to-day who should be honored by his Government to that important position, it is Col. JOHN VAN R. HOFF, a medical officer, soldier, and statesman, equal to any occasion or emergency that may arise, "a soldier of the old school," with liberal and broad views and ideas, a man who recognizes competency, and, above all, possesses common sense and good judgment; who knows how to adopt means of sanitation and keep, as he has done, this tropical island of Puerto Rico practically immune from yellow fever or malaria, &c. The medical department may feel proud of him as its "savior" in Puerto Rico. He has brought the Hospital Corps to a very creditable standard. His guidance and opinions are solicited by everybody in all walks of life. He is the friend of the poor and needy, and his motto is, "He bid the weak be strong." A. H. S.

A RHYME OF "CHRISTIAN SCIENCE."

Herbert M. Clarke, Ph. D., in The Living Church.

Dear Christian Science people,
You are a funny folk;
The funniest things you tell us,
And swear they are no joke.

A discovery you've made
Astounding all creation:
Diseases don't exist,
They are just imagination!

Oh, what good news you bring,
How much it ought to please us,
That neither ache nor pain
Can any longer tease us!

And yet it's very queer,
And this in you I'm blaming,
That when there's no disease,
To heal disease you're claiming.

GROWTH OF UNIVERSALISM

Dr. Crowe Gives the Reasons for Abandoning the Old Creed.

BEHIND RELIGIOUS THOUGHT

Doctrines Once Considered Radical Now Extremely Conservative—New Statement of Principles.

At the Church of the Eternal Hope, in West Eighty-first Street, yesterday morning, the Rev. Dr. W. S. Crowe preached on the subject, "Why We Abandoned Our Creed," his sermon being a defense of the recent action of the Universalist Church in abolishing its historic creed, adopted at Winchester, N. H., in 1803, and substituting for it a platform containing a declaration of five Universalist principles. Printed cards containing the abandoned creed and the platform of principles adopted at Boston last October were handed to the members of the congregation as they entered the church.

"The Universalist creed adopted ninety-six years ago," said Dr. Crowe, "was a remarkably broad and liberal profession of faith for that age. Other churches regarded it as extremely radical—so radical as to be quite outside the limits of Christian belief. The Universalist Church, with many of the leading scholars and thinkers in the other churches, traveled on and on until the old creed became extremely conservative—so conservative as to be quite behind the rear guard of religious thought."

Dr. Crowe then quoted the first article of the old creed, which reads: "We believe that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments contain a revelation of the character of God and of the duty, interest, and final destination of mankind."

"It was to the word 'destination' in the first article," he continued, "that the Universalist Church by and by objected. A destination is a place. Our fathers had before their eyes the old, materialistic, child-like pictures of heaven—pictures of an ancient walled city with gold-paved streets. The Bible reveals the principles of a religious life; it does not reveal a destination. The Universalist Church came to regard those descriptions as entirely poetic, purely imaginative. Then our church entered the struggle for a change of the creed."

Continuing, Dr. Crowe quoted the second article of the old creed, as follows: "We believe that there is one God whose nature is love, revealed in one Lord Jesus Christ, by one Holy Spirit of grace, who will finally restore the whole family of mankind to holiness and purity."

"If men were not familiar with the doctrine of the Trinity," he said, "this article would not suggest it; but because that is the popular thought about God, people have always seen a kind of half-and-half Unitarian-Trinitarianism in it. As a simple fact of history, that is what was intended. At the beginning of the century there were both Unitarians and Trinitarians in the church, and their common creed had to be a compromise. In the course of time our church became solidly Unitarian. Then the look of the article misrepresented us.

"There was also difficulty over the word 'restore' in the last clause. You can only restore a thing to a former condition. 'Restore' very emphatically teaches that mankind was once in the condition of holiness and happiness. Our church has always kept close to the advancing thought of the world, and when the science of evolution came along, we could no longer say that mankind would be 'restored' to holiness. People must be educated, disciplined, developed, refined into holiness."

The last article of the creed was then discussed. It reads: "We believe that holiness and true happiness are inseparably connected, and that believers ought to be careful to maintain order and practice good works; for these things are good and profitable unto men."

"The third article," said Dr. Crowe, "is a curious, almost bewildering, compromise. To the different parties in the church a hundred years ago 'holiness and happiness' meant one thing and 'holiness and true happiness' a very different thing. There were certain men in that early day who believed in the 'death and glory' doctrine, while other men were struggling toward what we call 'salvation by character.' According to the former, sin belonged absolutely to the physical appetites and passions, while the soul was forever pure. The other party believed that good and evil belonged to the soul, to the man himself. True happiness, according to them, was of a moral and spiritual character, inseparably connected with holiness. By holiness they meant that purity of life which men struggled for and attained.

"But even in the philosophy of these more rational and common sense men, the great idea of salvation by character was only half developed, as you will readily see in the remainder of the third article, which is a strange lapse into orthodoxy. Before the comma men were saved by morality, after the comma by belief. Before the comma we looked into the future world and saw that the good, by a necessity of the moral law, were happy. After the comma we looked into the future world and saw that Emerson, Darwin, Lincoln, and Jefferson never could be happy until they became believers. This back-sliding article gently cautioned but did not command 'believers' not to be vain and careless in this world, because they had mortgaged the glory of the next.

"Are you surprised that we buried such a creed? Are you not astonished that we delayed burying it until the year 1899? Are you not amazed that any man voted to retain the self-contradictory puerilities of this third article? How preposterous if we had gone into the twentieth century with such a misstatement of our great, strong, vitalizing rational faith.

"The platform which we have adopted is not a creed. Its declarations are the broad statements of religious principles. You can feel proud of your church, and your heart can lay hold anew on the vital things of Christianity as you repeat them and teach them."

CHRISTMAS GIFT TO A CHURCH.

Jersey City Congregation Pays Off a Debt and Creates a Surplus.

The Rev. P. G. Blight, pastor of Palisade Methodist Church, Jersey City, began the morning service yesterday by saying that a debt of $1,600 had been hanging over the church for several years. He said that if the members contemplated making any Christmas gifts to the church, they could not do better than subscribe to a fund for wiping out the debt. The members of the congregation agreed with him, and in a few minutes they had subscribed $2,200.

The pastor said the surplus could be readily used in refurnishing the church.

GALLAUDET MEMORIAL SERVICE.

Appropriate Anniversary Ceremonies in the Church of St. Ann.

The one hundred and twelfth anniversary of the birth of the Rev. Dr. Thomas Hopkins Gallaudet, one of the founders of the deaf-mute institutions in this country, was celebrated yesterday afternoon with appropriate ceremonies in the Episcopal Church of St. Ann, One Hundred and Forty-eighth Street west of Amsterdam Avenue. The Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet, a son of Dr. Gallaudet, was one of the officiating clergymen. He was assisted by the Rev. Dr. John Chamberlain.

The service was that prescribed by the Episcopal ritual translated into the sign language, the service for the dead being its principal feature. The clergymen were assisted by representatives from several deaf-mute institutions in the city, including Thomas Froelich, Mr. Fox, Prof. Jones, and Mr. Barnes. About 200 deaf-mutes attended.

ST. JAMES'S ANNIVERSARY.

Services at the Methodist Episcopal Church—Bishop Hurst's Sermon.

The sixty-ninth anniversary of the organization of St. James's Methodist Episcopal Church, now at Madison Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-sixth Street, was celebrated yesterday by special services at the church. The congregation has always remained in the same neighborhood, first worshipping in a small building in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street. For many years it occupied a church in One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street on the line of what is now Lexington Avenue, the building being torn down when the avenue was opened.

The services yesterday morning were conducted by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. Ezra Squier Tipple, the sermon being preached by Bishop John F. Hurst of Washington. His theme was "The Imperiled [illegible] of all civilization to-day." Hurst, "is toward Christianity. Gladiator' represents a dying one that is dying fast. More printed than ever before, and throughout the world Christian advancing.

DR. VAN DYKE TO STUDENTS.

Objects to and Will Not Preach a Farewell Sermon—Lessons from Joseph's Life.

The Rev. Dr. Henry Van Dyke preached a sermon in the Brick Presbyterian Church last night addressed especially to the students of New York. The sermon had been advertised as the farewell sermon of Dr. Van Dyke, but this he denied.

Dr. Van Dyke, soon after it was announced that he had accepted the Chair of Literature at Princeton University, was requested by the Students' Club to deliver to it and the students of New York and their friends a special sermon. Dr. Van Dyke said last evening before the service:

"I am going to stay here as long as I desire, and I shall not leave until I get ready. I do not know when I shall go to Princeton, and I will not preach any farewell sermon. That is a term I have to say about the matter. There has been too much said about it already."

The church was crowded with the young men and women students of this city. There were not a seat to be had either in the body of the church or in the gallery after the services began. Dr. Van Dyke's sermon was on the life, character, and career of Joseph. He said, by way of introduction:

"I have taken for discussion this evening the life of Joseph, for the students of New York. In the seventeen years of my service in the seventeen years of my pastorate there have no greater cause for gratitude than the welcome that the students of New York have given to me and that they have given me. This to come to this church.

"This sermon, I am afraid, will be wrongly called a farewell sermon. It should not be so called. I don't like the term 'farewell sermon.' I have been for the past three months repeatedly requested to preach a farewell sermon. I do not intend to preach such a sermon. I am in hopes to preach another sermon to the students of New York, and I may have another chance to speak, but that will not be a farewell sermon. This is my last special sermon which I shall deliver to the students in this church in my official capacity as pastor of this church, and I hope it will prove a broad, clear, honest message to them."

Dr. Van Dyke said that Joseph was the most interesting character in the Bible. He continued:

"I take it for granted that most of my hearers have read the life of Joseph. If you don't know the story I would advise you to postpone the reading of the latest article or some unfinished newspaper and read the story. The life and career of Joseph is one which every young man can admire and imitate."

Dr. Van Dyke spoke of the idealism of Joseph, and said he was sorry for the young man who had no ideals. "Man," he said, "was not made to be a machine, nor a woman either, for that matter. We can make ourselves machines, but when we do this we cease to be men and women. The cobbler who never gets beyond his last is apt to be a mighty poor cobbler, and I could not have him mend my shoes. I should take them elsewhere. True manhood and womanhood cannot exist without an ideal standard. These are the finer feelings which have no market value, but which must be kept alive."

Dr. Van Dyke, in speaking of Joseph's high office as a trust to be carried for the benefit of the people. He continued: "There is nothing ignoble in the desire for money if there is a desire to get wealth for noble purposes. The trouble is, too many people desire wealth who do not, when they acquire it, acknowledge their stewardship and put their wealth to the best possible and noble uses. I believe in being honest with young men. Money is not the root of all evil, but it is the selfish, avaricious use of money which is the root of evil.

"This contest, I contest, is a contest like an athletic contest, and the aim is not always for success. The object, like that in an athletic contest, is to put up as good a game as possible."

In speaking of the principles of Joseph, he advised his hearers to profit by Joseph's admonitions to his lofty principles.

"What you young men need," he said, "is not more principles, but a moral backbone in adhering to and living up to them. When young women leave home to come to the city to study music or take up some other branch of education, they are apt to become somewhat careless. Since the emancipation of woman this seeking for enlightenment in distant places has become a practice. It is a good thing, for it increases the intelligence of the women. But they are apt to neglect the Sabbath and yield too easily to the pleasures and indulgences and ease which afforded them."

WAR ON THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

The New York Anti-Saloon League began its crusade in this city against the liquor traffic at a well-attended meeting yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The meeting was conducted by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, assisted by Dr. John Lewis Clark, superintendent of the league for the Manhattan district.

Among those in the boxes and on the platform were Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, Mrs. Russell Sage, Mrs. Annie W. Clark of Columbus, Ohio, President of the Ohio State Woman's Christian Temperance Union; Warner Van Norden, C. N. Howard, Rochester, N. Y., founder of the Prohibition Union of Christian Men; Mrs. Hugh O'Neil, the Rev. and Mrs. J. W. Chapman, the Rev. Dr. J. S. Ashley, the Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Francis, William T. Wardwell, Mrs. Theodore Sutro, Dr. and Mrs. R. S. Morris, the Rev. C. E. Wyckoff, Theodore Warren, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Sheldon, Mrs. M. B. Starr, Louise M. Starr, and Mary Lowe Dickinson.

The Countess Schimmelmann made the opening address.

"There is a feeling in this country," she said, "that we set morals over law. I need not stop to say that in the next century America will be the leading country of the world. But what is the right lead? simply to be an out-and-out Christian country. If you follow in the footsteps of your great Washington and Lincoln and the other great Christian men of your country your leadership is assured." In closing she appealed to the audience to strengthen the hands of those pushing the work of the Anti-Saloon League.

J. G. A. Henry, State Superintendent of the league, then gave an outline of the object of his organization. "The object of the Anti-Saloon League," he said, "is to moderate the churches, the various temperance organizations, and other moral forces in the community and the State, irrespective of religious creed or political affiliation, in opposition to the evils of the drink traffic. Politically it pledges itself to avoid alliation with any political party, and maintains an attitude of neutrality on all questions of public policy not directly concerning with the traffic in strong drink.

"Its first department of work is that of widespread and sustained agitation, by which it seeks to build up public sentiment against the drinking saloon. Its second department of work is that of legislation, by which it seeks to secure better laws for the regulation and ultimate suppression of the saloon. In the third place we have a department devoted to law enforcement. This work is carried on by stimulating public officers to do their duty, by putting a right public opinion behind them, by giving them to understand that the enforcement of law is demanded, by showing them that it is easier and better to do right in public office than to do wrong, and by sustaining them in the performance of their sworn duty in the enforcement of existing ordinances and statutes.

"The Anti-Saloon League was born in Ohio six years ago. It is now organized in thirty-two States and Territories; it employs more than 160 men and women who give their entire time to its work; there are over 3,000 Anti-Saloon Leagues in these States; local victories are numbered not by the hundred, but by the thousand. It began its work in the Empire State in the middle of May, since which time more than 600 meetings have been held in more than 200 towns, in which more than 700 Christian churches have been represented. More than 100 local leagues have been formed, many of which are doing aggressive work along the lines of agitation and law enforcement."

Called to a Brooklyn Church.

SEA CLIFF, L. I., Dec. 10.—The Rev. George Groves, Jr., formerly assistant in Calvary Parish, New York, and now rector of St. Luke's Parish at Sea Cliff, to-day announced from his pulpit his intention to accept a call to become assistant rector of Christ Church, Brooklyn. His relations with St. Luke's Church will be severed the first of the year.

THE CALL TO DR. PURVES

Mr. Rowland Hopes Definite Action Will Soon Be Taken.

MR. MORGAN'S NAME DROPPED

London Minister Will Not Be Invited to Fill Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church's Pulpit.

The dispatch printed yesterday that a committee from the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church had called upon Prof. G. T. Purves of Princeton University to ask him if he would consider a call to the vacant pastorship was confirmed after the services yesterday morning by H. Edwards Rowland, Chairman of the Pulpit Supply Committee of the church, in the following written statement:

"A committee of the Fifth Avenue Church visited the Rev. Dr. Purves at Princeton on Saturday with the object of ascertaining his views in relation to the pastorate of the church, and as a result of their interview it is hoped that definite action in the matter will be taken in the near future, but a congregational meeting has not yet been called."

This is the first official statement that has been made by the committee since the declination of the Rev. Alexander Connell of London to succeed Dr. Hall, and, while it brings the question of successorship for the time being directly to Dr. Purves, effectually disposes of the unofficial announcement that the Rev. G. Campbell Morgan of the New Court Congregational Church of London will be invited to the Fifth Avenue Church.

So far as Mr. Morgan is concerned, the committee actually did decide to recommend him, and an official cablegram was sent asking him if he would consider a call, although it was then known that Mr. Morgan was a candidate for the place. But almost from the time that the news became known mutterings of disapproval began to be heard from members of the congregation. There was no objection to Mr. Morgan concerning his abilities as a preacher, so far as any one has openly stated, but Mr. Morgan's mannerisms—those of a pronounced evangelist—were the rocks on which the Pulpit Committee and a large portion of the congregation split.

Neither was the committee unanimous in the recommendation in the first place; but after going over the list of half a dozen "available" ministers and spurred on by dissatisfied members of the congregation, whose loudest cry was "Only get us a minister, we trust in your judgment," to do something, the Pulpit Committee voted to recommend Mr. Morgan. One of the committee remarked privately at the time that something had to be done, "and, as Mr. Morgan seemed to be a 'pretty good sort of a fellow,' why, we just decided to have him."

The decision to recommend Mr. Morgan was arrived at Sunday, Nov. 19. Just previous to that time some of the younger members of the congregation, headed by Messrs. Auchincloss and Hawes, were considering the circulation of a petition asking the members of the Pulpit Committee to resign and give others a hand at selecting a pastor to fill the pulpit. This petition, however, was never presented.

The congregation "was sounded" after the cablegram was sent to Mr. Morgan, and the sounding kept on, it was said yesterday, until something like a week ago. In the meantime the younger element of the church began a new campaign of activity. The young men decided that Dr. Purves would be acceptable, and proceeded to circulate a petition for presentation to the Pulpit Committee that Dr. Purves be asked.

So far as can be learned, this petition was presented at the meeting held at the church last Wednesday. It was then given out that a committee had been appointed to get the views of the congregation on the proposition to have Mr. Morgan come here, but, as it turns out, the committee appointed was the one which journeyed to Princeton on Saturday. Mr. Morgan's name had then been erased from the list.

Mr. Rowland would vouchsafe no explanation yesterday beyond the written statement. He refused to discuss reasons for dropping Mr. Morgan's name. The other members of the Pulpit Committee would say nothing. It was learned, however, that a sub-committee was appointed, presumably to receive Dr. Purves's answer and look into other details of the selection. While refusing to explain the committee's scope, Mr. Rowland said it would make no report until next Sunday.

Should Dr. Purves signify his willingness to accept a call, announcement will have to be made from the pulpit for two successive Sundays before a congregational vote can be taken. It is believed that the congregation will vote to call Dr. Purves, if he will accept. He preached at the church at the May communion and once since then.

A committee appointed to select a tablet to Dr. Hall's memory will meet at the church to-morrow morning. The tablet will be of marble, with a simple inscription thereon, and will be placed at the right of the main entrance to the auditorium. It is expected that it will be in place some time next month. The committee comprises A. G. Agnew, Chairman; Gen. Samuel Thomas, and Francis Forbes.

URGE DR. PURVES TO REMAIN.

Princeton Students, Faculty, and Church Members Want to Keep Him.

PRINCETON, N. J., Dec. 10.—The probability that Dr. George T. Purves will accept a call to the Fifth Avenue Church was the chief topic of conversation here to-day. The students and members of the Faculty in both the seminary and university are in favor of his remaining here, and several letters have already been sent to Dr. Purves urging him to stay.

The Elders of the First Presbyterian Church held a meeting to-day and discussed the matter. It was decided to send a letter to Dr. Purves requesting him not to leave the church.

Dr. Purves preached this morning and evening in his church before large audiences. He, however, made no mention of his call to the Fifth Avenue Church. The university Faculty and students will appeal to him to-morrow to continue his work here.

FUNERAL OF E. C. STONE.

Societies of Which the Assemblyman-Elect Was a Member Represented.

Funeral services were held yesterday for Assemblyman-elect Edward C. Stone, who died Friday at his residence, 265 West One Hundred and Twenty-first Street, from a complication of diseases. Masonic services were held at the house at 10:30 o'clock, and at 11 o'clock there were services in Temple Israel, One Hundred and Twenty-fifth Street and Fifth Avenue. The Rev. Dr. Maurice H. Harris officiated, assisted by the Rev. H. Newmark. Mr. Stone had been a member of a large number of clubs, lodges, and societies, all of which were represented, the congregation almost filling the temple. Among the organizations represented were the following: Anawanda Club, Columbia Club, Centennial Lodge, No. 763, F. and A. M.; Harlem Democratic Club, the Tammany Hall organization of the Thirty-first Assembly District, Montefiore Home, Council and Princes of Jerusalem, Young Men's Hebrew Association, the New York Consistory, and Mecca Temple of the Mystic Shrine.

The honorary pall bearers included Charles G. F. Wahle, M. H. Grossman, Theodore H. Fishel, Benjamin Eichberg, Joseph S. Josephs, and Hugo Oppenheimer. Among others present were Emanuel M. Friend, Fred B. House, Dr. G. G. Fischlowitz, Ferdinand Levy, William Popper, Benjamin Blumenthal, Michael Levy, Percival Menken, Joseph Stern, Benjamin Rees, H. Ettinger, and Isaac A. Hopper.

The interment was at Washington Cemetery, Long Island.

The Niagara Undoubtedly Lost.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Dec. 10.—It is now certain that the Canadian steamer Niagara, Capt. Henry McClory, founded on Tuesday evening last about eight miles east of Long Point, Lake Erie, with all hands, numbering sixteen persons. Tugs sent out from Port Colborne and from Buffalo to search for the missing steamer have returned bringing with them great quantities of wreckage, picked up near where the steamer is supposed to have foundered. The wreckage was of such a nature to prove beyond a doubt that the Niagara had foundered.

WANTS A VICEROY DEGRADED.

France Demands Further Satisfaction for Murder of Officers.

PEKING, Dec. 10.—The French Government has formally demanded the degradation of the Viceroy of Canton because the order to execute the Chinese Magistrate who was responsible for the murder of two French officers at Mongo has not been carried out. The Tsung li Yamen will probably refuse.

GERMANS FEAR AMERICANS.

Agrarian Press Opposes the President's Joint Commission Plan.

BERLIN, Dec. 10.—After keeping silence at first, the Agrarian press now begins to make a united attack upon that part of President McKinley's message to Congress relating to the joint commission proposition. The Deutsche Tages Zeitung says to-day:

"Such a proposition is wholly unacceptable. It is monstrous. Its outcome would be that the shrewd Yankees would bamboozle the German members of the commission about American meat, with caldrons double bottomed, and similar tricks; while the Americans here would manufacture evidence against beers and wines. President McKinley's claim as to the healthfulness of American meats is preposterous after the scandalous embalmed meat trial."

FRANCE MUST HAVE CABLES.

M. Lockroy, ex-Minister of Marine, Speaks of France's Weakness.

PARIS, Dec. 10.—The Figaro publishes an interview to-day with M. Lockroy, former French Minister of Marine, in the course of which he says:

"The British Navy is twice as strong as ours. It is able to oppose simultaneously the navies of France and the Triple Alliance. Everywhere French fleets are stationed they are confronted by twice or thrice their strength.

"France must have cables. Great Britain's bases of support are all connected, and the British are ready for war to-morrow, if necessary, with every nation on the globe."

Herr Rose Not to Return to Samoa.

BERLIN, Dec. 10.—The report that Herr Rose, former German Consul at Apia, will become Governor of Germany's share of the Samoan Islands is without foundation. He will soon resenter the consular service, with an appointment of importance.

German Prisoner Makes a Confession.

BREMEN, Dec. 10.—Ernest Grube, who assaulted Herr Bremermann, one of the Directors of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company, severely wounding him in the head, confessed to-day to having previously assaulted four other persons, one of whom he fatally injured.

The German-American Packet Post.

BERLIN, Dec. 10.—The packet post between the United States and Germany is a success. During the month of October 3,000 packages went from Germany, and during the month of November 5,000, as against 11,000 during the whole of 1897.

Paris Street Caves In.

PARIS, Dec. 10.—Some fifty meters of the Place d l'Etoile fell last night into the Metropolitan Railway tunnel. Ten trees were carried down, and two persons buried in the débris, although quickly rescued.

CENTRAL FEDERATED UNION.

Joseph Barondess Denounces Big Initiation Fees Demanded by Some Unions.

"I protest against the system among some trades unions of driving an honest workingman to become a scab or a thief simply because he cannot afford to pay the enormous initiation fee demanded by them," said Delegate Joseph Barondess at the meeting yesterday of the Central Federated Union. Delegate De Greef of the New York City Carpenters' Union had been speaking about the Brotherhood of Carpenters, who admitted men to membership for an initiation fee of $5. "My union," he said, "does not need more members, and we have raised the initiation fee to $20."

Delegate Barondess asked De Greef: "Are you proud of the fact that your union charges $20 as an initiation fee?" Not getting an answer, he continued: "I think this body ought to take up the matter. I for one will not support an organization that places the initiation fee at the prohibitory figure of $20, and I want to place myself on record in this matter."

Chairman McVey ruled that the Central Federated Union could not take up that question, as it recognized the autonomy of every affiliated union to make rules to govern itself.

Delegate Briody of the House Shorers and Movers made another attack against the new contractor that has been employed by the Department of Buildings, and he mentioned Joseph Cody as the man. Cody, he said, paid his men $1.25 a day instead of $4, and also did not understand the business.

Contractor Cody himself came to the meeting and asked to be heard. He said he had himself been a workingman, and still held his union card. He had always paid his men union wages and always employed union men.

"It is a fact," continued Mr. Cody, "that I pay my men double wages for overtime. It is true that I am not a recognized boss by the unions, but I do better by my men than the recognized bosses do. Some want me to take on more men, but I am not going to carry more men than I need, and those men I pay well. You can appoint a committee to find out whether I am telling the truth or not."

Delegate Briody denied that Cody was telling the truth, and the meeting appointed a committee to investigate.

Delegate Owen Carroll of the Eccentric Engineers said that Henry Miner had made his engineer work seventeen hours a day and seven days in the week for $15 a week, and when the engineer asked for extra pay for Sunday work Mr. Miner discharged him and employed a non-union man in his place.

Delegate Jacobs said he had talked with Mr. Miner, who said the engineer in question had made himself disagreeable and quarreled with the janitor and other employes and refused to allow any one to enter the engine room. As to the new engineer being a non-union man, Mr. Miner had promised to make him enter the union.

The meeting appointed a committee to try to settle the difficulty.

WOMAN FOUND UNCONSCIOUS.

Died in a Cortlandt Street Hotel and Not Yet Identified.

An unknown woman, apparently about thirty-five years old, was found lying unconscious in the vestibule of the Trenton Hotel, at 73 Cortlandt Street, Saturday night. She was removed to a room of the hotel, where she died at 10 o'clock yesterday morning.

The woman was attended by Dr. John Sweeney of 127 Liberty Street, who pronounced the case one of alcoholism. A star-shaped cut on the right side of the woman's head just back of the ear was thought to have been received by her fall in the vestibule. After washing the cut and taking several stitches in it Saturday night, Dr. Sweeney left the hotel, directing that he should be called if the injured woman grew worse. He was sent for shortly after 9 o'clock yesterday morning, but the woman died before he arrived.

The police of the Church Street Station were notified immediately after the woman's death, and are endeavoring to establish her identity. She was about 5 feet 2 inches in height, weighed about 120 pounds, and had a light complexion and light-brown hair. She was dressed in a brown skirt, light calico waist, and black fur-trimmed jacket, and wore a brown hat trimmed with a dark wing. In a much-worn pocketbook was found a fragment of newspaper bearing the almost illegibly pencilled address, "238 Penn Street, Brooklyn." In the pocketbook, also, was a brass baggage check numbered 8,214, issued by the West Jersey and Seashore Railroad at Atlantic City.

The body was removed to the Morgue to await identification. The Coroner's inquest will be held to-day.

The house at 238 Penn Street, Brooklyn, is the home of Robert Francke of the firm of Francke & Schott. Nothing was known there concerning the dead woman's identity. Members of the family could not account for the address being in her possession. It was suggested that the woman might have been a servant in the household at one time, but the family could recall no servant employed by them who fitted her description.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

Canes have "come in" again. The casual man may never have noticed that canes had "gone out," but the fashionable man who has an eye to all the details of dress knows it, and has avoided the carrying of the walking stick as he would the ready-made scarf. It was when young men began to carry the cane with the ferrule end up and the handle trailing along behind him that the walking stick was doomed. So for a couple of years the cane has been tabooed by the exquisite. Now he has taken to the walking stick again, but he carries it as it should be carried and uses it for the purposes for which it was originally intended. Rare woods and handles that have little in the way of ornamentation are the proper thing just now, and the furnishing stores are beginning to bristle again with an assortment of light sticks that a well-dressed man may now carry without being in bad form. The day of the club for a walking stick has not returned, and the lighter the stick the nearer to correct form is the rule.

Manufacturers of automobiles are being rushed with orders for the automobile stage, or 'bus, as they are more properly called. These carriages, which seat from ten to twenty people, are wanted by owners of stage lines that run from small cities to the still smaller suburbs that are not reached by the trolley. All through the New England States, and in many of the Middle Eastern States there are many towns whose suburban residents are compelled to get to and from the trade centres of their localities by the use of lumbering old stages. These old-fashioned stages seem doomed, and the horseless 'bus is to supplant them. One of the first towns in this vicinity that will put these new carriages to use will be New Haven, Conn. The first half dozen of these new-fangled conveyances will be regularly running from the historic old "Green," near Yale University, to various outlying villages by the first of next year. The particular patterns to be used there are those which will seat twelve people and give room for the transportation of a quantity of small freight, such as is handled by the local express wagons. Electricity will be the motive power used, which will also be utilized for heating and lighting. If the scheme meets with success the company making the trial will have built a lot of coaches capable of carrying large parties, and will use them during the Summer to carry picnic parties from the city to the various shore resorts and picnic grounds near the town. The experiment will be watched with interest by a number of capitalists in other cities, who propose to imitate the plan if it proves successful in New Haven. The scheme has already proved a success in some of the Middle Western cities.

When a man comes back from a fishing trip with a yarn about having seen paralyzed fish in the streams he has been fishing that have been struck by lightning, unkind listeners have been apt to suggest that it is very strong liquor that they sell in the vicinity of the streams he has frequented. But now comes the Pennsylvania Fish Commission with a verification of these fish stories. They had heard tales that the brown trout with which some of the streams of the State have been liberally stocked are particularly susceptible to destruction from lightning. Some of the bearers of these tales were men who were not in the habit of drinking, and whose word was worthy of belief. So the Commissioners began an investigation, and though the season for anything but fish stories is ended, they announce that the stories are perfectly true, and that they have found ample verification of the fact. It is the habit of the brown trout to swim close to the bottom of the streams he frequents, and though he is not literally struck by lightning, it is a fact that the electricity is conducted to the bottom of the streams which have rocks containing a considerable amount of iron in them, and so reaches and kills the trout, while it does not affect the fish that swim higher in the water. They say this is particularly true of brown trout in the mountain streams, and that after severe thunderstorms in those regions the pools often contain fish that are in so stunned a condition that they may be taken from the water with the hands if allowed to remain in the stream the fish dies of paralysis.

Firemen have little time to attend to details of their toilet when an alarm of fire comes to their house. This was emphasized on Saturday when the driver of Hook and Ladder Truck No. 1 answered the call for the alarm from the Morse Building, at Nassau and Beekman Streets. Perched up in the air on his seat he was without coat, waistcoat, or hat, and his face was half covered with lather. Great patches spotted his face here and there, and he was a decidedly funny sight as he guided his team through the mass of cars and teams that crowded Park Row through which he had to wend his way to the fire. The driver had been caught in the act of shaving when the alarm was sounded. He had plainly dropped his razor, with the job in hand but half completed, and rushed to his post of duty, never thinking to wipe the lather free from his face until his team came to a halt on Nassau Street in front of the building from which the alarm came. Even then he had the forethought to blanket his horses before the lather was wiped from his face on his shirt sleeve.

Some genius has designed a new cuff for gentleman's wear, and a few have been shown at some of the up-town Broadway haberdashers'. His idea is a double cuff, opening not only at the front, as does the ordinary cuff, but at the back, so that two sets of links have to be used with them. The idea is to use two sets that are entirely different in style, using one set of each pair on each cuff. They make a man's wrists glisten with jewels if one uses links with precious stones in them. As jewelry in excess is bad form, the cuffs have not been a hit as yet, and have been worn only by "sports" and men who go in for the outre in their personal adornments. Well-dressed men do not take to them.

"Speaking about 'ringers,'" said one of the old-time horsemen in attendance at the meeting of the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association at the Murray Hill Hotel last week, "reminds me of a yarn that was told by 'Dan' Dennison, one of the queerest and shrewdest old characters that ever had to do with horses. 'Dan' was out in California at the time, and had a chance to pick up for a little money a very fast old mare that had raced up to her record until she was unable to win in the free-for-all classes. Then she was sold for a roadster, and practically lost sight of. 'Dan' took her down into Southern California, after he had 'bishoped' her a bit, hogged her mane, and fixed her so that no one would ever recognize her as the speedy mare of years before. He had his son drive her, had entered her in one of the slow classes as a four-year-old mare, and had faked up some sort of a pedigree for her. As a matter of fact, she was a dozen years old at least. 'Dan' wanted to have 'a killing' with her, and so had told his boy to 'lay her up' for the first two heats, and let the boys back the other horses well before he put his money down. The mare was full of speed on the day of the race, and the only way the lad could make her lose the first heat was to carry her to a break. He did that well, but the bettors were a bit afraid of the unknown mare. So it was absolutely necessary to the carrying out of his plans to lose the next heat. In the heat the old mare would not break, but trotted as steadily as if she never knew how to do anything else. The driver had therefore to pull her outright. That pulling was the undoing of the job, for, as 'Dan' put it, 'the boy pulled the old mare so hard that her mouth was so wide open that every one on the grand stand could see every one of her teeth. Every sharp could see then that she was at least a dozen years old. They made a howl about her being a four-year-old, and she was thrown out of the race, and the chance for a big winning was done for."

INVITATION TO THE DEWEYS.

Emerald Society of Brooklyn Sends a Committee to Washington.

At a meeting of the Emerald Society of Brooklyn at the Columbian Club yesterday afternoon a committee of three was appointed to visit Admiral and Mrs. Dewey at Washington some time this week and seek to prevail upon them to attend the annual ball of the society at the Brooklyn Academy of Music the last week in January. The committee is composed of Congressman John Fitzgerald, James J. Byrne, the President of the society, and P. J. Carlin. They will carry with them to Washington a letter of introduction to the Admiral from Rear Admiral John W. Philip, Commandant of the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Rear Admiral and Mrs. Philip were the guests of honor at the ball of the society last year.

The Emerald Society is one of Brooklyn's representative social organizations. Its annual ball is given in aid of the Catholic Orphan Asylum. At the annual meeting yesterday James J Byrne was re-elected President of the society.

W. A. BRADY IN CONTROL.

The Trouble at Koster & Bial's Amicably Settled.

The trouble between William A. Brady, who resigned as managing director of Koster & Bial's last Friday night, and the Robert Biel syndicate, represented by Simon Dessau, was amicably settled last night by an arrangement which takes "Around New York in Eighty Minutes" out of the hands of the syndicate. After a conference Mr. Brady announced he had bought the play with all its costumes and accessories.

"We have made a percentage arrangement," said Mr. Brady, "by which the play will be kept here anyway for another week and possibly longer. Beginning with Jan. 15, I will take the play on the road. The time is all booked, including many of the largest cities of the country, until next May. After the play leaves here the house will return to vaudeville."

Mr. Dessau acquiesced in this statement. Mr. Dessau will not, however, act as manager. The name of the man who will succeed him will be announced to-day.

Mr. Dessau announced that the salaries of the players have all been provided for in the adjustment. Robert Biel, who was present at the conference, said he wanted it understood that he withdrew from the syndicate three weeks ago.

THE OPERA HOUSE CONCERT.

That was an unusually discreet and judicious concert, for a Sunday concert, which Mr. Damrosch arranged at the Opera House last evening. The programme was not too long, and was not lengthened by superfluous encores, against which the conductor had set his face. Mr. Pachmann, indeed, took his encore, but that was at the end of the first part and counted against the intermission.

Moreover, the conductor confined himself to three soloists, and one of those escaped, Signor Campanari, whose indisposition was announced, and who was replaced by Mr. Walker, who sang the "Evening Star" in a manner which was fully as inoffensive as it was ineffective. Mme. Schumann-Heink was in very good voice, and Mr. Pachmann in very good form. As an encore to the "Andante Spianato and Polonaise" he was down for, he gave a familiar Chopin waltz even more effective. The work of the orchestra was very good, including a novelty, a well-made and pleasing "Elegy" for strings by Mierach, presumably Mr. Mierach, the first 'cellist of the orchestra.

M. ALVARES'S ARRIVAL.

The Tenor's Interesting Reminiscences—His Knowledge of Chicago.

Albert Alvares, who is to make his début in New York at the Metropolitan Opera House one week from to-night, arrived yesterday morning on the French liner La Gascogne. This is the second visit of M. Alvares to America, although he has not yet sung before a New York audience. In a brief engagement last year with the Ellis Opera Company he appeared in Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cincinnati, and St. Louis.

M. Alvares is at present on a two months' leave of absence as chief tenor of the National Academy of Music at Paris, a place he has held for eight years. His first appearance at the Metropolitan Opera House will be as Romeo in "Romeo et Juliette." Later he will sing in "Faust," "Carmen," "Les Huguenots," "Aida," and "Le Prophet." He sings only in French and Italian.

M. Alvares leaves to-day for Boston, where he will join the Grau Opera Company. It is possible that he will also sing one night in Philadelphia before returning to Paris.

M. Alvarez was seen last night at Flouret's, in Fifth Avenue, where he will stay while in New York. "Apropos of my appearance as Faust," he said, "do you know that I sang that rôle last week, the very night I left Paris? It was the first time for several years. I wanted a little rehearsal before attempting it in America. It was midnight when I left the theatre, and I caught my train at 12:30 o'clock. Almost American 'strenuousness,' is it not?

"My first acquaintance in America did not come through art," said the tenor. "When a clerk in a mercantile house at Bordeaux I conducted a long correspondence with Armour & Co. in Chicago, so I knew Chicago pork long before I did its operagoers. I did not feel altogether a stranger when I sang there last year."

The Strollers' Last Rehearsal.

The Strollers held their last rehearsal of "The Lady from Chicago" on Saturday evening. The first performance of the seven that they will hold will be given to-night at the Waldorf-Astoria, in the grand ballroom. Many charities will be benefited from the proceeds of the performances, which will continue during the week. On the list of patronesses are the names of a great many women well known in New York social circles.

Felix Schweighofer Coming.

Doubts as to whether Felix Schweighofer, the German comedian, will be able to begin his engagement at the Irving Place Theatre on Dec. 25, were removed yesterday when a cablegram was received by Manager Conried announcing that the actor will sail to-morrow from Bremen, hoping to recuperate entirely during the sea voyage.

Old Brooklyn Theatre Sold.

The old Lee Avenue Academy of Music, Lee Avenue and Taylor Street, Brooklyn, has been sold by the Williamsburg Savings Bank, which held it under a mortgage, to Corse Paton, a theatrical man. The theatre has been closed for several years. It will probably be reopened as a theatre.

ANTI-PLAGUE REGULATIONS.

Surgeon General Wyman's Precautions Against the Disease.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 10.—Surgeon General Wyman of the Marine Hospital Service, in view of the officially reported prevalence of plague in Santos, Brazil, and Oporto, Portugal, and the local conditions at those ports, has issued regulations to prevent its introduction into the United States, which regulations are to remain in force until thirty days after the official announcement of the cessation of the plague in these cities.

The regulations prescribe in detail the treatment of vessels from the infected ports, methods of disinfection of ships, cargo, personal effects of passengers, and crew, and the final disposition of vessels, &c.

MEN TO REVISE THE CHARTER.

Several Names Suggested, but the Governor's Intentions Unknown.

Quiet reigned around Republican headquarters yesterday, Chairman Odell being the only man of note who made an appearance. Gov. Roosevelt went to Albany early in the day, and Senator Platt returned to Washington on a morning train.

Some of the local Republicans who gathered at the Fifth Avenue Hotel last evening passed the time in discussing men who possibly might be named to conduct the proposed revision of the charter. The names of Charles Stewart Smith, who introduced the Chamber of Commerce resolution advocating the plan; ex-Mayor Thomas F. Gilroy, who was a member of the commission which drafted the present charter; President Low of Columbia; ex-Judge Dillon, and Gen. Francis V. Greene were among those mentioned, but nothing is known regarding the Governor's intentions.

TAMMANY GOLD STANDARD MEN

Two of Its Members Said to Favor the House Currency Bill.

Two Tammany Congressmen will vote for the House Currency bill, which was introduced last week, according to a report at the Democratic Club last night. They are Jefferson M. Levy of the Thirteenth District and Jacob Ruppert, Jr., of the Fifteenth District. Mr. Levy, in speaking of the matter, said: "I want to deny that the Democratic Congressmen from New York County received instructions from Mr. Croker to vote one way or another. Mr. Croker told us to exercise our own judgment."

Congressman William Sulzer was at the club during the evening, and, speaking of the pending financial measure, said: "No one who votes for this bill is a Democrat. If it is passed it will cause much woe and destruction throughout the land."

WIRE CUT A JUMPER'S THROAT.

CAMDEN, N. J., Dec. 10.—Harry Dick, a young man living on the east side of this city, received to-day what may prove fatal injuries in a peculiar manner. He jumped from the steps at the rear of his home, and before he landed struck a wire clothes line. The wire caught under his chin and cut his throat. He lost much blood, and may die.

He has remained unconscious since he received the injury.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE DOGMA.

Ex-Judge Ewing Tells What He Believes the Faith to Be—Mrs. Eddy's Teaching.

The announcement that ex-Judge William G. Ewing of Chicago would deliver a lecture on Christian Science yesterday was sufficient to fill the Metropolitan Opera House, where the lecture was delivered, with an appreciative audience. An organ recital was given prior to the introduction of the lecturer. Ex-Judge Ewing, who was introduced by Carol Norton, said, in part:

"I assume that ninety-nine-one-hundredths of the people assembled here this afternoon are Christian religionists of some school, and that they are here for the serious purpose of dispassionately learning something of the intellectual, moral, religious, and scientific equipose of Christian Science.

"I want to, if possible, remove from your minds the prevailing prejudices of the old churches against Christian Science, growing, perhaps not unnaturally, out of their ignorance of the subject. There are many points of religious belief and practice upon which the old churches and Christian Scientists are in perfect accord.

"You surely are in favor of whatever makes men and women better, happier, more loving, and more lovable. So are we. You believe in one God and Father of all, infinite in wisdom, justice, goodness, mercy, truth, and love. So do we. You believe in Jesus Christ, the only begotten Son of God. So do we. You believe the Bible is the divinely inspired revelation of God to men. So do we.

"May I now briefly tell you something of what Christian Science is, in the hope that, upon reflection and investigation, we may also agree upon the essentials of Christ's religion as Christian Scientists understand, believe, and practice it?

"Christian Science was discovered and revealed to the world some thirty years ago by the Rev. Mary Baker Eddy, a native of New Hampshire, and now a resident of Concord, in that State. The whole philosophy and practice of Christian Science is published to the world in Mrs. Eddy's book, entitled 'Science and Health, with a Key to the Scriptures.' The latter part of the title, 'With a Key to the Scriptures,' of this marvelous book is very significant, for a great value in Mrs. Eddy's work is found in the light she has thrown upon the real, reasonable, and demonstrable meaning of the Holy Scriptures.

"The older Christian churches urge as an objection against what they conceive Christian Science to be that it is sheer impiety for any person to assert that he is clothed with the power of God to heal the sick. The striking weakness of this objection is that Christian Scientists do not profess any such thing. As it was in the time of Jesus, so now the power that heals the sick is the power of God.

"You believe with Christian Scientists in divine healing, yet do not act upon it as they do. Perhaps it is only after the doctors and patent nostrums have left you helpless and hopeless that you go to God with your sick loved ones, and then not quite assured that He will give you relief, for do you not pray with medicine in your pocket and consulting physicians in the adjoining room? You may believe that in God you live, move, and have your being, yet do you trust your life and health entirely in God's keeping?

"Really your lack of trust in God's healing power is not very strange; it is the natural result of ancestral opinion. Our forbears believed and taught us to believe that God makes us sick. And here is the marked distinction between the old churches' thought and our thought of Him. Christian Scientists do not believe that God makes you sick or blind or deaf or halt, but we do believe that God is infinite love, the great Physician who heals all our diseases.

"Christian Scientists believe that when Jesus went into the temple and read from the prophecy of Esaias concerning himself and his mission to earth, where it is written, 'The spirit of the Lord is upon me, because He hath annointed me to preach the Gospel to the poor; He hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted, to preach deliverance to the captives, and recovery of sight to the blind, to set at liberty them that are bruised,' and, closing the Book, said to the congregation, 'This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears,' Christian Scientists insist that when Jesus did this He thereby made proclamation to all the world of His God-sealed ambassadorship not only to preach the Gospel, but to heal the sick, break the shackles of the bound, and usher in the acceptable year of the Lord.

"I have little time and little disposition to defend Christian Science or the woman who, in hope and prayer and love, found it a God's revelation to man from assaults made upon either. Of Mrs. Eddy I need only say, as one of the tens of thousands of beneficiaries of the truth she revealed, that time to its utmost limit will be too brief for the world to discharge to her its debt of gratitude. As of the science of life—immortal life—she has revealed, it is enough to know that, if it is not true, by the eternal decree of God it will come to naught, and that if it is true all the powers of earth and hell cannot prevail against it."

MAGISTRATE MEADE PUZZLED.

Sphinx-Like Prisoner Arraigned Before Him with No Complaining Policeman.

Motley, indeed, was the crowd of prisoners that filed in rapid procession yesterday morning before the bar in that forbidding Temple of Themis yclept the Essex Market Police Court, where Magistrate Meade dispensed justice, tempered, whenever possible, with mercy more or less deserved. Many queer characters were arraigned to be sent to jail or about their business, but none presented such a puzzling proposition as a man who was entered on the returns as Isaac Goldstein, charged with vagrancy.

He might have been thirty or fifty years old. His clothing was thin, ragged, and filthy. A stubble of uncertain color deepened the dirtiness of his face on his cheeks, chin, and upper lip. His countenance was serene, his expression mild. "Nor brighter was his eye, nor moister, than a too-long-opened oyster."

"What is your name?" asked the Magistrate.

The prisoner eyed him placidly and returned no answer.

"Can you speak English?" queried the Magistrate.

The man remained mute.

An interpreter was requisitioned and questioned him in Hebrew, French, German, Italian, Spanish, Russian, and with the deaf and dumb alphabet, but the prisoner answered not.

Other interpreters were fetched and put questions to him in all the languages and dialects ever heard on the polyglot east side, but he gazed at them placidly and remained silent.

Magistrate Meade tried Latin, then Greek, then Sanskrit on him, but without effect.

"He must be deaf and dumb," said the Magistrate; "give him a pencil and paper."

The clerk offered them to the man and Magistrate lawyers interpreters clerks, Sergeants, Roundsmen, and patrolmen tried to make him understand by signs and motions that he was required to write. He continued to gaze at the calmly and gave no evidence that he understood that he was the cause of all the fuss. The wrathful policemen shook him until his teeth rattled. He offered no resistance and preserved his impassivity. He did not so much as blink. The audience waxed as excited as the police.

"Where is the policeman who arrested him?" demanded Magistrate Meade, in despair.

No one responded.

On the returns the complainant was given as Policeman John Lang of the Eldridge Street Station, but he was not in court.

This man was the last prisoner on the list. He had been kept in a cell below waiting for some policeman to claim him, and when none appeared had been quietly placed in the pen.

"Well!" exclaimed the Magistrate, rubbing his nose with his finger in perplexity, "of all the cases ——! I will remand the prisoner until to-morrow, when I hope the police will be able to throw some light on the mystery."

The explanation of the enigma was given later at the Eldridge Street Station. It appears that the man has been a familiar character in the neighborhood of Canal Street for about a year. He is not known to have either home or friends. Policeman Lang arrested him in August last on the charge of vagrancy. He was a mute and indifferent man, the same as yesterday, but by dint of shaking at the police station he was made to say that his name was Isaac Goldstein. He was sent to an insane asylum, but was liberated at the end of three months.

Lang found him early yesterday morning shivering and exhausted on Forsyth Street and decided out of charity to arrest him. He was, however, called upon to arrest a man accused of burglary, and meeting Policeman Hoefling of the same precinct going to the station, asked him to take Goldstein along and put the arrest down to him. (Lang. This Hoefling did, but Lang was not informed that the prisoner had been taken to court, and therefore did not appear.

DEATH IN A BARROOM FIGHT.

Hotel Keeper of Long Island City Arrested While Bringing His Victim's Body to Manhattan.

Edward R. Hamilton, known by his associates as "Punch" Hamilton, a colored man, twenty-five years old, was shot and instantly killed at 1:30 o'clock yesterday morning in the barroom at the rear of the Owl Hotel, at 45 Borden Avenue, Long Island City, by Ferdinand Baer, the proprietor of the place. Self-defense is alleged by Baer and several witnesses of the shooting.

A peculiar feature was added to the affair by an attempt by Baer, Joseph McNally, one of his barkeepers, and Samuel Crooks of 80 Borden Avenue to convey the body to Manhattan in a hired cab. Their ostensible purpose was to take Hamilton to Bellevue Hospital for medical attention, but the police believe their real intent was to drop the body on some street in this borough in the endeavor to mislead the authorities. It was while waiting for a Thirty-fourth Street ferryboat on the Long Island City side early yesterday morning that the cabman, Charles McDermitt, who had been engaged by Baer in front of the Murray Hill Lyceum, to take "a sick friend" to Bellevue, discovered that the "sick friend" in his cab was a corpse. He immediately notified Patrolman Graham, who was on duty at the ferry entrance, and the three men and McDermitt, with the corpse, were taken to the Seventy-fifth Precinct Police Station. Other witnesses, including the employes of Baer, were arrested later.

Coroner Guy of Queens Borough, after investigating the case, held Baer on the charge of murder, and McNally and Crooks for manslaughter, holding them as accessories because of their being in the carriage with the body when it was discovered by McDermitt. According to the witnesses examined by the Coroner, the shooting was the result of a general fight which began in an attempt to eject from the hotel Martin Boyd, a young colored man, of 21 Prince Street, Flushing. Boyd, according to Baer's story, entered his place as he was about to close up, demanding drinks and acting in a generally disorderly manner. As Boyd was about to be put out, after considerable scuffling with McNally, the bartender, Hamilton, who had been sitting at a table, took a hand in Boyd's defence. It was then that Baer entered the fight. Hamilton turned upon Baer, drawing a knife, it is alleged, and slashing desperately at the proprietor. Forced into a corner of his room, Baer, according to his story, drew his revolver, and, after warning the colored man, fired. The bullet pierced Hamilton's right lung and lodged against the spinal column, causing instant death.

Boyd, Tony Geswaide, a bootblack in Baer's hotel, and Flora Hennessey, the wife of a bartender who is ill at the hotel, were held as witnesses by the Seventy-fifth Precinct Police. It is said that Hamilton was at one time a boarder at the Owl Hotel.

Hamilton lived with his wife and three children at 237 West Sixty-first Street, Manhattan. For the last five months he had been employed in a dance hall in Long Island City. It was his custom to leave home about 6 o'clock each evening, returning about 2 o'clock in the morning. About 8 o'clock yesterday morning his wife was notified of the tragedy. She endeavored to have the body brought to her home yesterday, but was unable to obtain the necessary permit.

COURT CASES TRANSFERRED.

Action by Presiding Justices of Appellate Division Departments.

The Presiding Justices of the four departments of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court have signed an order, which will be officially published to-day, transferring seventy-four cases from the First Department to the Second Department. This is in accordance with the custom established by the Appellate Division of transferring cases from the First Department, where there is a great deal more business than in any other department, at the end of each year.

The order is signed by all the Presiding Justices, namely, C. H. Van Brunt, First Department; W. W. Goodrich, Second Department; Charles E. Parker, Third Department, and George A. Hardin, Fourth Department.

The cases named in the list are those numbered 76 to 150, inclusive, on the December calendar. Nos. 81 and 146 being omitted, and one, especially numbered 76½, being included. The list, with the numbers as given in the December calendar, is as follows:

76—Ernest Saunier vs. Edward A. Barnum. 79½—Lois H. Gedn vs. William M. Little. 77—Isaac Sidgerwald vs. Manhattan Railway. 78—Bank of the State of New York vs. Southern National Bank. 79—Frank La Manna et al. vs. John Munroe et al. 80—Brayton Ives vs. Gilbert L. Bliss. 82—Patrick Ramsey vs. National Construction Company. 83—Oscar F. Williams vs

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Wherever Wall Street men met yesterday there was much speculation as to what would or might develop in to-day's stock market. The shake-up at the close of last week has prepared most observers to expect some further disturbance of values, and even they who are confidently bullish—relying on the phenomenal business activity showing in every quarter—will be little surprised if to-day's opening discloses more weakness. It can be depended upon that the bear contingent will be amply in evidence, ready to press aggressively advantages they have lately been able to gain.

The industrial stocks, especially Sugar Trust, will be bear targets. It has been a long time since opportunities like those of the present have offered for a Sugar Trust bear campaign. Trade conditions are bearish, litigation possibilities are bearish, and apparently insiders are bearish, too. A new opposition, with most of the outside independent properties solidified under the control of a financier and practical refiner whose whole business life has been in the field that the Sugar Trust occupies, is a matter with more consequence than has attached to any trade development since Mr. Havemeyer and Mr. Matthiesen joined together in the trust's establishment. All this professional Wall Street is likely to make much of, and at the opening of to-day's market it will be strange if there is not energetic endeavor to make such a showing as will influence liquidation, and it will be equally strange if there is any inside support, for there has been none lately.

Metropolitan Street Railway and Brooklyn Rapid Transit may also be especial objects of attack. In Metropolitan a new pool to take stock was, however, formed after the close of business on Saturday.

In Brooklyn Rapid Transit the new bear "point" is that the company is increasing its bonded debt, it being officially announced that $5,000,000 of a seven-million-dollar 4 per cent. issue has been placed. There has, however, been no attempt at mystery over the matter, for there was need for no mystery. This bond issue is not a newly arranged affair. The reorganization of the Kings County Elevated Railroad required it, and the fact that the bonds were to be put out was known long ago. The additional $2,000,000 authorized will be used for improvements, extensions, or other betterment of the property. And the interest that the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company assumes ($200,000 per year on the $5,000,000 already disposed of) is regarded by the property's managers as an advantageous investment.

What seems curious about the abundance of bear "points" on Brooklyn Rapid Transit just now is the fact that much of the adverse ammunition comes from sources that were extremely bullish on the stock when it was 25 points higher. Some of these authorities have even been classed as insiders; and it is not too cynical to suspect that they now are energetic to induce a break only to be able to buy back stock sold at higher figures. It is difficult to believe such people sincere in predicting that the stock is on its way below $50 per share. Still, consistency has not yet been cornered in Wall Street.

Money market conditions are in a situation where they may be easily influenced. Firm rates may be necessary to prevent a gold export movement, say some bankers of importance, though just why there can be worry over the possible sale of a quantity of our surplus gold abroad is hard to understand.

THE BANK OF ENGLAND RATE AND OUR EXCHANGES.

[FROM A SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.]

Last week's advance of the Bank of England's rate of discount has had little effect here. Our bankers who deal largely in international exchange have not regarded it as a matter of serious significance. It is unusual, but the circumstances are unusual, and the move was not made at a time of financial uneasiness, but of general confidence, notwithstanding the vexatious war which Great Britain has on her hands. The general industrial and commercial activity on both sides of the Atlantic would make money rates high in any case; but the stoppage of the Transvaal gold supply and the simultaneous drain for war purposes make it necessary for the Bank of England to take special means for husbanding its coin as the end of the year approaches and domestic demands also become pressing.

The raising of the rate is regarded as a precautionary measure. There was no special reason to apprehend that New York would begin to draw upon the bank's stock of gold, but there has been some slight outward movement in other directions, and doubtless the home pressure began to be felt, and discounts had to be curtailed. The natural effect was a slight advance in exchange here, but the rates were already well above the point that would afford a profit to the importation of gold and had been kept firm. The fact is that New York had no special reason for drawing gold from London, while London had good reason for holding it at home.

Much is sometimes made of our continuing trade balance and the heavy credits which we must be running up abroad; but the bankers make little account of this as a factor. While the statistics appear to show that we are continually exporting something like $20,000,000 a month in commodities in excess of what we are importing, there are considerable deductions to be made from the figures. The statistics of imports are uncertain, on account of undervaluations abroad, while most of the land and ocean freight charges go to foreign account, and our people are constantly spending money in Europe or sending it there for one reason or another, to a much greater extent than foreign money comes here.

If we could get the commercial balance down in figures to what it really is, it would look much smaller, but there are many ways of dealing with it besides sending gold here to pay it off, and there is really scarcely any relation between the gold movement and the balance of trade. A great volume of American securities has been held abroad for years, and the movement of these, or the transfer of them back and forth in book accounts, is constantly going on in unrecorded and uncalculated amounts. The process is invisible and the exact effect cannot be measured, but it helps to adjust the balance of trade. It is known that many of these securities have come home in the last year or two, but it is believed that there are still many to come at need. It is a mere question of profit and advantage, whether gold shall be sent or not at any time.

Besides, those millions of merchandise values in the "balance of trade," are a bagatelle compared with the credit operations that are all the time going on between this country and Europe. There may be much money due us in London or any other capital, but it will be left there if sufficient inducement is offered. It may be loaned there if it is made more profitable than bringing it over here. In the great operations of organizing and reorganizing railroad and industrial corporations, in the issue and transfer and underwriting of securities, foreign capital and foreign credit are employed to an extent of which few people have any conception, so that above the movements of trade in the exchange of commodities there is a much larger movement of finance which makes and erases balances of which our bureaus of statistics take no account.

In these complex operations of trade and finance no man can trace the ever-shifting balance, but it is certain that gold payments are made to or by one or another only when the advantage lies therein. Just now London, as the money centre of Great Britain and the exchange focus of international trade, is more in need of gold than New York or any Continental capital, and the Bank of England is taking measures to hold what it has and to attract more if a 6 per cent. rate for money will do it. It is not due to disturbance or apprehension, and there is no reason why it should cause disturbance or apprehension, and on this side of the water certainly it is causing none.

THE NEW B. R. T. BONDS.

Wall Street was troubled last week by a variety of rumors to the effect that a large issue of new bonds had been made or was in contemplation by the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company. As a result during the week the stock of the company was under pressure and declined some five points; and by way of explanation for this weakness the stories of the new bond issues were paraded.

Discussing the matter, President Rossiter of the company said to a representative of THE NEW YORK TIMES that no bonds had been issued except in connection with the reorganization of the Kings County system.

At the office of Sheehan & Collin, counsel for the company, it was said that $7,000,000 in bonds had been provided for under the plan of reorganization, but that only $5,000,000 had been issued—the first delivery having been made to the Guaranty Trust Company two weeks ago. The other two million, it was explained, is left in the treasury for betterments, improvements, change of motive power, &c. The bonds are payable in 1949 and bear interest at the rate of 4 per cent., semi-annually. The mortgage securing the bonds constitutes a first lien on the property and franchises of the company.

A gentleman familiar with the affairs of the company, discussing the new bond issue, says:

"The bonds seem to be selling at a very low price, presumably because of the pressure upon the market of small holdings just put out under the plan of reorganization. The bonds are a first mortgage on the entire old Kings County and Fulton Elevated Railway system, comprising an issue of $5,000,000, and they are also an important integral part of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system. They offer a very good chance for investment."

The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company now begins to assume payment of interest on this new issue—$200,000 a year.

IRON TRADE PROSPERITY.

Talking of the excellent conditions in the iron business, Mr. Moses Lyman of Lakeville, Conn., a Director of the Richmond Iron Works of that place, with furnaces in Massachusetts, says:

"Actually, it is hard to express in words the great activity in our line. Though we have started up many new furnaces, with all of them now in full operation, we are rushed to fill our orders—have been obliged, indeed, to refuse orders. Every pound of iron that we had lying on our hands not so many months ago has been cleared up. And what is true of us is true of the Salisbury iron men in our district, with whom I have business connections and who tell me that they have all the work they can handle.

"One striking point in this connection is that, whereas six months ago some of us had an idea that the prosperity would not continue or would at best be comparatively brief, now we feel that it will last a long time, particularly as the great foreign markets are opening to us.

"And it is in this foreign demand, by the way, that relief from overproduction here—if there should be such—will be found."

MORE EQUIPMENT.

Among the orders for new equipment made by various railroad companies last week are the following:

Georgia and Alabama, 300 flat cars;
